David felt a desire to know her a little better, to hear her views and then dismiss them successfully. He had still 15 minutes to spare. He began to think she was very pretty.

"Have you ever been on a paper?"

"No, although I've written a great deal," she said while watching him intently. "I thought I might get something to do regularly—some position. I know I'd succeed. I wish you'd try me."

"No, I can't," he said almost brusquely, "and I hope you'll change your mind and try something else. Besides I haven't anything I could offer you, nothing a woman could do—much too difficult. You take my advice and try something else."

"I think I know what you mean," and she stood up. "You think this work hardly feminine"—

He nodded. She looked disappointed, but unconvinced.

"Aren't you're afraid of encouraging incompetence?"

"Oh, no, really, I"—

"Yes, I think you are. Well, I'll tell you just the way I feel about it. I must be a journalist"—

"Why must you?"

"Because I know I'm fitted for it, and the life attracts me. I might have preferred to be a painter or a musician, but we are not allowed to select our talents." She smiled and moved a step away. "If you can't employ me, there's nothing more to be said about it, and I'm sorry having detained you. But—somebody else will employ me. I've only been in New York a month, and you're the first editor I've seen. This will explain why Dr. Ericsson suggested my coming to you. I showed it to him."

She drew a letter from her pocket and handed it to David. He was surprised to see the heading of "The Citizen" on the sheet, his own handwriting beneath it. It was written to a man named Robert Heron and directed to a small Rhode Island town.

"You know Heron?" he asked quickly.

"Yes. You like his work, it seems."

"Very much," he said in a mystified voice. "I don't as a rule seek 'specials' outside, but his were so trenchant, so brilliantly phrased, so exactly what we wanted, I couldn't help, you see, writing to ask the cause of his long silence. Most of his work of whatever sort has commanded attention here. Now, there's a man," said David enthusiastically and in the final tone which closes an argument, "I sometimes wish had the ambition and spirit of the woman of today. He's wasting his time in a small place doing desultory work, a dreamer I dare say, an idler too. We need men like him here. I wish you'd tell him so," he smiled.

Anne's eyes were perversely girlish as she said simply:

"I'm Robert Heron, Mr. Temple."

CHAPTER II.

The advent of a woman in the editorial rooms of The Citizen was no longer the latest topic there. Anne had been one of the staff for a fortnight.

She had gone with a reputation already made, which she must continue to sustain. Every nerve had been strained to do this, and she had succeeded. All other impressions had been lost sight of in this one purpose. The rush and pressure of life around her, the strange scenes and faces, the new routine, seemed the fabric of a dream world where she was the intensely vital figure.

Although her working hours were short, the continued effort and oppressive heat had given her face a wan touch. But she felt no fatigue. On the contrary she was aware of the satisfaction arising from fulfillment. This niche in the dusty, metallic world where a great newspaper was made was the only thing she had craved. To prove herself worthy its possession was the single aim of her life. David Temple had hesitated to engage her because she was a woman. He had told her she would soon weary. She must prove his prophecy false. This was the impetus that made her bold. The result was gratifying.

Matters of social and moral importance started out vividly during the terrible summer weather. The handling of some of these was assigned to Anne. It would seem that David Temple had decided to take her cruelly at her word and treat her as a man or as if he had wished to force an evidence of affright or weakness from her. He was mistaken. Anne was a soldier's daughter. Best of all, she was confident of her right to be there. Robert Heron had never done better work than came from her pen during that fortnight.

When she had defended her position and won, there came a lull, and without seeming to watch she absorbed a knowledge of the people around her and noticed what events and colorings go to make up existence in a newspaper office.

There was the sentimental reporter, who furtively read and reread feminine looking letters and sighed over stock reports; the silent man with the scarred face, who smoked strong cigars; the society editor, whose smile was as well oiled as his russet boots; the baby faced reporter, who betted on everything and "matched" on the smallest provocation; the fretful critic with the perpetual cold in the head, who banged the door as if to insinuate his exit was final, and who always returned in a rush for something forgotten; the artist lounging with an exalted look to his feet, who drew inspiration from Egyptian cigarettes; Pete, the office boy, with terrible worldly knowledge in his pale eyes and the savoir faire of a veteran clubman in his manner, who grew confidential with her and tried to interest her in the intricacies of baseball, and David Temple, the editor in chief, who, unlike many of his compeers, worked hard, bringing with him an assurance of well bred ease and a capability for exertion and endurance.

He looked at Anne with some surprise.

Her surroundings were so strange that Anne often wondered if it were indeed she who was there, the lonely girl who in the well stocked library of a silent country house had written most of the "specials" which had commanded attention.

While the clatter of the presses and the unaccustomed tread of life were in her ears she would close her eyes and summon a vision of a different scene and time: A hollow at the foot of a hill where a great pool lay and willow branches like green lengths of disheveled hair trailed in the water; a girl, herself, the Anne Garrick who was dead never to rise again, lying at full length under the trees, her cheek upon an open book, the fragrance of a lost land around her, the whir of unseen wings, the fireflies in the black gloom under the cedars, or flas : like uneasy eyes from the confusion of ripe grass, the sound of water pushing its way through twisted weeds with a coquettish whimper like silk rubbed on silk.

Some snatch of a street song, the exciting news of the last murder or the clangor of Trinity's bell would frighten these imaginings, and despite her pagan love of nature she would return to work, happy that the old life of solitude and reverie was over.

David talked to her very little and never about anything save work. She watched him and found him curiously interesting. Other men were more or less of a familiar type, but David Temple was individual. A nascent force marked his lightest action. To be near him was like coming within the radius of a powerful electric current.

She had always liked clean shaved men. They seemed a degree farther from the idea of the ancestral monkey than their bewhiskered brothers. David was clean shaved, spare of flesh, strongly built. There was unity in his simple name, stern face, searching gray eyes and the practical surroundings in which he worked. Back of his desk the bound volumes of The Citizen for a generation were somberly heaped. Electric wires and buildings of granite were visible beyond the window near which he sat. The man and his mission were melodic.

Anne was slowly drawing on her gloves one evening when the reporter with the scarred face laid down his cigar and asked a question of nobody in particular.

"Any of you fellows know where Donald Sefain has hidden himself this time?"

The name attracted her, and she found herself waiting for the reply.

"O Lord, it's too warm to think of Sefain's vagaries! He's probably trying tenement house life again with some of his slum friends while a penny remains. When he's broke, he'll come back and work for another spurt," the society editor replied with fine unconcern.

"Fool! Flinging himself away! He won't last long."

"D'you know what I'd do if I were in Temple's place and had such a precious bundle of shiftlessness, unconcern and surliness for a so called brother"—

"H'm! There isn't much doubt about what you'd do."

"Kick him out." And the society editor fingered his imperial tenderly.

"I think he hates Temple more every day," said Jack Braidley, the reporter who "matched." "He's an idea he's one too many in the world, I fancy."

The words were hardly spoken when the door opened and a man came in. From the hush greeting his entrance Anne knew it was Donald Sefain. She looked at him attentively.

There were unmistakable marks of vagabondism about him—his dusty clothes, churlish manner, long, untidy hair. He was of moderate height and slender build, he carried his shoulders poorly and his eyes were sunken. But for all this his dark, foreign face, sneering, secretive, defiant, was startlingly handsome as he stood in the red, wash tones of the sunset pouring through the dusty windows.

He looked at Anne with some surprise in his glance, his expression questioning; then he became indifferent, nodded curtly to the men and sat down at a corner desk. From his attitude one would have supposed he was sketching or writing. As she passed him to the door she saw his fingers were motionless, his wide open eyes introspective.

While the room contained a dozen men it was evident Donald Sefain would be left alone with his musings. He had withdrawn from the others as if from habit. Even before she had passed into the hall they seemed to have forgotten his existence.

CHAPTER III.

Three miles lay between the offices of The Citizen and the trio of rooms Anne had rented and furnished during the six weeks of her residence in New York. They were in a low, red brick house divided from the street by a patch of grass and iron palings. The neighborhood had Washington square for its nucleus, the only part of the money making town preserving the mossy tone of Knickerbocker days, where occasional low doorsteps and spindle legged banisters keep the costumes and manners of the century's infancy clear in the memory.

Anne loved the queer street, the venerable church opposite, with its unfashionable parishioners and sweet tongued bell, the amethyst light stealing across the landscape of roofs, the fret of trains flashing past in aerial passage not far off and leaving a plume of vapor behind, the passing of many people along the pavements reaching into smoky perspective.

These impressions were a ripening contact, helping to wake her to newer perceptions of life, making her realize that she stood unsupported in a crowded, struggling place.

She had the exhilarating sensations of a daring and capable swimmer who plunges into deep water where only his own skill can keep him afloat.

Her eyes were shining, her color high, as she hurried up the narrow stairway and entered the sitting room. An old man was standing by one of the windows and turned expectantly as she came in. It was Dr. Ericsson. He looked at her with cool, friendly scrutiny.

"I've been waiting for you again. There's something witching about you, Anne," he said helplessly. "You've quite spoiled me for solitude. Every dinner I have away from you is like sawdust."

Anne laid her arm lightly around his shoulder. She was a little the taller. There was something charmingly audacious in her young face and protecting attitude contrasted with his gray hair and sixty odd years. She had the impetuosity and assurance of a fresh runner who fears nothing on the long, mysterious race just begun. He had the half defeated expression of one approaching with lagging steps the end and who thinks little even of the winning of that race which nevertheless must be run in one fashion or another.

"I never knew a man so eager for compliments," she said, her lips curling in playful scorn. "Shall I fib and say every meal is lonely without you? Not a bit of it. I come home so hungry, uncle, dear, and the man at the corner sends in such good chops. I put on a blouse and dream over my coffee, while Nora in the kitchen sings Irish melodies in an adorable voice and with a creamlike brogue."

She laid her finger under his chin and looked into his eyes.

"But when you do come, you dear, cynical creature, I shelve dreams gladly and don't care a pin for Nora's songs. Satisfied?"

She hurried away to change her gown, and Dr. Ericsson was left alone in the dusk. He listened in a dreamy way to the maid crossing and recrossing the rug covered floor, his arms hung by his sides, his eyes were fastened on a trail of smoke diminishing in the sunset.

Thirty years before, then a young Swede newly arrived in America for a bout with fortune, he had married the sister of Anne's mother. They had settled in New York, and by degrees he became successful and rich. His wife was a beauty, his children's future bright, and life went well. But trouble came. His children, with the exception of Olga, the youngest, died during schooldays, his fortune intrusted to false friends went to help their speculations and was lost. Now, in old age, he was a physician of reputation, but poor, possessing a fashionably inclined wife, whose weekly letters from Paris, where she had elected to live when Olga's schooldays in Switzerland were over, were wearying longings for the vanished wealth. His daughter was almost a stranger to him. She had gone away a child, she was now a woman of 20. What sort of a woman, evolved by her mother's worldliness and a false system of education, he hesitated to consider. His life was spent in the depleted family mansion on Waverly place with one old servant, amid furniture masked in gray holland and portraits of his lost children blinking through gauze sheetings. Only his patients and friends had prevented him from becoming like the piano in the corner, which had almost forgotten how to vibrate.

But he knew what a home might be since Anne came to New York. He was

His Revenge.

A writer tells the following story of schoolboy coolness and pluck, and states that it is founded on fact. "You're a coward!" A sentence calculated to make any English schoolboy clench his fists and promptly endeavor to make his accuser prove or eat his words. "Yes, of course you are, or you wouldn't told that you were one of the party that upset old Mother Tuck's cart;" and Dan Isaacs, the bully of the school, scowled at the delicate-looking, slim lad, who stood quietly, if nervously, before him in the cricket ground.

"Perhaps I am," was the reply, "but then I did not pocket any of the old woman's apples afterwards," and Dicky Ford grew bolder as he went on: "No, a spree is one thing, but to rob a poor apple woman is very different."

"I'll knock your young head off, if you say that again," roared Dan, crimson with rage and the knowledge of his meanness, which he thought had not been seen by any of the other boys.

But Dicky, lighter of foot than his persecutor, had scudded off to the other end of the field.

Presently there was a noise of men and women shouting and screaming in the road close by, and every boy ran to the low wall that bounded the cricket field. Down the road at a terrific pace came a mad bull, followed by scores of men and boys at a respectful distance.

The sight of the boys on the wall attracted its attention, and with a bellow it turned on them, tearing headlong at the wall with a mad bound. Of course, the boys scattered in all directions as the animal half fell, half cleared the wall, and then scrambling to its feet, stood for a second before charging the fleeing crowd.

Nobody in the hurry had noticed that Dan Isaacs had sprained his ankle as he jumped from the wall, and was trying painfully to escape the notice of the bull by crawling into the shelter of the little clump of trees in the corner of the cricket ground.

Suddenly, the furious beast caught sight of him, and with a fierce bellow turned on him. Poor Dan, nearly dead with fright and pain, just managed to elude the mad rush by the aid of a friendly tree, but a few minutes of dodging tired him out, and he screamed for help, while the men and boys [illegible] gest any means of diverting the bull's attention.

[illegible] their breath in fright, as little Dickie, with a shout, burst to the front, dribbling before him a football right up to the bull.

"Come back, come back!" they cried, "you'll be killed!"

But Dicky was no coward now. With a firm kick he sent the ball slap in the face of the bull as he was on the point of tossing the now fagged-out Dan.

Staggered by the sudden sting of the ball the beast in its blind rage turned to follow the football as it rebounded from its head, seeing in it a new enemy, and, butting at it fiercely, was soon at the other end of the field, while the boys helped the badly frightened Dan over the wall and hurried over themselves as two men with rifles made their appearance.

Stopping for a while to take breath the bull glared around him as if uncertain what to do next. He had not much time for decision, however, as two reports rang out heavily on the air, and the bull fell headlong, rose with a roar of pain and anger, and then, as another shot echoed against the school walls, fell again, with a thud, this time with a bullet through his heart.

"Three cheers for Dicky Ford!" shouted the boys, as they gathered round the dead beast. And they gave them, too, with a will, while Dan, with tears in his eyes, in broken tones begged Dick's pardon for calling him a coward.

"Fancy going for a bull with a football!" they all cried; "why, nobody but Dicky would have thought of such a thing."

"I don't know why I did it," said Dick, blushing at the enthusiastic greetings of the other boys; "but I just thought perhaps a kick at the bull with a football might take his attention away from Dan."

"Hurrah for Dicky Ford!" they all shouted again; and Dicky couldn't help thinking that he had had, after all, his revenge on the boy who called him coward.

CURRENT BASEBALL NEWS IN AND AROUND PLAINFIELD.

Bits of Information and Comment Gleaned From the Great National Game —Latest Scores of the League Teams

It is not any experiment, this arrival of a new base-ball team in Plainfield. The Riverdale boys are here to stay. They have the best of backing behind them and they intend to give Plainfield such baseball as she has never seen before. The team is largely composed of old college men who are popular wherever they go and are bound to be favorites.

The game Saturday will be one of unusual interest. The Montclairs have defeated the Riverdales once and have been defeated once. There is much feeling between the two clubs as to the final result. It was only through the influence of the Riverdale team that the Montclairs consented to come to Plainfield, for they play away from home but seldom. They are coming Saturday, however, and the Plainfield people will see a game worth going miles to see.

The decision about starting in Plainfield this week was made on short notice so that the grounds will not be in the condition that the management will have them in later in the season. They will, however, be in first-class shape and the accommodations will be all that can be wished. One of the features will be the free checking of wheels. The prices will be the same as of old, fifteen cents for admittance and twenty-five cents for the grand-stand.

CYCLING COMMENT.

William H. Rogers, the North avenue wheelman, has an antique Columbia tandem in his show windows that he is trying to find a purchaser for.

Wheelmen who have been out of the city and have accustomed themselves to riding along bicycle paths, have expressed the desire that such a path be puilt somewhere from this city out, some have suggested that a path be built along Park avenue to Metuchen and thence to New Brunswick, and others have mentioned Elizabeth as the destination. A path ten feet wide would be sufficient in the middle of the road, or it might be better to build two paths, half that width, on either side. Thus wheelmen going in one direction would keep on one path while those returning would take the other.

TWO CARS OFF THE TRACK.

Excursionists Had to Hustle to Get to Station in Time.

Shortly before 8 o'clock this morning there was considerable excitement on two Somerset street trolley cars. In a mysterious manner they both jumped the track on Somerset street, and as they were both filled with people, who were going on the Methodist's excursion to Asbury Park, there was some tall guessing as to whether the cars would reach the railroad station on time. Some of the people got off and walked, while the others just managed to get to the station before the excursion train left.

Dr. Peters in Charge.

Rev. Madison C. Peters, D. D., of New York, who had charge of the prayer meeting in the lecture room of the First Presbyterian church, last evening, gave a most excellent exhortation and spiritually fed those present from the text "Now if Any Man Have Not the Spirit of Christ, He is None of His."

songs of the "sunny south." Of course, some of the modern hymns are sung, but they are given in that peculiar way, characteristic of the negro.

Over in one corner stands a refreshment stand. Some enterprising man realized that many of the audience were likely to get thirsty. He has been doing a good trade in soft drinks. It does sound rather incongruous though to sit there listening to the colored preacher's warning admonitions and have the outer silence rudely broken by the sound of popping corks.

THE COUNTY TROLLEY.

Kean's liberal offer.

As for widening the narrow parts in Westfield and Cranford, he said, the land would cost too much. Mr. Bergen said that in ten years the increased valuation would more than counterbalance all the cost attendant on the undertaking. Union county had a bright future before it, he said, if its legislators only took advantage of the opportunity placed before them. The coming of the trolley was inevitable, and the question to be decided was, would the Freeholders accept an offer of $250,000 now for a franchise that before long would be acquired, anyhow, along the same avenue by some trolley syndicate, without making the improvements contemplated in the construction of a fine boulevard from one end of the county to the other? It was for the Freeholders to say whether they would have a road 100 feet wide, with a trolley line running along it, or whether, by rejecting the present offer, to witness in a few years a trolley line running along the same road at its present width of 66 feet, and without the county deriving any benefit from its construction.

At the close of Mr. Bergen's address the Freeholders went into executive session on the subject of awarding the franchise, and had a heated discussion for an hour, when, at 6:30 p. m., they adjourned until next Monday afternoon.

the end had arrived when an interruption came from an unexpected source. Some of the neighbors had seen the men running about the hay wagon. They also heard the yells. Deciding that the duel had continued long enough, they hurried to the scene of action and interfered before Wersing could ply his spear.

Wersing was exceedingly wroth and wanted to be allowed to finish Frazer. Frazer hied himself at once to the top of the nearly-completed load of hay and watched proceedings with a fearful eye. At length he announced his decision of returning home with the load, and remarked that Wersing could have what was left and get it home the best way he could.

The Plainfield Electric Light Company will also make a bid for the work.

WIPING OUT A SLUR.

A Cape Cod Life-Saver Who Proved Himself a Hero.

Circumstances singularly pathetic surrounded the loss which befell the crew of the Peaked Hill station, near Provincetown, Cape Cod. Keeper Atkins, of this station, was one of the true and trusted veterans of the service. But one stormy day in winter, after twelve hours' exposure on the beach, exhausted by futile efforts to launch the surfboat, he and his crew had the mortification of seeing the rescue they had attemped made by a crew of volunteers. It mattered not that these had made no previous exertions, that they come fresh and unwearied upon the scene; Keeper Atkins and his crew had to take from the community what in the staid, old-fashioned speech of the Cape, is known as the "goading slur." The keeper made no attempt to answer his critics; but gradually, as that season and the following summer wore away, a settled look of determination became stamped on his face, and his bearing took on a dignity almost tragic. When, at the opening of the next season, his wife, as he left his home for the station, begged him not to expose himself to needless danger, he replied:

"Before this season is over I will have wiped out the 'goading slur.'"

Reaching his station, he called his crew about him, and informed them that, no matter at what peril, a rescue would be attempted at every wreck within the limits of the station.

That winter a storm of almost unprecedented fury burst over the coast, and a vessel was swept upon the Peaked Hill bars. A surfboat, launched by seemingly superhuman power, put out from shore. But neither desperation nor even madness could keep a boat afloat in such a sea; and when, one after another, those who had braved it were cast upon the beach, three were dead. One of these was Keeper Atkins. He had wiped out the "goading slur."

Of such stuff are the heroes of the life-saving service.—Gustav Kobbe, in Century.

Paper Cartridges Used in the Civil War.

A New London man made an interesting discovery the other day. While rummaging in the garret of his house he picked up an old army knapsack carried by his brother in the federal army in the dark days of '61 to '65. He opened the knapsack and found within quite a number of war time cartridges, which, as all veterans know, are quite different from those now in use. They are paper cartridges, the end of which had to be bitten off by the man in the ranks before loading his musket. A Day reporter showed the cartridges to several army veterans, and their eyes blazed at the sight. They acted like they had just been introduced to an old friend whom they had not seen for many years. One of the ex-soldiers said the commands for loading in the days of the war were as follows:

"Handle cartridge, tear cartridge, charge cartridge, draw rammer, ram cartridge, return rammer, prime, ready, aim, fire." At present the order is: "Load, ready, aim, fire." The paper shell is a thing of the long ago and the brass shell has taken its place, but it makes and old vet feel young again to get his hands on one of those old-timers, though as a rule the teeth of the G. A. R. man would hardly stand biting the paper end off these late days. —New London Day

Section 18. That the second paragraph of Section 36 of said ordinance be and the same is hereby stricken out and the following substituted in place thereof:

Where hot-air pipes are placed in stud partitions, the sides of the studs are to be lined with metal, with suitable air space left between the studs and the metal, and the metal and the pipes.

Section 19. That the following paragraph be and the same is hereby added to Section 39 of said ordinance:

No work of the character described in this section shall be covered until the Inspector of Buildings shall have duly inspected and approved the same.

Section 20. That the following section be and the same hereby is added to said ordinance, and numbered Section 45:

Section 21. That the section of said ordinance now numbered and known as Section 45 be and the same shall henceforth be numbered and known as Section 46.

Spain Has Asked France to Notify Him that Spain Accepts McKinley's Terms—Formal Orders Will Arrive Today.

(From the Union Associated Press.)

Washington, August 12, 1:30 p. m.—The peace protocol had not been signed previous to the meeting of the cabinet this morning, but it is expected that it will be signed sometime today, probably this afternoon. The French Ambassador up till 11:30 o'clock this morning had not received any authorization to sign the protocol, though aware that such authority was en route from Madrid. There seems to be no doubt entertained at the French embassy that the formal execution of the preliminary peace agreement will take place during the day.

Madrid, August 12, 12:15 p. m.—The Spanish government this morning notified the French ambassador of the release of its acceptance of the protocol, and asking that the French government transmit to Ambassador Cambon at Washington such power as in conformity with President McKinley's formulated desire will authorize him, as ambassador of France at Washington, to sign the protocol.

BASEBALL TOMORROW.

RIVERDALES AND MONTCLAIR WILL PLAY DECIDING GAME HERE.

The Riverdale Field Club is Going to Make Plainfield its Permanent Home—Great Preparations for Opening Game.

Tomorrow afternoon will see the resumption of baseball in this city. At the Crescent Oval, the Riverdale Field Club and the Montclair Athletic Club will meet and play the deciding game of a series of three. The Montclair boys won the first, and the Riverdale's the second. Now the third is to be played on neutral ground. Both teams are composed of some of the best players, mostly old college men, in the metropolitan district. The rivalry between the two teams runs high, and there will be a close game with lots of exciting features. Neither side will give in until the very last man is out, and some sensational playing may be looked for.

It is not necessary to give anything of the records of either team. They are both too well-known to need any introduction to the Plainfield public. As the Riverdale team is to make its home at the Crescent Oval, hereafter, it will be considered the home team and will probably receive the attention of the local rooters. The Riverdale players are a gentlemanly lot and are sure to be very popular with the fair spectators in particular.

The diamond is being put in good condition for the game and the stands will be in excellent condition. Everything will be done, in fact, to give the spectators all they can wish for in the matter of accomodations and good ball playing. Wheels will be checked free of charge at the grounds. The regular prices will prevail for admittance and grand-stand seats.

The Montclair Athletic Club has a bicycle run to this city tomorrow afternoon, and a number of members with their fair friends will ride over to see the game. Then there will be a crowd of rooters from Montclair who will come over with the team on the train. Some of the followers of the Riverdale Field Club will also turn out to see the game.

It is the intention of the management that the grounds will be kept in perfect order. No disturbances of any kind will be allowed. Nobody objects in the slightest to applause and legitimate "rooting," but there will be no disturbing of the grand stand by unseemly yelling at the players. The place will be such that the ladies can be brought without the slightest fear of their being offended by any disorder. In fact, the management is particularly anxious to have the ladies there, and will make every provision possible for their welfare while at the game.

The batting order of the two teams will be as follows:

RIVERDALE F. C.	MONTCLAIR A. C.
Reinacker, ss.,	Wheeler, 2b.,
Easton, lf.,	Wood, 1b.,
F. Smith, 2b.,	Cadmus, 3b.,

FRANCHISE FOR KEAN.

IT IS SAID THAT FREEHOLDERS WILL ACCEPT HIS OFFER.

It is Said That an Informal Ballot Was Taken Wednesday and the Sentiment Was Favorable to Accepting It.

(Special to The Daily Press.)

Elizabeth, August 12.—The franchise for the construction of a trolley line from Elizabeth to Plainfield will now, it is declared by those who say they know what is going on, be awarded to John Kean Monday by the Board of Freeholders.

It is said that an informal ballot was taken at the executive session of the Board Wednesday, and that it showed the prevailing sentiment in the Board to be favorable to accepting Mr. Kean's offer.

The adjournment was taken, it is said, to give those Freeholders who were in doubt as to how they should vote a chance to consult with their constituents and find out how they stand on the question.

Lawyer Frank Bergen, the originator of the trolley boulevard scheme, said to a reporter that the Board would undoubtedly accept Mr. Kean's proposition, as it was the only generous bid made for the franchise. Mr. Bergen said also that there was not the slightest doubt that the work could be completed for the sum Mr. Kean had offered to pay for the franchise.

American Sunday to be His Subject.

Secretary J. Harry Manning, of the Y. M. C. A., has received word from Dr. Carlos Martyn, of New York, that he will speak on the "American Sunday" at the 4:15 o'clock meeting at the Y. M. C. A. Sunday afternoon. The talk promises to be an interesting one as Dr. Martyn will probably handle the subject from all sides.

DEMOCRATS MAY TROT OUT A DARK HORSE.

Discussing Candidates for the Gubernatorial Nomination.

MAY BE JOHN P. STOCKTON.

HE IS AS VIGOROUS, MENTALLY AND PHYSICALLY, AS EVER.

Although a Number of Names Have Been Mentioned for the Nomination There is No Certain Movement for any Particular Democrat as Yet—James J. Bergen Mentioned Among the Possibilities.

(Special to The Daily Press.)

Trenton, N. J., August 12.—The Democrats are all at sea over a Gubernatorial candidate, and there is no political prophet who can truly predict at the present time who will be the choice of their State Convention. A prominent Democrat and a former State officeholder, who is sojourning at Elberon, said the other day that the name of the nominee had not yet been discussed in public. Although nearly a score of well-known Democrats are being talked of in connection with the nomination yet the name of the coming man, it seems, is not found among them.

While General Donnelly has a host of admirers, yet some of the practical politicians do not take kindly to him. Mayor Seymour, of Newark, is yet being pushed by his friends, although it is understood that he does not desire to be a candidate. The irrepressible Senator Daly has numerous friends who will stand by him in storm as well as in sunshine, and there is yet a hope felt that Benjamin F. Lee may be prevailed upon to permit the use of his name. Then there are General Plume, Colonel Campbell, Senator Braun and others who are kept in the foreground. But still, it seems, this array of apparently available timber must give way to a dark horse whose name is known only by the few who are rusticating on the New Jersey coast.

Speculation is rife as to this dark horse. Some people venture the prediction that he is none other than the gifted John P. Stockton, whose popularity among New Jersey Democrats has never been on the wane. It is stated in his behalf that he is the only safe man to nominate, because of his integrity, ability, eloquence and lifelong fealty to his party. In answer to any objection which might be urged against him, owing to his age, it is insisted that he is now just as vigorous, mentally and physically, as he was a score of years ago, when he took an active part in politics, and when he was one of the popular leaders of his party. He has just reached the age of 72 years, and yet he is practicing law in Jersey City just as actively as some men in his profession who are many years his junior.

Every Jerseyman knows Mr. Stockton, and he is held in high esteem by the members of all political parties. Forty years ago he represented his country as Minister to Rome, and subsequently he served as United States Senator for a term of six years, and until he was succeeded by the late Theodore F. Randolph. For a period of twenty years he filled the office of Attorney General. It is argued in his behalf that despite all the temptations of public life which beset him, he is yet a poor man, going to show that his honesty and integrity are above suspicion. He is considered just the man who could match on the stump Voorhees, Pitney or any other campaigner whom the Republicans may nominate.

Is John P. Stockton the man, then, whose name has not as yet been prominently brought to the fore in connection with the Democratic nomination? Is he the dark horse who will be sprung upon the Democratic convention, and the mention of whose name is depended upon to arouse the Democratic masses to a high pitch of enthusiasm? Perhaps he is. Most certainly the campaign would be unusually interesting, with Stockton as the Democratic candidate, and Voorhees, the Republican, as the eloquence and popularity of both men are above the ordinary. With these gladiators on the stump every inch of ground would be contested, and the issues of the campaign would be clearly and thoroughly discussed.

The names of Judge Charles E. Hendrickson and former Speaker James J. Bergen are recent additions to the array of Democratic gubernatorial talent. Former Senator George O. Vanderbilt says Judge Hendrickson would make an ideal candidate, as he has elements of strength not possessed by others. G. D. W. Vroom believes that the nomination of Mr. Bergen would be wise because he would unite his party and make a vigorous campaign. There is a feeling, however, among leading Democrats that John P. Stockton is the strongest man in his party and that he will be surely nominated provided he, himself, does not object.

FREED FROM THE JAIL.

THE JACKSONS AND THEIR FRIENDS ONCE MORE AT LIBERTY.

Lawyer Clark Secures Their Release on Habeas Corpus Proceedings, Judge Bartine Agreeing With the Contention.

(Special to The Daily Press.)

Somerville, August 12—Seven dusky prisoners filed out of the Somerset county jail in this place this morning. Great gleams of joy broadened their faces and they looked happy, indeed. Over they marched to the courthouse, where Judge Bartine told them they were free. Then their unbounded joy broke forth. Instead of the prospect of over two months in jail staring them in the face, they were free to return home, which they did by the next train.

On the night of July 28th, the marshals of North Plainfield raided the home of Mrs. Rosie Jackson, a spacious colored woman who has frequently figured in the police court. They charged her with keeping a disorderly house, and charged six other colored people with being there and being disorderly. They were her daughter, illustrious Maggie Belle Jackson, Adelaine Cuff, Clara Babbitt, Mary Lynn, Andrew Oby and William Johnson.

July 29th, Recorder Long, of North Plainfield, sent them all to the county jail for ninety days for a breech of the eleventh section of the borough act, revision of 1897. Since then Lawyers Robert M. Clark and William G. DeMeza were associated in an attempt to liberate the prisonors.

Tuesday Lawyer Clark appeared before Judge Bartine in this city and asked for two writs of habeas corpus, which were allowed and made returnable this morning at 10 o'clock. One was for Mrs. Jackson and the other for the rest of the party.

The grounds for the writ were that the eleventh section gave the borough recorder no right to commit but simply a limitation on the powers of the Borough Council to pass an ordinance for the punishment of disorderly persons. The second and sixth sections of the peace and good morals ordinance of the borough of North Plainfield only allowed the recorder to commit on the charge of disorderly for ten days or a fine of $20, or both.

Such was the substance of the law as pointed out by Lawyer Clark, and this morning at the hearing Judge Bartine sustained his opinion.

Notice was served on Recorder Long late last night to be present at the hearing this morning, but neither he nor his representative appeared. After the writ was argued by Lawyer Clark, the Judge perfected it and the prisoners were released. They returned to Plainfield at noon. Each wore an expansive smile.

A THREE WEEKS' CRUISE.

Party of Plainfielders to Enjoy Themselves on a Yacht for Their Vacation.

Walter B. Rittenhouse, James A. Stafford and Charles B. Morse, of this city, went to Bay Head yesterday where they engaged the yacht "Teal" for a three weeks' cruise down Barnegat Bay. The cruising party will consist of those mentioned and George A. Horne and Henry B. Drake, of the borough. They will not all go together but will be on the yacht for different intervals of the three weeks. Rittenhouse and Horne will, however, stay for the entire trip. Rittenhouse, Stafford and Horne will start Saturday, August 20, and the other two will join them later.

The yacht is a new one and fully equipped for a cruise. Last year it was known as the fastest boat in the bay, winning all the races in its class at the regett a there. It is twenty-seven feet long with a three-foot overhang. It has a complete little cabin with bunks.

The cruising party will start from Bay Head and sail down the bay to Beach Haven which they will make their headquarters. They will act as their own stewards and some wonderful cooking is expected.

Last year Rittenhouse and Sydney B. Titsworth cruised all through that section for two weeks and had a very enjoyable time.

BOUND BROOK WANTS TO INTERVIEW YOUNG

Would Like To Know Where the Promoter Is.

HE WAS TO BUILD A FACTORY.

BOUGHT LAND AND RUN UP BILLS, THEN DISAPPEARED.

The Boomer Claimed to Come From Pennsylvania—Bought Land on Which to Build the Factory—Several Citizens Lent Him Money and Now They Are Sorry for It—Not Expected to Return.

Bound Brook, N. J., August 12.—This place is anxiously awaiting the return of Charles Young, who was going to start a wood pulp pail factory. Young, as he called himself, was a promoter of the first-class. He arrived in Bound Brook about three weeks ago with his boom. He represented himself to be the ex sheriff of a Pennsylvania county and a member of the firm of Charles Young & Bro., of Stroudsburg, Pa. The boom he brought to town has fizzled out and Young has slipped away, leaving behind him a lot of dazed contractors and material men.

Young started well. First he bought a plot of ground about 360 by 160 feet, and announced that he was going to put up a factory 200 by 60 feet and employ about 200 hands. The ground was purchased from Miss S. L. Fisher, who owns the Middlebrook Hotel. She was to get $5 a foot for the property.

Young sank a well on the place and went to work getting up his factory. The foundation was put in and material was dumped on the lot and then there was a transformation scene. Work stopped, people wanted their money and young left town.

Miss Fisher fared better than anybody else. He did not pay her a cent on the property, but the well, which was down 125 feet, is a good one. Frank Wheeland, who drove the well, however, is out $125. Other sufferers from Young's boom that fizzled are numerous. L. B. Cook & Co. furnished lumber, lime and cement for the building. They recovered a portion of it before it had been worked up. T. R. Hodge furnished the brick for the foundation. It is in the wall, and Mr. Hodge doesn't know just how to recover it, or whether it is worth the labor.

John H. King set the foundation and was so much impressed with Mr. Young's talk that he lent Young $5. Mr. King's friends think he was hypnotized. It is the first time that anybody has succeeded in "flim-flamming" Mr. King out of $5. Young ordered varnish worth $200 from G. H. Casterlin and got about a quarter of it delivered. Casterlin has recovered it. William Fuer, the hotelkeeper, is poorer by $10 through his experience with Young. Jacob Fudy, the carpenter, and Kline, who did the mason work, have not received a cent for their services, and are about the heaviest losers.

The clothier was not neglected by Young, who bought stuff worth $20 from A. E. Giddes, who is congratulating himself that the promoter did not make the bill $50 or $100. In the course of his career in town Mr. Young ran up a bill for livery with George Gillespie. The bill is still unpaid. He bought a team of horses and a wagon from Stonewall Jackson, which Mr. Jackson has recovered since Young went away.

Among Young's other schemes was the putting up of a hotel near the proposed factory. He bought from I. Hicks McCord a plot of ground for $2,300 for that purpose. E. VanSyckel & Son had rented to him several houses for the company's employes.

Since Young's disappearance several inquiries have been made about him at Stroudsburg. Neither he nor the company which he said he represented is known in Stroudsburg, and Bound Brook is charging Young's visit up to profit and loss.

The thieves were traced to Sourland Mountain, where all clue was lost. A valuable horse belonging to Anderson Fisher was also stolen Tuesday night. Certain persons are suspected and arrests are likely to follow. Horse thieves have operated in this section extensively in the last few months.

DIAMOND RING DISPUTE.

CRANFORD WOMAN SAYS SHE WAS COERCED TO PART WITH IT.

Now She Goes Into Court to Bring it Back and the Names of Prominent and Respected Citizens are in the Tangle.

(Special to The Daily Press.)

Cranford, August 12.—A legal case that involves some of the best known and most respectable of Cranford's residents was begun yesterday in the district court, when Lawyer L. C. Allen appeared in behalf of Mrs. Julia Thornton of Cranford and secured a writ of replevin to secure the recovery of a diamond ring.

The writ was directed against Miss Emeline Dunham, of Cranford, and was placed in the hands of Constable Sault yesterday morning for service. It was made returnable next Thursday, when the merits of the dispute will be heard by Judge Atwater.

The ring mentioned in the writ is said to be the property of Mrs. Thornton, and according to one explanation of the case, was given by her upon the earnest solicitation of her husband, Harry Thornton, to Miss Dunham as security for the payment of a note that Thornton gave Miss Dunham in payment for a tract of land. It is said that Mrs. Thornton now claims that she was coerced into giving the ring.

The note for which the ring is said to have been security comprised several acres now known as Tuxedo place, and is opposite Roosevelt Manor. It was purchased by Thornton and another person as an investment and was then cut up into building lots and sold.

Miss Dunham, it is said, will fight the writ, and has retained Lawyer Frank Bergen to act in the case.

FEW TO HEAR DR. PETERS

SO THE EMINENT DIVINE POSTPONED HIS ADDRESS TO SUNDAY.

Threatening Weather Probably Kept the Crowd Away From the Camp Meeting—Many Features for the Sunday Meeting.

True to his promise, Rev. Dr. Madison C. Peters, the eminent divine of New York, who was advertised to speak at the Methodist camp meeting at Netherwood last night, was there on time but the congregation was so small that it was deemed best to postpone the address until Sunday afternoon when Dr. Peters will speak at 3 o'clock.

The light rain that came up just before dark kept the people away, and although by 8:30 o'clock there were nearly 100 assembled, the doctor drove away, leaving his address until Sunday when it is expected that a congregation of 3,000 will be present. The officials of St. Peter's church are going to make preparations for that number at any rate, and firmly expect them to come.

Dr. Peters has interested himself in the work sufficiently to announce that two members of his choir, who will be in this city Sunday, will sing. They are Miss M. Katherine Krymer, of Brooklyn, and Alfred E. Holmes, of this city. In addition to these it is expected that the Hotel Hunterston orchestra will play, the Jubilee Singers will sing, and the colored evangelist, Miss Lizzie Babbitt, will speak. Dr. Peters will be the main attraction, however, and he will speak at all events.

Rev. Dr. Coster held a short service last night to which many remained. Owing to the bad weather that has thwarted their movements during the past two weeks, it has been decided to hold the meetings another week, closing Sunday, August 21st, instead of August 14th, as was first intended.

More Fire Hydrants.

As a result of the extension of the water mains up Somerset street by the Plainfield Water Supply Company the borough will probably have two or three additional fire hydrants. It is expected that three hydrants, at least, will be ordered by the Council to be located on Somerset street, thus giving the residents in the upper part of the borough the protection they need.

SEARCH FOR BODIES ON THE BROAD OCEAN

A Plainfielder at the Head of an Unusual Expedition.

MANY DEAD BODIES FOUND.

JUDGE DILLON WANTED TO SECURE BODIES OF WIFE AND DAUGHTER.

During the Three Days that the Hiawatha Sailed Around the Vicinity Where the Bourgogne West Down Thirty-one Bodies Were Found, Six of Which Were Identified and Buried.

It is not an easy task to search for bodies on the broad Atlantic. It is a difficult feat, indeed, to locate them in the trackless expanse of an ocean. It was accomplished, however, by the expedition that sailed from Halifax in the steamer Hiawatha, headed by George S. Clay, of LaGrande avenue, this city. The object of the expedition was to find the bodies of the victims of the Bourgogne disaster, reported to be floating about the ocean, and find, if possible, whether they included the bodies of the wife and daughter of ex-Judge John F. Dillon and those of the wife, three daughters and son of John Perry, of Kansas City. Mr. Clay came to take charge of the expedition through his association with Judge Dillon as his private secretary.

Judge Dillon brought all his influence to bear on the French Line to persuade them to send out a ship to find the bodies after they were reported by the Captain of the Oilfields July 22d. That was Thursday. The Judge wished the French Line to send out a ship to save all the bodies possible and bring them to land.

In the meantime, Mr. Clay went to Philadelphia and saw Captain Shawyer of the Oilfields, and learned all the circumstances. Sunday, July 24th, he went to see the Judge and left that night for Halifax. Then the French Line telegraphed that it would be impracticable and impossible to send out a steamer.

Mr. Perry was communicated with and agreed to get up a private expedition with Judge Dillon. Mr. Clay was instructed to charter a steamer and proceed to the point designated by the captain of the Oilfields.

The steamer Hiawatha, Captain Fenwick Hatt, was immediately chartered by Mr. Clay, and sailed Friday, July 29th. Besides Mr. Clay, there was Dr. H. S. Jacques, who is an expert on identifying bodies, Undertaker Snow, his two assistants and a plumber, in addition to the regular crew.

Mr. Clay was ill a greater part of the time but still was able to direct the expedition. Not finding the bodies at the point designated they sailed northeast, spoke the steamer Londonian and learned that she had seen bodies and wreckage at a point 72 miles to the northwest. Arriving there they made ever increasing circles until Sunday morning, July 31st, they found the first body. During the next three days they found thirty-six bodies, six of which were positively identified. Mr. Clay carefully noted all the marks of identification as reported by the physician.

The missing ones that they were searching for were not to be found, however, and they returned to Halifax early this week.

Wednesday evening Mr. Clay returned to his home in this city. He brought with him a gold headed cane, presented to him by Captain Hatt. The stick is made from the rail of a gangway on the foundered "Bourgogne," which was picked up out at sea by the Hiawatha.

Fixing Up the Streets.

Men in the employ of the New York and New Jersey Telephone Company began yesterday to level the streets through which they ran their conduits, according to arrangements made at a recent meeting of representatives of the company with members of the street committee. The hard-packed dirt which was heaped over the ditches made excellent bicycle paths, which are now cut away and destroyed.

Collecting Back Taxes.

TERMS SATISFACTORY

But M. Cambon Has Not Yet Received Authority to Sign.

SAGASTA PROCRASTINATES

The French Ambassador Awaiting Orders to Sign the Protocol. Advices from Madrid Say That the Spanish Ministers Are Ready to Accede to President McKinley's Demands.

Madrid, Aug. 12.—The Spanish government has been made perfectly acquainted with the principal points of the reply of the United States to the latest Spanish communication regarding the peace negotiations, and the ministers here are ready to accede to the terms of the protocol agreed upon between M. Cambon, the French ambassador at Washington, and the United States government.

The queen regent presided at the cabinet meeting yesterday. Premier Sagasta and the other ministers, on emerging from the palace, explained that while they had not yet received the full text of President McKinley's reply they had received an announcement from the French foreign office which covered the case. The president's answer, however, was then being transmitted to the Spanish government.

The cabinet met during the morning, but when the ministers adjourned the full text of the dispatch of M. Cambon had not been received, consequently another session of the cabinet was held early after noon.

Senor Moret, ex-minister for the colonies, had a long conference with Senor Sagasta. The former has been frequently mentioned in connection with the presidency of the Spanish commission to draw up the treaty of peace with the United States, as he is intimately acquainted with colonial matters.

Official circles consider that the convocation of the Cortes can be postponed until the end of September, and that a suspension of hostilities will be telegraphically announced by both governments immediately after M. Cambon has signed the protocol.

Premier Sagasta denied that he authorized the French ambassador at Washington, as the representative of Spain, to make changes in the Spanish answer "as regards certain conditions which might create difficulties during the course of the negotiations," adding: "If any changes are to be made, the government itself will make them."

The Liberal, moderate Republican, expresses the belief that President McKinley "replied to Spain's note with suspicious rapidity." It adds: "We accept the sacrifice, knowing that the responsibility falls upon the government. The best course is to avoid all useless procedure while the diplomatists are quibbling. It is useless to make distinctions in language in order to reach a conclusion which is inevitable and already known, while our blood continues to flow in Porto Rico and Manila. During the last three years we have sacrificed too much blood. It is time to end it, and this is the only aspect of the question that at present can be considered. Anyway, the press is unable to discuss its other aspects. All delay in concluding an armistice is criminal."

London, Aug. 12.—All the advices received here from Madrid show that the correspondents are certain that M. Cambon, the French ambassador at Washington, will receive authority to sign the protocol arranging for peace between Spain and the United States.

Senor Sagasta's statements must in no way be regarded as affecting the general situation, but simply as an effort to make the Spaniards believe that the United States has made some concessions.

Washington, Aug. 12.—President McKinley and Secretary Day were hopeful that M. Cambon, the French ambassador, would notify them yesterday that he had been instructed to sign the protocol agreed upon at the state department.

They were hopeful, but not confident, for it takes a long time to send dispatches to Madrid by way of the Paris foreign office, and to turn them into three languages going and coming.

Still, M. Cambon was told that the United States are not disposed to brook delay, and the Spaniards probably understand by this time that the president means what he says.

However, all reports to the effect that a limit of twenty-four, thirty-six, forty-eight or any other number of hours has been fixed for Spain to sign the protocol are without foundation. No such condition has been imposed, although expedition has been urged upon Spain, and through M. Cambon the Spanish ministers have promised to comply.

The only condition in the nature of an ultimatum laid down to Spain is that she must promptly sign the protocol or submit to the breaking off of all peace negotiations and the vigorous prosecution of the war in Cuba, Porto Rico and the Philippines.

Communication With the Front.

Washington, Aug. 12.--General Greely has received a dispatch from Colonel Allen of the Signal Corps, who is now at Ponce, stating that the telegraph lines have been extended, first from Ponce, through Guayama, and Asroyo, to the headquarters of General Brooke; second, through Guayama to the headquarters of General Wilson; third, through Ajuntas and Utuado to the headquarters of General Stone; and fourth, along the coast to Guanica. These lines all extend to the cable station and they place the United States in communication with more than half of the island of Porto Rico.

Heat in the Far Northwest.

Spokane, Wash., Aug. 12.--Wednesday was the hottest day ever experienced in Washington. At Walla Walla all records since the establishment of the weather bureau twenty-seven years ago,, were broken when the temperature reached 113 in the shade. The nearest approach to this heretofore, was 108 in 1891 and 1894. The observer also reports that this is the longest period of warm weather ever recorded here.

SPAIN ACCEPTS THE TERMS

Cambon Instructed to Sign the Protocol, After Which an Armistice Will Be Declared.

Madrid, Aug. 12.—The government has received the protocol and the cabinet council rose at 9.40 p. m. last night, having approved it.

The government has wired M. Cambon empowering him to sign the preliminaries of peace.

The day was diplomatically one of the busiest since the outbreak of the war. There were two cabinet councils in addition to various diplomatic conferences.

Though the text of the protocol was not received until the evening was well advanced, the government had been made fully acquainted with its contents through Paris.

The matter was practically settled at the cabinet meeting in the afternoon, and the receipt of the actual document, therefore, only required a meeting of the cabinet for a formal acceptance.

It is expected that the protocol will be signed at Washington to-day and that a suspension of hostilities will be announced.

AT CAMP MONTAUK.

Many Troops Without Shelter and There is Suffering.

Montauk, L. I., Aug. 12.--Bad weather and lack of preparation has caused much suffering among the soldiers who have arrived here from the South. Many of them are still without shelter and their exposure to the cold north easter may result in numerous cases of pneumonia.

Detachments of troops one after another arrived only to find no preparation made for them. General Young and his few assistants had not yet provided accommodations for the soldiers who arrived Wednesday. As a result many of the men who came were without shelter last night.

Much interest was taken in the visit to camp of Miss Helen Gould, Mrs. Russell Sage, Mrs. Washington A. Roebling and Mrs. Colonel M. J. Brown, who are to assist in inaugurating the work of Mrs. Ellen Hardin Walworth of the Woman's National War Relief Association.

They arrived at the camp at two o'clock yesterday. Carriages were in waiting and they were at once driven to the hospital, where they began an inspection of the premises to ascertain what the soldiers were most in need of.

General Young says his driven wells have struck water, but there are some couplings and pieces of machinery for pumping that are wanted and they will have to be received from New York before the pumping can begin. Contractor Lockwood says he will have an ample supply on hand from these wells in a day or two.

A new railroad station is in course of construction west of the present station, which is too small to accommodate the people who now crowd into it. The new station will be 60x60 in dimensions. The old station will be devoted to telegraph station and waiting room for newspaper men.

A long distance telephone has been put into the station and connection opened up with New York and the outside world.

Work was begun yesterday on the new postoffice building, which is to be situated just east of the big restaurant building.

Washington, Aug. 12.—This order has been issued by the adjutant general of the army:

"By direction of the president the camp at Montauk Point, N. Y., will hereafter be known and designated as Camp Wikoff, in honor of Colonel Chas. A. Wikoff, Twenty-second United States infantry, who was killed at the head of his brigade, July 1, 1898, at Santiago de Cuba."

WATER FOR MONTAUK CAMP.

The Red Cross Society to Supply it in Tanks Until Wells Are Driven.

New York, Aug. 12.—A plan for furnishing the troops at Montauk with a plentiful supply of good pure water until the digging of the wells is completed was adopted at a meeting of the executive committee of the Red Cross Society at the chamber of commerce on Wednesday. There were present Alexander E. Orr, Frederick D. Tappen, Cleveland H. Dodge, John P. Faure, A. S. Solomons, Douglas Robinson and William T. Wardwell, who presided. Mr. Wardwell, for the Standard Oil Company and Union Tank Line, tendered the use of four oil tank cars, which hold 6,000 gallons each, the cars to be furnished by the tank line. This offer was accepted.

Mr. Wardwell said that the offer was made because it was considered the best way of affording a supply of pure spring water that could be adopted. It was at first proposed to send the water by boat, but so much more time would be consumed in this way and, besides, fog and bad weather might prevent the boat from reaching Montauk Point in time. The idea of using the tanks was adopted because it was necessary that the soldiers should have water and have it quickly.

At the supply depot of the Red Cross Society at 552 Broadway, Mr. Dodge said that the Red Cross was sending supplies to Montauk Point in almost unlimited quantity.

Stephen Barton, chairman of the Cuban relief committee, a section of the Red Cross work, the offices of which are at 58 William street, had a force of assistants at work yesterday getting supplies ready for Montauk Point.

A NEW DEPARTMENT

Military Division of Santiago Is Created by the War Bureau.

GEN. LAWTON TO COMMAND

The New Department Will Include the Surrendered Territory in Eastern Cuba. It Will Hold Until the Cuban Government Shall Have Been Placed in Control. Gen. Shafter and His Army Will Withdraw.

Washington, Aug. 12.—Several important developments in the military situation in Santiago are expected to grow out of the creation of a new military department, including the surrendered territory in eastern Cuba.

The department will, of course, be a temporary one, maintained only until such time as the Cuban government shall have been installed. Meanwhile the administration of the military government by the United States will be facilitated by the new geographical department.

The appointment of Major General H. W. Lawton to be commanding general of the department of Santiago will of course lead to the withdrawal of General Shafter from the city and province as soon as the whole of his command is withdrawn.

As some troops will be maintained for garrison purposes however, it would be entirely appropriate for Gen. Shafter to remain in Santiago in command of this part of his corps, in the same way that General Merritt remained in the department of California for some time while preparing for the expedition to the Philippines, although Gen. Merriam was the commanding general of the department.

But it is probable that within a short time General Shafter will secure leave of absence in order to enjoy a rest from the fatigue of the hard campaign in Cuba.

The commanding general will remain there probably until all the Spanish prisoners shall have been deported.

There will be no military governor of Santiago in any strict sense, probably. General Lawton, with the officers detailed with him—Generals Wood and Ewers--will administer the military government under instructions from the president and the war department.

War Department,
Adjutant General's Office,
Washington, Aug. 11, 1898.

By direction of the president a geographical military department is hereby established, to be known as the department of Santiago, to consist of all that part of the island of Cuba and the islands and keys adjacent and belonging thereto as have or may hereafter come under the control of the United States. The headquarters of the department will be established in the city of Santiago. Major General Henry W. Lawton, United States Volunteers, is hereby assigned to the command of the department of Santiago.

Brigadier Generals Leonard Wood and Ezra P. Ewers, United States volunteers, will report to Major General Henry W. Lawton, United States volunteers, for duty in the department of Santiago.

The officers of the several staff departments now on duty with the general officers above named are temporarily assigned to the like duties at their respective headquarters.

By order of the Secretary of War,
H. C. CORBIN,
Adjutant General.

The British Columbia Sealers.

Montreal, Aug. 12.—In view of the approaching conference at Quebec, the sealers of British Columbia have forwarded a petition to the Dominion government urging that no further adjustments or arrangement of the sealing question be agreed upon which ignores the cause and reasons for the present unfortunate and unsatisfactory condition of those engaged in the fur seal industry. "It is submitted," they add, "that the sacrifices which have been imposed upon your memorialists and those whose interests are identical, on account of the foreign policy of the empire, should not be overlooked, and if further concessions are to be made by the United States for important reasons, or for benefits to other British-Canadian industries or interests, the principle of full compensation should obtain."

They urge that a sum of not less than $200 per ton gross registered tonnage of each vessel be allowed as compensation to cover money invested and losses sustained. An appendix shows the gross tonnage at present to be 3,636.

The commerce of the United States with Japan has grown rapidly in the last year, much faster than that with any other nation.

Only three countries, namely: Great Britain, China and British India, made as large sales to Japan as did the United States in 1897, and in no case was the increase in imports as large as that from the United States. The gain which the United States has made over other parts of the world in supplying Japan with her imports is shown by the fact that the imports from the United States increased 65 per cent. in 1897 over 1896, while in total imports from all parts of the world the increase of 1897 over 1896 was only 28 per cent. The gain of Great Britain, our chief competitor, was only about 10 per cent.

The rapid development of Japan's foreign commerce is shown by the fact that her exports in 1897 increased 28 per cent. The articles which showed a marked increase in Japan's imports from the United States were raw cotton, cotton duck, flour, hats and caps, fowling pieces, carriages, pig iron, plate and sheet iron, iron pipes, nails, steam boilers, railway carriages, electrical machinery, spinning machinery, mining machinery, printing paper and telegraph wire.

The Clearing Sale of Shirt Waists.

With the close of July comes the greatest price-cutting—the most attractive values ever offered. The remaining stock is divided into two lots, 49c. and 75c., former prices ranged from 75c to $1.50. There's not 200 waists in the entire assortment, so we advise an early call for the best selection.

Sailor Hats and Untrimmed Hats 49c.

This means that each and every hat, irrespective of former price, will be 49c. Of especial interest should the price be, as none have been less than 75c, and the styles offered are all of this season's production.

Men's Negligee Shirts 59c.

Sounds cheap, but the hundred or more shirts that go on sale have been selling at 75c., 85c. and $1. The patterns are all new and desirable, the kind that you would like. Clearing time is here, and the new price, 59c., will be the means of their quick disposal.

Men's Summer Underwear 20c.

Nearly 600 pieces gauze underwear to be 20c. This is ordinarily the best 25c underwear sold, but 20c will be the clearing price.

ORDERS THRICE COUNTERMANDED.

For the Third Time Gen. Coppinger's Expedition Has Been Called Off.

Tampa, Fla., Aug. 12.--General Coppinger's expedition to Porto Rico has been called off and neither the general nor any of the troops of his command will go. Three times since the expedition has been fitting out orders have been received from the war department to rush it, and three times have these orders been countermanded. The last order, however, is thought to be final, and already the work of unloading the transports, on which the Fifth infantry had embarked its equipage, has begun.

That the expedition is not to be sent is no surprise to any of the soldiers or officers here, as the actions of the department regarding it have been looked upon with suspicion for some days. Even General Coppinger is not surprised at the turn things have taken, but could not be interviewed on the subject. That he feels aggrieved over the matter is known. The volunteer troops now here, as well as the Fifth regiment of regular infantry, and the Fifth regiment of regular cavalry, are to be sent to Montauk Point, N. Y., but when the movement to that place will begin is not known.

The transports now loading with stores and supplies will begin to leave to-day. A large number of Sisters of Charity from Washington have arrived here on their way to Santiago, where they have been sent by the government to nurse the yellow fever patients at that point. All are immunes and have nursed through serious epidemics.

TROOPS FOR ST. MICHAELS.

Owing to Threats of Trouble in Alaska a Military Post is to Be Established.

San Francisco, Aug. 12.--The Call says: Serious trouble in interior Alaska is apprehended by the United States government.

Food riots are feared at Fort Yukon and other up the river points, growing out of the failure of the transportation companies to get supplies in there on the prevailing low water.

Acting on instructions received from Washington, Major General Merriam will quickly dispatch a battery of artillery to St. Michaels, the officer in charge having orders to proceed at once up to the Yukon river to Fort Yukon and open a military post for the coming winter. The expedition will also carry a large quantity of extra provisions and supplies to relieve distress.

When St. Michaels is reached the commanding officer will promptly levy on any river boats he may find, seizing them, if necessary, and will transport his troops and supplies to their destination with all possible dispatch. A form of military government will be established and good order maintained in Alaska, even if it requires the services of the soldiers and artillery.

Army and Navy Orders.

Washington, Aug. 12.—Among the army orders issued yesterday are the following:

A board, to consist of Rear Admiral John G. Walker, United States navy, retired; Major Thomas W. Symons, Corps of Engineers, United States army, and Mr. Henry G. Marindin, assistant, United States Coast and Geodetic Survey, is constituted to examine the locality of the proposed bridge across the Niagara river, to give full hearings to parties interested, and to recommend to the secretary of war the width of the draw or pivot spans to be fixed for the proposed bridge. Captain M. J. Henry, subsistence department, will proceed to Montauk Point.

Among the naval orders yesterday are the following: Passed Assistant Surgeon B. R. Ward, detached from the Katahdin and ordered to treatment at the New York naval hospital; Ensign Charles N. Boden, ordered to duty in connection with the naval auxiliary force, Second district.

The Pension Roll Growing.

Washington, Aug. 12.—The number of persons on the United States pension roll is rapidly reaching the 1,000,000 mark. Commissioner of Pensions Evans believes that the total will reach this figure during the current year. The annual report of Commissioner Evans is practically complete, although it has not yet been submitted to Secretary Bliss.

It contains some interesting facts, the most important of which are the big increase in the number of pensioners and increase in the amounts disbursed in payment of pensions.

During the fiscal year which ended June 30, there was a gain of 17,000 in the number of pensioners, and during the same period the value of the pension role jumped upward $5,000,000.

An Observatory on Pike's Peak.

Colorado, Aug. 12.—The Manitou and Pike's Peak Cog Railroad has signed a contract for a large observatory to be built on the top of Pike's peak, with a tower which can be seen for miles. The structure will be built solidly, so as to withstand the terrible wind and snow storms which rage in winter over the barren top of the peak.

In the tower will be mounted four large and powerful telescopes for observation purposes. With these it will be possible to see Denver, fifty miles to the north, and to the west Cripple Creek will be more plainly visible.

Minister Angell Coming.

Washington, Aug. 12.—Mr. James E. Angell, retiring minister of the United States to Turkey, has informed the state department that he has taken his leave of the sultan and will depart for home on the 19th instant.

Minister Straus, who relieves him, was at the state department yesterday and announced his purpose of sailing immediately for his post at Constantinople.

St. Petersburg, Aug. 12.--It is announced here that in view of the success which has attended the use of dynamite guns in Cuba, the minister of marine, Vice Admiral Tyrtoff, proposes to mount such weapons on four Russian warships. Their use will be extended if they turn out to be satisfac-

SPANISH AGAIN ROUTED

Reported Sharp Engagement in Western Porto Rico.

AMERICAN LOSS IS SLIGHT

Gen. Schwan's Command Encounters a Force of 1,200 Spanish Troops. A Fierce Fight Ensues in Which the Spaniards Are Driven Back With Heavy Loss. Our Loss 2 Killed and 15 Wounded.

Ponce, Porto Rico, via Kingston, Jamaica, Aug. 11.--General Schwan's command, on its way to Mayaguez, uncovered a force of Spaniards in the hills lying off the Mayaguez road, near Hormigueros, yesterday.

The Spaniards occupied a position in a northwesterly direction from the Rosario river. The entire Spanish force of the Mayaguez garrison was said to be stationed in the hills. The force comprised 1,000 regular troops and 200 volunteers. A general engagement followed, in which Private Farmberger of the Eleventh infantry and another private were killed. These are the first American soldiers who have been killed by the enemy in Porto Rico. Lieutenant Byron of the Sixth cavalry, aide-de-camp to General Schwan was wounded in the foot and fourteen enlisted men were also wounded.

The Spanish loss was heavy.

After the engagement Gen. Schwan continued his advance upon Mayaguez, which place it was expected he would reach to-day.

General Schwan has not asked for reinforcements, but General Miles is sending a Kentucky regiment with field guns on board a steamship to join General Schwan at Mayaguez.

General Roy Stone's handful of men have not taken Arecibo, nor have they entered Lares. General Henry is beyond the ridge on his way to Utuado today, and General Schwan will push on and meet him at Arecibo. General Wilson is going on steadily and easily to Aibonito, and General Brooke is advancing slowly.

The Spanish will have the choice of retiring from Aibonito to San Juan or Lares, or from Arecibo to San Juan or Aibonito.

If they prefer to make a stand they have a strong position at Aibonito in the mountain passes.

Washington, Aug. 12.—The following was posted late last night:

Ponce, via Bermuda, Aug. 11.

Secretary of War, Washington:

Following message received from Schwan:

Camp near Hormigueros, 10.

Advance guard, including cavalry of his command, while reconnoitering northwest of Rosario river, near Hormigueros, discovered strong Spanish force which lay concealed in the hills north of Mayaguez road. In the general engagement which followed, Lieutenant Byron, Eighth cavalry, my aide de camp, was wounded in the foot, and Private Farmberged, Company C, Eleventh infantry, and one other private were killed, and fourteen enlisted men were wounded. It is reported that the most, if not the entire Spanish garrison of Mayaguez and surrounding country, consisting of 1,000 regulars and 200 volunteers, took part in the engagement. We drove enemy from his position, and it is believed inflicted heavy loss. A wounded Spanish lieutenant was found in field and brought in our lines. Conduct of officers and men was beyond all praise. I propose to continue my march on Mayaguez at an early hour to-morrow.

SCHWAN.
MILES.

Hormigueros is a small town three miles south of Mayaguez.

Mayaguez is the third important city of Porto Rico. Its population is about 20,000. It is the capital of the department of Mayaguez. The city is on the brow of a hill half mile from the sea on the western side of the island.

General Schwan's brigade is made up of the Fifth, Eleventh and Nineteenth United States infantry.

The movement of Schwan's troops is in accordance with the plan of General Miles for an advance on San Juan from the eastern, central and western parts of Porto Rico. Schwan holds the flank on the west, while General Wilson, under whom Troop C was engaged in the fight at Coamo, holds the center. Coamo is about fifty miles east of Mayaguez.

Pope Leo Not Seriously Ill.

Rome, Aug. 12.—Dr. Lapponi and all the Vatican authorities confirm the statement that the pope's illness is slight. The doctor did not stay the night at the Vatican.

The pontiff shows symptoms of gastric inflammation, but partook of nourishment last evening and was in excellent spirits.

He arose this morning at 5.30 o'clock and celebrated mass.

Dr. Lapponi visited the pope at 8 o'clock this morning.

Heavy Sugar Imports.

Washington, Aug. 12.--The advance statement of sugar imports issued by the bureau of statistics shows that the total imports of dutiable sugar during July were $5,299,870, as compared with $2,281,287 for July, 1897.

The amount of sugar that was withdrawn for consumption amounted to $3,926,545.

Large Fire in New Orleans.

New Orleans, Aug. 12.--A fire last night in Osborne Turkish bath establishment, on Bourbon street, penetrated into several large Canal street retail stores, doing considerable damage to stocks. The loss will approximate $200,000; well insured.

Salmon Fishing Poor.

Astoria, Aug. 12.--The salmon fishing season on the Columbia river closed at midnight. The season's pack amounts to 315,000 cases, which is 75,000 cases below the pack of last year.

Gen. Wheeler's Contest.

Montgomery, Aug. 12.--Judge Richard has withdrawn from the race for Congress against General Wheeler in the Eighth district.

RUSSIA'S VICTORY IN CHINA.

London Believes She Has Bought Li Hung Chang Body and Soul.

London, Aug. 12.—The Hong Kong and Shanghai Bank, which furnished the capital for the construction of the Newchwang Railway, has not received any official notification of the successful result of Russia's tactics in China, designed to block the completion of the final contract for the line.

If the news of China's breach of contract is confirmed, the bank will immediately lodge a claim for indemnity.

It is generally believed in the city that Li Hung Chang has been bought body and soul by the Russian government and the situation is regarded as very grave.

In the House of Commons yesterday Mr. Balfour said that the government declined to answer whether it had received any information that the Belgian syndicate holding the Pekin-Han-Kow railway concession had transferred its rights to the Russo-Chinese bank.

Great Britain, he said, had been informed on March 1 last that China would not admit Germany to preferential rates, because the railway traversed the Shantung province.

Great Britain, Mr. Balfour added, was seriously considering the matter of the Newchwang railway.

THE LEITER WHEAT COLLAPSE.

A Loss of More Than $10,000,000 Thus Far.

Chicago, Aug. 12.—All of the Leiter holdings of wheat in this country, as well as that held in joint account in the Northwest, have been sold. On the wheat there was a loss of nearly $2,000,000, but it was disposed of at the prices at which it was turned over to Armour and Peavey to sell. There is but one more chapter to Joseph Leiter's wheat deal. That is the payment of his indebtedness to commission houses. It is a large amount and is only partially guaranteed by the elder Leiter. So far the Leiters are out over $10,000,000 on the wheat deal.

Levi Z. Leiter and his wife yesterday filed for record in Chicago two mortgages pledging five pieces of their most valuable down town real estate, valued at $2,087,420, to the Northwestern Mutual Life Insurance Company for the payment of a loan of $1,000,000 which had been made by that company. The mortgages were for $200,000 and $800,000. Both are for a term of ten years, and at an interest of 4 per cent. Mr. Leiter has to keep up $230,000 insurance.

DAY AVERTS A CRISIS.

Through His Work Italy Gives Colombia Eight Months' Time.

Washington, D. C., Aug. 12.—By exercising the good offices of the United States tactfully, Secretary Day probably has succeeded in averting a serious crisis in the relations between Italy and Colombia, growing out of the Corruti affair.

A cablegram has been received at the department from Rome saying that out of regard for the United States the Italian government had telegraphed to Admiral Candiani at Carthagena, Colombia, to give the Colombia government eight months' time in which to settle with Corruti's creditors under the terms of President Cleveland's award. While Colombia has not yet been heard from in acceptance of this proposition, it is not doubted here that it will be accepted.

New Camp at Huntsville, Ala.

Washington, Aug. 12.--An order was issued from the war department yesterday directing that part of the Fourth army corps which was recently removed from Tampa to Fernandina, to proceed at once to Huntsville, Ala., where a new camp is being established. The troops at Tampa also will be sent to the Huntsville camp.

The Fernandina camp is another notable instance of a camp site which at first presented superior advantages as a quartering place for troops, but which has since become so unhealthful as to compel the withdrawal of the troops.

Customs in Porto Rico.

Washington, Aug. 12.—The war department has sent instructions to General Miles regulating the collection of customs at such Porto Rican ports as have been captured.

The instructions are preliminary in character, similar to the earliest orders on the same subject sent to General Shafter at Santiago, and they will be followed very soon with detailed directions by mail, embodying the customs tariff published by the department yesterday with the approval of President McKinley.

Fighting Not Stopped.

Washington, Aug. 12.—"You can deny most positively, emphatically and officially the report that orders have been sent to General Miles to stop hostilities in Porto Rico."

Secretary Alger made this statement last night when he heard that the report was abroad that hostilities had been ordered stopped.

It was stated at the department that no orders would be sent to General Miles to stop his campaign until peace negotiations were signed and execut-

Peace in Guatemala.

Washington, Aug. 12.—Minister Arrioga of Guatemala, who is now at Long Branch, received yesterday the following official telegram:

"Revolution quickly suppressed. Peace prevails in Guatemala."

Ordered to Porto Rico.

Washington, Aug. 12.--It is understood here that General Coppinger has been ordered to Porto Rico, and he may be made the commanding genaral of the new military department to be established there.

What a Penny War Stamp Did.

The first record of the war stamp causing any particular trouble in this section comes from Kearney. The value of the stamp which should have been affixed to appear was only a penny, but was the means of a contractor losing a job amounting to over $2,000 and the town having to pay $100 more than would have been necessary if the important little stamp had been in evidence.

It seems that Kearney advertised for bids for the improvement of one of its streets, but the lowest bidder failed to affix a once cent war stamp to the check which he accompanied his bid with. It was but a technical objection, easily remedied, but the officials decided that it was a fatal mistake for the contractor to make and his bid was thrown out.

Kean Will Probably Get it.

Before the scheme of the county boulevard and the county trolley is consummated there are many obstacles and objections to be overcome, but since John Kean made his offer of $250,000 for the trolley franchise and thus paved the way for the improvement to be made, matters in connection with the proposition seem to be progressing favorable for its success. The prevailing impression seems to be that the Board of Freeholders will grant the franchise to Mr. Kean.

A Frank Frenchman.

A prominent French author, M. Demolins, the editor of La Science Societe, has recently published a striking book under the title "To What Is Due the Superiority of the Anglo-Saxon races?" That a French writer should admit such a superiority is a marvel. That he should be able to analyze it with great subtlety and precision is less wonderful once the conviction had seized his mind. The French intellect is eminently lucid and direct when its X ray is not absolutely befogged with prejudice. M. Demolins proceeds at once to plant his reasoning on the thesis that the English speaking races always take their initiative in political, social and industrial life from the standpoint of the individual. He says in defense of his title:

It is useless to deny the superiority of the Anglo-Saxons. We may be vexed by this superiority, but the fact remains despite our vexation. We cannot go anywhere about the world without meeting Englishmen. Over all our possessions of former times the English or the United States flag now floats. The Anglo-Saxon has supplanted us in North America, which we occupied from Canada to Louisiana; in Mauritius, once called the Isle of France; in Egypt. He dominates America by Canada and the United States; Africa by Egypt and the Cape; Asia by India and Burma; Oceanica by Australia and New Zealand; Europe and the entire world by his commerce, by his industry and by his politics. The Anglo-Saxon world is today at the head of that civilization which is most active, most progressive, most devouring. Let this race establish itself anywhere on the globe, and at once there is introduced with prodigious rapidity the latest progress of our western societies, and often these young societies surpass us. Observe what we Frenchmen have done with New Caledonia and our other possessions in Oceanica and what the Anglo-Saxons have done in Australia and New Zealand.

He finds the superiority of the Anglo-Saxon to consist primarily in the mode of his education, which is directed in an eminent degree to make him a practical, self dependent person, full of resources to conquer a home and living, however he may be circumstanced. But in making this just admission he does not quite account for the growth of that system of education. It could not have come at random. That was an outgrowth too. Our author does not sufficiently emphasize the fundamental racial spirit, lying behind all else. Even in feudal times the same independent masterful spirit displayed itself from baron down to peasant. It is this hereditary spirit which has evolved all the forms and agencies of superiority, which M. Demolins so envyingly praises and which he describes at length. Just why this peculiar union of intellect and temperament should have been crystallized in England and not in some other part of growing Europe, fermenting with forces similar to those agitating life across the English channel, is the tap-root which the author fails to touch. Of course the question is academic, but it underlies the other.

MAJOR GENERAL JAMES H. WILSON.

The military governor of Porto Rico, Major General James H. Wilson, was born in Illinois in 1837. He graduated from West Point in 1860 and performed distinguished service during the civil war. He was brevetted major general in 1866. He went to Porto Rico with General Miles' forces.

There are many signs that financial distress in Japan is sharpening to a crisis, in spite of the large war indemnity which China has paid. Everything has been stimulated in an extreme degree in the enterprising empire, which is now threatened by one of those collapses which always follow great inflations of business. Japan has been expending enormous sums on her army and navy since her recent war in the ambition to become a great power in the western sense. She has built many railways, promoted and carried out vast public improvements, endowed college and school systems and been lavish without stint in spending money for excellent ends. The mercantile community in Japan are in great distress, and the government is unable to do aught to help them. The country is paying the price of an overweening ambition instead of waiting for slow and sure development. It was the same cause—that is to say, vast expenditures in public improvements and a too great hurry for civilization—which plunged Ismail Pasha and Egypt into bankruptcy. There is no danger of this for the energetic island kingdom. But certainly omens point to acute and prolonged financial trouble.

PASSING COMMENT

Things that Are Not Exactly News but Just as Interesting.

In looking over some old papers recently, Justice J. E. Mosher came across an old commission dated July 12, 1837, appointing Russel Loring ensign in the 258th Regiment, New York Militia. Russel Loring was the father of Miss Lizzie Loring, who is now Justice Mosher's wife.

It is the custom of the street sprinkler that waters Park avenue beyond Ninth street, to simply deluge the street late in the afternoon. Wheelmen or drivers who are called upon to pass through there find it decidedly unpleasant. The water lies in puddles right in the roadway. The attention of the city authorities is called to the matter and it is to be hoped that the man in charge of the sprinkler will be instructed on the subject.

There was no end of excitement at a local bicycle establishment last Saturday evening. It is the custom of the proprietor to close his store Saturdays until sundown, then opening up for the evening. Last Saturday afternoon he went to New York, leaving his wife and assistants to open up the store at the usual time. He neglected, however, to leave the key to the front door behind. When sundown came, his wife was in a quandary as to how she could gain admittance. Keys of all sorts and descriptions were hunted up and tried but they would not fit. The windows were all securely locked and it seemed as if an entrance would have to be forced. At last, however, a ladder was rigged up against the door and a small boy crawled through the transom and dropped down inside. Even then there was considerable trouble in pointing out to him how to get out of the place, having once got in. Over an hour was consumed in gaining an entrance.

The members of the consistory of Trinity Reformed church had an important session last night with cucummis citrullus, or, in other words, they devoured water melons. Very fortunately for the members of the consistory one of its members is Fred E. Smith, whose business is that of a grocer. Mr. Smith handles a large number of water melons, and after the routine business of the consistory had been transacted in the church parlors, he invited the Board of Elders and Deacons to adjourn to his grocery store. They accepted and in a few minutes were lined up along the counter, taking things easy on peach baskets and soap boxes.

Mr. Smith brought forth from the ice box a large juicy water melon—just the sort to make one's mouth water. The melon was divided into large sized portions and then each one of the party bent over and commenced to make way with the delicious cuts. In the midst of the feast good natured Elder Laire proposed between mouthful of the melon that a special meeting of the consistory be held once a week while the melon season was on It is needless to say that it received the hearty approval of every member.

THEATRICAL.

Current Dramatic Attractions That Plainfielders Can Witness.

John L. Sullivan, champion of champions, prince of good fellows and representative American in general, makes his first appearance in our city tonight at Stillman Music Hall, and will undoubtedly be greeted by a large and enthusiastic audience of admirers. Mr. Sullivan is, perhaps, one of the best known public men in the United States today, and will ever be remembered by his friends. He will be seen tonight, as actor, comedian and exponent of methods which made his name famous, in a musical play entitled "A Trip Across the Ocean." In this play he appears as the captain of the ship and each and every one of the supporting company have ample opportunity for the display of their several abilities. The members of the company all rank as superior artists — "headliners," so-called—and are worthy companions of the star.

JOHN L. SULLIVAN.

Take Advantage of Our Closing out Prices.

On Shirt Waists, Crash Suits, Duck Suits, Pique Suits, Wash Skirts and Summer Goods of all kinds. We are already making preparation for New Fall Goods, and it is imperative that we close out Summer Goods to make room for them. We have several weeks of hot weather before us, and prices will be cut deeply enough to make it an object for you to buy even this late in the season. Of course the assortment of styles and sizes is much broken, but we have many excellent things yet well worthy your attention.

Sundry Good Things.

Careful scouring of the market late in the season has secured sundry special values.

A case of very fine Bleached Ribbed Vests with wing sleeves at 10c per garment is one. You have paid 25c for no better.

An odd case of Scotch Lawns overlooked in stock-taking and consequently almost given away to get rid of (about 4,000 yards of excellent styles) we bought to sell for 3c per yard. Won't last forever at the price.

Still another stunner—a large lot of extra fine Waitress Aprons, LARGE SIZE, at 25c. Real value is 50c.

One of the best things, perhaps, is an assortment H. S. Handkerchiefs in all white, mourning borders, embroidered, etc., at 5c each. We don't hope to get rich selling them, but derive a great deal of satisfaction from knowing we are giving our customers wonderful value.

Wash Goods Reduced.

Scotch Ginghams	that	were	25c	are	now	15c.
"	"	"	39c	"	"	25c.
French Organdies	"	"	25c	"	"	15c.
"	"	"	39c	"	"	25c.

And so it is all through the store. Good things in every department being cleaned out every day.

If interested in UMBRELLAS we suggest you take a look through our line. Have received during the past week a fine assortment fresh from the factory.

Lesson For the Week Beginning Aug. 14.
Comment by Rev. W. J. Yates, A. M.
Topic, Helping Others.

SCRIPTURE READING.—Isa. xli, 6, 7. "They helped every one his neighbor, and every one said to his brother, Be of good courage."

That is the way true Israelites do. That is practical Christianity. It is not the spirit or style of the Ishmaelites. With them every man's hand is against his neighbor. It is a fight in which every man is for himself. One against all and all against every one.

Slowly the world is learning the lesson of mutual helpfulnesss. For long ages noblemen have been those who compelled others to serve them. Slaves were the ones compelled to serve. It has seemed impossible for any society to exist that was not founded on this distinction in classes. Physical strength, intellectual acuteness, hereditary transmission or whatever basis was assumed, the result was largely the same—some are destined to be servants and others to be served. The noble ones are the served, the base ones are the forced workers.

Oftentimes it has been held that the ignoble must have no hope of bettering their condition. Their highest virtue was submission and contentment in serving. Sometimes it has been recognized that the base could under favoring circumstances and in isolated cases rise into the ranks of the refined and masterful.

The spirit of Israelism is in direct antagonism to this genius of heathenism. It bases all human society on the recognition of the mutual rights of men and their mutual obligation to helpfulness. God is the Father of all. Hence men are brothers and should be brotherly in spirit and action. The world and its powers are the vineyard of Jehovah, where all must work as His children. This labor is the duty of all. Envy, jealousy, strife, should have no place.

Some are weak in body, others deficient in mind and many lack in the true spirit of manliness and godliness. Those more richly endowed are not to be contemptuous over their less favored fellows, but compassionate. No one lives or can live by himself. Each is in large measure dependent upon others. Each needs the love and helpfulness of all.

Not only is there the individual good to be reached. Society itself is to be enlarged and enriched. Combination is inevitable and necessary to the highest development and the noblest achievement. Co-operation of bodies, minds and spirits will bring grander results than any system of forced subordination can do. Slavery is as bad for the master as for the slave and ruinous to the free neighbor in competition.

The only possible permanent society of men must be based on mutual respect, regard and helpfulness. This is Christianity at work.

Secretary A. B. Leonard.

The Missionary society is the most prominent connectional benevolent organization of the Methodist Episcopal church. Its secretaries are elected by the general conference every four years. Men of recognized ability in the management of affairs have always been sought for these positions. Dr. Leonard is recognized as a leader of great force of character, decided convictions and resourceful tact. He is an ardent advocate of total abstinence and prohibition as well as an inspiring leader of the missionary forces. On the platform he speaks with energy and carries conviction to the minds of his hearers. He has traveled extensively among the conferences in the States and has made a visit to our missions in China and Japan. Two other secretaries share with him the work of administration of the affairs of the society. It needs men of strong physique, alert minds and genuine piety for these positions.

Vacation.

"The devil never takes a vacation." How often that has been thrust at some overworked and tired out minister or Christian layman who was seeking change of scene and recuperation of exhausted energies. If the devil never rests, that is no reason men should not. The Master often called the disciples away from the crowd and from the perplexities of the work to rest body, brain and spirit. Some people boast that they never took a vacation in all their lives. Most likely they never needed or deserved one. Some never work hard enough to feel tired and never carried enough weight on shoulders or heart to need much change.

The great mass of people need change and ought to get it. The more exhausting the work the more time is needed for restoration of the balance of energy. Take time to get away from your work. Rest the eyes by change of scene. See how beautiful the world is. Breathe deep, see afar. Rest every power in the best way. Sleep, eat, enjoy things, go slowly, take in much even if you do not go far. Avoid hurry and worry and work of your common kind. Rest that you may work better and longer.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Topic For the Week Beginning Aug. 14.
Comment by Rev. S. H. Doyle.

TOPIC.—Exalt Christ.—Math. xxi, 1-11.

This passage in Matthew tells us the familiar story of Christ's triumphant entry into Jerusalem a few days before His crucifixion. It is the one solitary instance in the life of Christ where He allowed Himself to receive the homage and adoration due Him. It was a magnificent, spontaneous demonstration, showing the estimation in which He was held by the multitudes of His countrymen, but the fact that perhaps a few days later the voices that cried, "Hosanna!" then cried "Crucify Him!" makes it stand forever as an illustration of the fickleness of the human heart and of the ease with which the minds of the masses of the people may be swayed by artful and designing men. But it was an exaltation of Christ at the time and suggests to us a study in the exaltation of Christ.

1. The triumphal entry was an enthusiastic exaltation of Christ. Enthusiasm characterized the demonstration throughout. The multitudes were wildly enthusiastic. They stripped the trees of branches and spread them before Him; they took off their cloaks and with these made paths for Him; they cheered and cried "Hosanna!" Christ is worthy of enthusiastic exaltation. Enthusiasm is a good thing when there is anything to be enthusiastic over. What is worthier of our greatest enthusiasm than the life and work of Christ?

2. The triumphant entry was a public exaltation of Christ. In a sense it was national as well as local. People from various parts of the nation participated in it. Christ should be exalted publicly, in the community, in the state, in the nation. Every Endeavorer should throw all the influence of his public life strongly in favor of the exaltation of Christ.

3. The triumphant entry was an exaltation of the real Christ. Christ was there before the people. He was a real Christ. To many Christians Christ is not as real as He ought to be. Many have some sort of a hazy idea that away back in the centuries such a person lived, but their ideas about Him are very unsatisfactory and indistinct. We should study more thoroughly the life of Christ, live more closely to Him in prayer, so that He may become as real as an earthly friend standing beside us. Then we will present a real Christ to the world, and this is what the world needs.

4. The triumphant entry was an exaltation of Christ that produced results. When He came into Jerusalem, "all the city was moved, saying, 'Who is this?'" One great object of our exaltation of Christ should be to lead men to inquire about Him and to learn to admire Him. If we exalted Christ more in our daily walk and conversation, in all our private and public actions, men would more often say, "Who is this?" And this would give us the opportunity to tell them who our Christ is and to urge them to believe in, profess and exalt Him.

Bible Readings. — Ps. xxiv, 1-10; xxxiv, 8; Isa. xlv, 22-25; Math. xvi, 13-20; xxviii, 18-20; John xiii, 31, 32; Acts i, 1-11; iv, 10-12; xv, 25, 26; Rom. xiv, 7-12; Gal. ii, 20, 21; Phil. ii, 1-12; Col. iii, 1-4, 16, 17; Rev. v, 1-14.

The True Church.

The note of the true church is not correctness, but catholicity. We long for a church that shall indeed be "the mother of us all." She is not the mother of the saints and of the confessors only; she is also the mother of heretics and reformers. She has room for all. Her children must not only have food and discipline, but they must also have freedom and light. She does not cast them off when they make mistakes. They must have room to grow; they must have opportunity for experiment and adventure. The great thing, after all, is not a well kept house, but a healthy, happy household.—Christian Register.

Friendship.

Friendship is the nearest thing we know to what religion is. God is love, and to make religion akin to friendship is simply to give it the highest expression conceivable by man.—Ruskin.

Into the Life.

To be "without natural affection" is to lack that element of character upon which the Holy Spirit lays His hand in lifting us out of the life of sin and into the life of holiness.—American Friend.

The Blackest Misery.

A closed heaven represents the blackest misery that humanity is capable of suffering.—Rev. W. S. Cassmore.

Resist Its Arrogance.

Try to cultivate the moral courage that will resist the arrogance of fashion.—Philadelphia Methodist.

Dwell With Me.

Gracious Spirit, dwell with me!
I myself would gracious be,
And with words that help and heal
Would Thy life in mine reveal,
And with actions bold and meek
Would for Christ my Saviour speak.

Truthful Spirit, dwell with me!
I myself would truthful be,
And with wisdom kind and clear
Let Thy life in mine appear,
And with actions brotherly
Speak my Lord's sincerity.

Tender Spirit, dwell with me!
I myself would tender be.
Shut my heart up like a flower
At temptation's darksome hour.
Open it when shines the sun,
And His love by fragrance own.

Mighty Spirit, dwell with me!
I myself would mighty be—
Mighty so as to prevail
Where, unaided, man must fail,
Ever by a mighty hope
Pressing on and bearing up.

Holy Spirit, dwell with me!
I myself would holy be.
Separate from sin, I would Choose and cherish all things good
And, whatever I can be,
Give to him who gave me Thee.
—Thomas T. Lynch.

deeply fond of her, wholly in sympathy with her. His gaze wandered to a shadowy pastel on the wall before him where her deep eyes were touched by the sunset's fire. It seemed to tell him much. Hers had been a stern, starved girlhood up to the present year. After college days and between the ages of 20 and 23 she had been chained to the bedside of an invalid father, her life a strain when it was not stagnation, unused energy fretting her heart, what should have been the sunniest period of her life drifting by in shadow.

When her father died, she had found herself wholly orphaned and free to plan her future according to her tastes. She had a small income, a thorough education and the talent of being able to write with splendor and force of whatever she felt deeply. The controlled yearnings for freedom had grown into one desire, and she had gratified it. The old home was rented, and like a young David entering the camp of the Philistines she had come to New York. Three things she had determined on—to live alone, work, fill her days with impressions of life, fling away books and study men and women.

When the maid appeared with candles, Anne followed her, a bowl of roses in her hands. The newspaper woman in severe, collared gown was gone, and in her place was an exquisite creature akin to the flowers and the starry lights. Her shoulders and arms gleamed through a gauzy black bodice. A modish knot showed the fine abundance of her hair. One rose was fastened at her bosom, where it flamed in splendid warmth.

Dr. Ericsson looked at her critically. She was more than pretty; she was imperfectly lovely, or, rather, beautiful without fulfilling conventional canons. During quiet moments her face was serene and alluring, the dark hair upon the pale brow like banded velvet, the liquid brown eyes poetically thoughtful, the mouth appealing. Softness, strength and color were all there. But in action and expression lay her strongest charm. When the lips smiled, the eyes lightened and the small, delicate hands, as restless as a Frenchwoman's, emphasized her words; Anne was irresistible.

"I am going to give you a summer dinner," she said, her fingers lingering among the roses.

"Nothing but roses?"

"You'd be near Nirvana if that could satisfy you. Nora, bring the soup," she added in a purposely practical tone as she seated herself.

They were like children together. Anne listened attentively as she led the old man on to philosophize of life as he saw it. She told him of her newspaper work, its newness, its delight, of the novel she had commenced and how sometimes she rose at dead of night to make a note of an idea or a phrase, of all her faiths, dreams and prejudices. To him she was piteously youthful. To her he was old, wise and weary. He had settled all with destiny. She was buckling on her armor. It seemed that the heart he had lost throbbed in her bosom. He longed that the impossible might be made possible and she might keep it forever so, valiant, free, happy.

"I suppose you know David Temple very well by this time?" he asked.

"You'd be surprised if you knew how seldom he has spoken to me," she said, resting familiarly on her elbow. "He sometimes seems a marvelously constructed machine instead of a man. He works so hard. He seems able to attend to 20 things at once."

"Yes; to lead is in his blood."

"That's it," she nodded. "If he'd been born in a forest in tribal days, they'd have made him chief. Or can't you fancy him a pirate, or a stupendous criminal with a horde of cringing followers, or a cardinal with an eye to pierce a conscience and subjugate a king, or a general like Napoleon, gazing indifferently over the fields of the dead? Do you know," she said in an awed, childish way, "I like him?"

"Well, go on," she said, leaning closer.

"All women like him," snapped Dr. Ericsson.

"Do they?"

"It's a feminine instinct which nothing can kill to like the man who dominates you—and who can do without you?"

"Well, go on," she said, leaning closer.

"Women and their affairs," said Dr. Ericsson, lighting a cigar, "engage David Temple's thoughts very little. He is not intolerant, he is simply indifferent, although most masculine in the gentleness coming from a consciousness of his own strength. It seems to me as if a woman could never fill his many sided life. There are men born with the love of woman in their being, and it grows with their growth. To possess it too strenuously weakens a character and often perverts what should be a reverence into a taste. To possess it with a separateness from the other interests of life suggests the lack of some vital and spiritual fiber. I've felt this with David. If he ever marries, it will be because his intellect suggests it as wise or because his physical nature is enslaved. The two will scarcely blend."

"Yes, he suggests all you say. By the way, who is Donald Sefain—his stepbrother?"

"Oh, have you seen him?"

"This afternoon. His face haunted me all the way home."

"I see you have Vaudel's 'Desert Monk' on your shelf. You've read it. The pictures are Donald Sefain's. Fine, aren't they? I half believe he made them just to show what he could do, and then from 'cussedness' flung down his pen. He's done no serious work since."

"Do tell me about him," and Anne, leaving the table, wheeled a low armchair to Dr. Ericsson's knee.

"It's a bit of a story. Can you reach me a match? Thank you, my dear. This is very cozy." He sat back and half closed his eyes. "When David Temple was about 15, his father, as hard and stern a man as ever lived, married a Frenchwoman, a widow with a boy of 6. Some people know and a great many suspect there never was a Mr. Sefain, and the boy Donald was as surely John Temple's son as David, for whom he'd have cut out his eyes; he loved him so. Well, Mrs. Sefain was a beautiful woman, an adventuress with the manners of a duchess. I never saw her in a brocade dress without thinking how well she'd look on one of those little pompadour fans, all covered with roses and things. Donald is the picture of her. I think his eyes and smile—the latter too rare, God help him—would glorify a plain face into beauty. After five years of the most absolutely perfect marital misery Donald's mother died, and he was left in old John Temple's care. It was a hard fate."

"Why? He didn't like him?"

"Like him? He hated him as only an intolerant, conscientious man can hate. Donald was a constant reproach to him and a reminder of his married unhappiness. He never let David be friends with him, never. You see, Donald hadn't a fair chance. He was a lonely little soul."

"Why didn't he set his teeth and make something of himself?" said Anne with the defiance of a champion.

"Ah, that's what he should have done exactly! But he didn't. Instead, at 20, after leaving John Temple's house he went from bad to worse. His face today bears scars of the odds against him. He's a failure. I tried to get near him, but he wouldn't let me be his friend. It is one of his perversities to affect the poor and mingle with the unfortunate. Anything prosperous inspires a morbid dislike in him; all that's deformed, shunned; all that lies in shadow finds favor in his sight. He's a strange and silent creature, drinking feverishly, cultivating his worst instincts, finding an unreasonable satisfaction in offering himself as a sacrifice to the discontent instilled into him through the circumstances of his life."

"I don't understand why he's on The Citizen with David Temple."

"Oh, he simply does work for that as well as a few other papers! He's brimful of talent. David employs him as he would a stranger and pays him for what work he turns in. He's seldom in the office."

The clock struck 9, and Dr. Ericsson started up.

"Good heavens! And a sick man not a mile away is waiting for me!"

He got into his coat, kissed her and hurried away.

She carried the bowl of roses from the table to the mantel and stood for a moment with her hands upon them, a look of disquietude in her eyes. She was thinking of Donald Sefain.

CYCLING COMMENT.

Harry Cuming of Putnam avenue, has returned from a wheeling trip to Philadelphia.

Sanford Robinson, of West Second street, has been enjoying a short wheeling trip to Patchogue, L. I.

Ray Poole, Peter Simmonds and Eugene Richter are all expected to ride in the big road race on the Hudson county boulevard Labor Day. It is to be hoped that the handicapper will see that they are well bunched.

Although a rattling good road rider, Ray Poole says he can do nothing on the track. As yet he has only ridden on Maltby's track, which has no banking at all on the corners and is consequently very difficult to ride over at a high rate of speed. If the Crescent Oval is put in condition and matinee races held there, as has been suggested by some local wheelmen, Poole will get a chance to try his speed on a bank track.

A queer looking wheel went through here yesterday afternoon and attracted quite a little attention on account of its oddity. It was an ordinary looking wheel except for a strange contrivance on the rear, which the rider used to carry vegetables to market in. It was a shallow basket and projected far over the rear wheel. At first glance it looked as though the rider and his load would overbalance the machine and lift the front wheel clear of the ground, but the rider said that it did not.

There came very near being a serious mix-up on Maltby's track a few evenings ago. A rider, near to the track, was in the lead with a bunch of a dozen riders close behind him. When they came near the last turn, they were all riding at full speed. Then the new rider attempted to round the turn. He kept riding wider and wider despite the warning of the others to keep to the pole. He called to the rest to look out and finally ran clear off the track on the grass, being unable to make the flat turn at full speed. The bunch behind him just missed being carried off also by a very little space.

Early in the morning on pleasant days, before the majority of Plainfield's citizens have ventured out, there is a small army of wheelman riding to each of the large factories of Plainfield. In many cases the roads they are called upon to pass over are not in good condition for wheeling, consequently they take to the sidewalk with a delightful disregard for the city ordinances. Should a policeman happen in the neighborhood he would have a rich haul of offenders to hale before the City Judge. The hour of this invasion is after the night men of the police department have gone home and before the day Bourdeman begins his morning rounds.

VARIOUS SPORTS.

All arrangements for the New Jersey Athletic Club's games Labor Day have been perfected by the athletic committee. The regular programme will be given, and in addition there will be football, baseball and cycle racing. The open athletic events are as follows: 100-yard run, 440 yard run, 220-yard run, 880-yard run, pole vault and 220 yard hurdle; also a one-mile bicycle race and a two-mile bicycle race. A special half-mile run has been added to the programme, in which H. E. Manvel, of the New Jersey Athletic Club, will attempt to make a new world's record for the distance. A special 56-pound throwing contest has also been added. It will differ from the present method of throwing, inasmuch as the contestants will throw over a crossbar. This is the old style of throwing among the Irishmen. The record for this event is 13 feet, 9 inches, held by O'Reagan. James S. Mitchell, the present champion at the 56 pound, will attempt to create a new record in this event.

AMONG THE STEPPERS.

Tomorrow afternoon there will be some exhibition trotting on the track of the Plainfield Driving Association that ought to attract a large crowd of people. Three prizes are to be offered for the event. The first prize will be a handsome silver pitcher, engraved, to be given to the owner of the horse making two heats nearest to six minutes. If a horse goes one heat in 2:40 and the second heat in 3:20, the first prize will go to that horse. The second prize is a horse blanket and the third prize a horse whip. The event is open to all comers, and no entrance fee will be charged. Only one horse at a time will be allowed on the track for the exhibition, but as many as desire can exhibit their horses. The affair has been arranged by J. Wesley Johnson, who exhibits a public spirit in presenting the prizes. The prizes are on exhibition at L. M. French's carriage repository on Somerset street.

GOLF.

It has been decided by the officers of the Park Golf Club that it will be simply impossible to have the course and clubhouse opened Labor Day. The house cannot be furnished by that time, and most of the members will still be away on their vacations. The date for opening the course formally will be decided later on, when more of the members arrive home. There are at present a large number of applications for membership in the hands of the secretary, but action will have to be deferred until the members of the committees return home.

OBJECTS TO THE REMOVAL.

Warren Smalley Wants the Schoolhouse to Remain Where It Is.

(Special to The Daily Press.)

New Brunswick, Aug. 12.—Warren Smalley, of Piscataway township, Middlesex county, has applied to the Supreme Court for a writ of certiorari removing a resolution passed by the School Board of Raritan township, which resolution provided for the removal of a public schoolhouse to Stelton from a point on the boundary lines of Piscataway and Raritan townships. Mr. Smalley recites that the schoolhouse in question was erected in 1852 by voluntary subscriptions raised by the people of Piscataway township. The Piscataway Baptist church gave the lot.

He alleges that the School Board of Raritan township passed the resolution providing for the removal of the schoolhouse without first submitting the question to the legal voters. Men are now at work tearing down the old building.

Mr. Smalley recites that upon the removal of the school his children, as well as the children of the other residents of the old district, will have to journey three miles to school.

HOODOO FOR Y. M. C. A. CYCLERS.

Rain Came Last Night and the Schedule Run was Abandoned.

There seems to be a veritable hoodoo hanging over the heads of the Y. M. C. A. Cyclers of this city. The hoodoo usually appears in the shape of a big black cloud from which the rain falls to a greater or less extent, just sufficient to stop the club runs.

Last night the Y. M. C. A. riders made another attempt to hold a run. At least a run was scheduled, but the rain came instead of the riders. Consequently, Captain T. A. Cuming called off the run and gave the rain undisputed possession of the roads.

Seven times have the Y. M. C. A. Cyclists attempted to hold runs this season and five times has it rained and the run been given up. One time when they went, they had to plough through a dreary waste of mud all the way to Orange. Last year seven out of twelve runs were called off on account of rain.

There is a feeling of sadness among the members and a wish is expressed that it might be possible to hold a run and not have that hoodoo and the cloud hanging over their heads.

ASSESSOR FRENCH'S WORK.

Borough Council Highly Compliments the New Official.

The Borough Council concluded its work last evening of examining the books of Assessor French. Four sessions of the Council were held and after the session last evening the Council was called to order by Mayor Wilson and approved the books. The Mayor and Council expressed themselves as being exceedingly well pleased with the work of Mr. French, who displayed rare judgment in his work. Mr. French was highly complimented by the officials. It will probably be some little time before the borough tax rate will be made known, but there seems to be no doubt but what it will please the majority of the property-owners.

Names of New Ships.

The names of "Hamilton" and "Jefferson" have been selected for the new steamships now building at Chester, Pa., for the Old Dominion Line, which are expected to be in commission late in the year. In this decision the directors of the company have departed from their custom of using geographical names, as it has seemed appropriate at this time to adopt the names of two of the greatest statesmen the country has produced, further representing as they do, both New York and Virginia, so far as their fame can be located.

WAR NEWS.

The Queen's speech of prorogation contained little of importance. Concerning the American-Spanish war she said: "Her Majesty has witnessed with the deepest sorrow the hostilities between Spain and the United States. The present negotiations give hope of an honorable and enduring peace."

Flag Waves Over Montauk Point

Montauk Point, Aug. 12, 1 p.m.—The American flag was hoisted over this camp for the first time this morning by the Second Cavalry. The camp is slowly getting into shape. Over 2,000 troops have arrived. Five hundred tents have been pitched.

NEW JERSEY WOMEN VOTE.

Enter with Zest Into Election for Site of Schoolhouse.

(Special to The Daily Press.)

New Brunswick, N. J., August 12.—Forty-five women voted yesterday at an election held here to decide upon the site for the erection of a schoolhouse. Some time ago it was voted to tear down the French Street school and erect a new and larger one. Then some folks wanted the site changed from French street to Somerset street, and in response to a request a new election was ordered.

Things became warm, and in endeavoring to secure votes it was learned that under the law women might vote. The election began at noon yesterday. Most of the women who voted were accompanied by their husbands. The first woman to vote was Mrs. Williamson, wife of the Mayor. Almost everyone entitled to vote did so.

The balloting lasted until 2 p. m The count was begun at once, and it was found French street had won. The opponents of the old site managed to muster 353 votes, but those who favored it had 461.

SETTLED OUT OF COURT.

Detective Blackford and Harry Marshall Come to Agreement.

The interest in the expected sensational trial in the case of Blackford against Marshall, in Justice Nash's court has met with a sudden fall. The case, as the readers of The Press remember, was brought by Detective Blackford against Harry W. Marshall to recover money alleged to be due for his services as a detective. It was thought the case would be a rather exciting one. Those who were looking forward to such an event have now been disappointed. The case has now been settled.

Counselor Winfield S. Angleman was the lawyer for the detective and City Judge De Meza represented Mr. Marshall. There were several conferences but without success. This morning the lawyers met at the Jusice's office and an agreement was reached, the exact terms of which are kept private. They are said to be satisfactory to both parties, however.

Central Repair Shops.

[Special to The Daily Press.]

Somerville August 12.—There is strong talk again of the Central Railroad establishing its repair shops in Somerville. Officials of the road have visited the old freighthouse, now occupied by the Paul T. Norton Co., recently, with a few to this change. The shops at Elizabeth were burned, and it is thought that Somerville would be a more central location than any other place along the line.

Receiver For Westfield Company.

(Special to The Daily Press.)

Westfield, August 12.—The trustees of the Ironclad Rheostat Company have become so complicated that the company has decided that the quickest and best way for all concerned is to have the business settled by a receiver. At the request of the officers of the company a receiver will probably be appointed today.

AMERICAN DAY.

Preparations Being Made for a Big Demonstration at Asbury Park.

The members of the Junior Order United American Mechanics are making elaborate plans for the observance of American Day at Asbury Park August 18th. A bicycle parade will be a feature of the observance. It is probable that it will be held at 11:30 a. m. this year instead of in the afternoon as heretofore. At a meeting of the State Board of Officers held recently the following marshals were appointed to have charge of the parade:

Marshal—William Ross, Asbury Council, No. 23, Asbury Park.

Assistant Marshals—Theodore Butterbaum, Jersey City; Frank W. Tussey, Camden; E. W. Struble, Newark; E. L. Conrow, Freehold; H. F. Hummer, Washington; W. B. LaRue, Bound Brook; S. H. Powell, Lamberton; Frank Mutta, Bridgeton; Frank H. Haight, Glassboro; H. A. Kibbe, New Brunswick.

IT IS THE FIELD AGAINST VOORHEES.

The Governor's Friends Are Encouraged at the Outlook.

SOUTH JERSEY DISCONTENT.

MUTTERINGS IN G. O. P. RANKS MAY MAKE TROUBLE FOR LEADERS.

Senator Stokes and Congressman Fowler, Who Have Governor Voorhees' Candidacy in Hand, are Working Unceasingly For Its Success—Democratic Prospects in the State Legislature.

(Special to The Daily Press.)

Trenton, August 13.—During the past week the friends of Governor Voorhees have regained much lost ground and they feel much encouraged at the outlook. Senator Stokes and Congressman Fowler, who have in charge the Governor's boom, are working unceasingly for its success. The opposition to the Governor, however, is just as earnest as ever, and efforts are being silently made to form a combination among the other candidates with the intention of swamping him in the State convention. It is the field against Voorhees. Should he loose the nomination his supporters predict dire disaster to the Republican ticket in all parts of the State.

The Republicans, after all, are not so sure of electing their candidate for Governor. There is whispering here and there that no matter who is nominated he will have a hard row to hoe. The mysterious attitude assumed by the leaders and the fear that the Democrats may become united are the reasons which make the result of the campaign seem so doubtful in some Republican eyes. And then again the factional strife which exists in the Republican ranks, particularly in Essex and Hudson counties, threaten disaster at the polls. A well-known Republican makes the prediction that if the gubernatorial candidate is taken from Essex county he is sure to be defeated. The only hope is either Voorhees or Pitney, and even then victory is not so sure.

In South Jersey there are mutterings of discontent in the Republican ranks, which, it is stated, may effect a large decrease in the vote for Congressman Loudenslager, and endanger the legislative ticket in such close counties as Salem, Cape May and Atlantic. Disappointed office-seekers are up in arms against Mr. Loudenslager, and the club they are using against him is loaded with their grievances. They do not expect to be able to defeat Mr. Loudenslager, but they will content themselves by reducing his majority so as to weaken his popularity.

Should the Democrats make gains in their legislative ticket in South Jersey their prospects for securing a majority on joint ballot would be very much brightened. The Democratic plan of campaign for capturing the Legislature, of course, has not been disclosed, nor will it be until the time comes to give it effect. It is known, however, that the Democratic leaders feel confident that even should they fail to elect their ticket in Essex county, they will have enough votes to give them a majority on joint ballot. No matter what the cost, it is stated that Senator Smith must be re-elected. He has powerful friends and the most influential support, and consequently the legislative campaign on his side will be most vigorously prosecuted.

With a strong candidate for Governor such as John P. Stockton, for instance, enthusiasm unbounded would mark the Democratic campaign, and in the midst of it even Republican citadels would be made points of attack. The capturing of the State Senate would receive earnest attention.

There are holding over eight Republican and six Democratic Senators. To retain control of the Senate the Republicans need only carry three counties. It would seem that Cumberland, Ocean and Mercer are Republican property, judging from previous records. But the Democrats believe they can wrest one, if not two of these from the Republicans, while they feel almost certain of electing their candidates in all of the counties of Hudson, Bergen, Morris and Atlantic. Then they would have the Senate.

A Republican hold-over Senator said a day or two ago that he did not feel very certain that his party would hold the Senate. He saw danger ahead, and he feared, owing to the mysterious attitude assumed by the big Republican leaders that the party machinery was considerably out of gear. Still he hoped for the best.

The situation at present on both sides seems much befogged, and a clearing of the skies is not expected for several weeks yet.

WILL COMPETE ON ROAD.

LAST OF LISTER'S ROAD RACES TO BE HELD SEPTEMBER 1ST.

List of Prizes for the Event Announced—The Distance Fifteen Miles—Course Will be the Same as at Last Race

The last of the series of three road races arranged by Harry K. Lister is now announced for Thursday afternoon, Sept. 1st. The distance has been set at fifteen miles, and the preparations and prizes for the event will be more elaborate than at any of the preceding races. Consequently a larger number of entries is expected.

The race is scheduled to start at 4 o'clock sharp. It will be held over the same course as the last one. The start will be made on Park avenue, 200 yards north of Randolph road. The riders will then go to Pumptown by Oak Tree, round the pump and return as far as Campbell's roadhouse, making the turn about the house. The course will then lead back to Pumptown, by Oak Tree as before, and back, finishing at the starting point.

A corps of competent officials and checkers will see that there is no error in the completing of the course and the finish.

A particularly acceptable list of prizes has been announced by Harry Lister, who is in charge. The first time prize will be a diamond ring, the second time, a solid gold stick pin. The prizes for the order of finishing will be as follows: First, mandolin; second, set of racing tires; third, racing suit; fourth, bicycle racing shoes; fifth, silk umbrella, and sixth, bicycle saddle.

The riders will enter with Harry K. Lister. The entries will close Monday, August 29th.

All the local men will probably enter. Richter will have to meet Ray Poole, Harry Cuming and all the other riders that he defeated in the last race and he will have to do some fast work to get away from them this time. It is hoped that Peter Simmonds will decide to enter and meet his old rivals.

Hanson and Cunningham, the Perth Amboy men who started in the other, are both anxious to start in this race and promise to bring a number of the other fast men from that town to compete. New Brunswick will send over a squad of her best riders while the other towns in the neighborhood are preparing to fit their local champions to meet in the race.

THE PEACH CROP DAMAGED.

Somerset County Growers Will Not Harvest a Full or Good Crop.

(Special to The Daily Press.)

Peapack, August 13—The peach crop in this section of Somerset county has been so badly injured by the long and continuous rains that the peach growers do not expect to be able to harvest more than half the usual crop. In addition to the short yield the peaches that are on the trees are undersized, and show signs of being shrivelled when ripe. Last year thousands of bushels of peaches were shipped to market from farms on the line of the Passaic and Delaware Railroad, and peaches were so plentiful in some parts, especially near Far Hills and Gladstone, that it was not a paying investment to pick them, buy the baskets necessary for their transportation and pay freight charges to the Newark or New York markets. In such cases the fruit was allowed to lie on the ground. There were plenty of cases where people were allowed to go in the orchard and pick as much fruit as they wanted. The first shipment of the season, amounting to 15 baskets, was sent from the Far Hills station yesterday, consigned to New York.

Which Tells the Truth.

The complainant, Mrs. Mary Eskesen, says that she did, Mrs. Maria Homan says that she did not, and now the City Judge is called upon to decide which one is telling the truth. The terrible offence was calling naughty names down on West Fourth street. This morning, Maria Honan was arraigned before City Judge DeMeza. The case was adjourned, however, for a week.

New Telephones.

The New York and New Jersey Telephone Company will soon continue the work of putting in the new style of instruments on the party wires. The new instruments are of the selective system, already described in The Press. A shipment of a hundred new instruments is expected daily.

PEACE WAVE IN SPAIN.

It is Sweeping Over That Country With Great Force.

PEACE AT ANY PRICE.

NO STATESMAN DARE SUGGEST MORE WAR.

Thought That Hostilities Will End When Proctocol is Received From Cambon—Sagasta's Triumph Talked Off—Moret the Coming Man.

Madrid, August 13, 1:07 p. m.—A wave in favor of peace at any price has assumed tidal proportions here and nothing can stop it now.

As a statement said yesterday their is not a political man in Spain strong enough to dare to even suggest the continuation of the war. The people are now thoroughly impressed with the idea that the end should come at once.

It is the universal impression in ministerial circles that immediately after the proctocol is received hostilities will cease. This means, all fighting will end after the Spanish government has received the proctocol signed by the French Ambassador, M. Cambon.

Last night all the comment in political circles was upon Senor Sagasta's great triumph while Senor Moret was pointed out as the coming man of the country.

NO PEACE THERE.

No Cessation of Hostilities in Porto Rico as Yet Reported.

(From the Union Associated Press.)

Ponce, Porto Rico, August 12, via St. Thomas, Dutch West Indies, August 13, 12:15 p. m.—The troops under Gen. Schwan have occupied Mayaguez, taking formal possession of the place without resistance.

The Spanish troops that garrisoned the town have withdrawn to Lares, nearer to Areciba, and made no effort to engage the advance of the Americans.

Gen. Brooke's command is at Guayana while his munitions and supplies are being unloaded from the transports at Arroyo, preparatory to a forward movement on his part.

Gen. Wilson is now making his headquarters at Coamo, where he is awaiting the reinforcements of cavalry and dynamite guns promised before executing the plans formulated for the advance upon Albinito.

Thursday morning there was some desultory firing between the pickets, continuing up to late last night, which was occasionally broken by volleys. The prisoners captured during the day report that a force of 2,500 Spaniards is at Albonito.

BLANCO STOPS THEM.

Notifies Spaniards at Manzanillo That Conflict Will Soon Cease.

(From the Union Associated Press.)

Washington, August 13, 11:55 a. m—Advices received this morning say that Captain General Blanco has succeeded in getting word to Manzanillo telling of the present peaceful status of affairs. Hostilities are being suspended.

FEARED FOR HIS LIFE.

SO STOREKEEPER GOLD HAD THE COLORED BOY ARRESTED.

Says That the Lad Threatened to Kill Him and Cut Out His Heart—The Prisoner was a Diminutive One.

Samuel Gold is a Hebrew. He runs a little shop up in the West End where he sells candy, tobacco and cigars to those who care to buy. Now, a few days ago Gold had some trouble with a colored individual, whom, he alleges, swore at him in horrid fashion and also threatened to kill him and cut out his heart. Gold, not caring to live under the constant fear of finding his house toppling down over his head or meeting with some other awful fate, reported to the police and swore out a complaint before City Judge Demeza.

This morning the case came up before His Honor in the dingy little court room at the city jail. Garfield Perkins was called for as the prisoner, and he marched up to the rail of justice.

Now the rail is not very high. In fact, it is not over three feet high. When the prisoner marched up his eyes just looked over the top of it, and the Judge was given a view of two wide-open eyes and a woolly head. Garfield is twelve years of age.

The Judge tried to think of a youthful offender like Perkins trying to kill Gold and cut his heart out, but his imagination would not stretch as far as that. So the Judge announced that he would investigate the case and think it over. The principals were instructed to come again next Saturday.

MORE FIGHTING REPORTED.

Despatch From Ponce Tells of Engagement—Two Americans Killed.

(From the Union Associated Press.)

Pouce, Porto Rico, August 11, via St. Thomas, August 13, 1:25 p. m.—The contemplated flank movement by the Second Wisconsin against the Spanish at Albonito has been abandoned by order of Gen Miles.

Gen. Schwan yesterday encountered 3,000 Spaniards near Hermigenros, the latter making a stubborn resistance.

The Americans fought well driving the Spaniards before them. Private Fernberg and one other were killed. Lieut. Bryon and fourteen others were wounded.

The Spanish loss is believed to be heavy. It has since been learned that eleven Spaniards were killed and sixty wounded at the fight at Coamo.

ORDERS TO DEWEY.

Instructed By President McKinley to Cease Hostilities.

(From the Union Associated Press.)

Hong Kong, August 13, 1:50 p. m.—Consul Wildman has chartered the Australian liner Australian to carry despatches to Rear Admiral Dewey at Manila.

The steamer left at five o'clock this morning bearing the order of the President to cease hostilities.

BLOCKADE ENDS.

Official Notice Given and the Blockading Warships Withdrawn.

(From the Union Associated Press.)

Washington, August 13, 1:25 p. m.—Cuba, Porto Rico and Manila are no longer in a state of blockade. Public notification of it has been made to all the powers. The vessels blockading these ports are now withdrawn.

CROSSES THE OCEAN TO GAIN A FORTUNE.

MUST SUE THE GUARDIAN.

HIS FATHER'S LAST INSTRUCTIONS WERE NOT FOLLOWED OUT.

Mr. Menzel Made the Trip a Few Weeks Ago and Succeeded in Getting the Case Into the Courts, and Now He Returns to Germany With His Family to Remain at Bresslau till May.

Mr. and Mrs. Richard Menzel and two children, Margie and Helen, sailed today from New York on the steamship Palavia, of the Hamburgh-American Line, for Bresslau, Germany, to visit Mr. Menzel's mother. They will be absent until next May.

About one month ago Mr. Menzel went to Bresslau in response to a letter from his mother stating that there is a chance to settle up the estate owned by them. He investigated the matter and secured the services of one of the best lawyers in Berlin, and the case will now be opened.

When Mr. Menzel's father died a guardian was appointed for the son. He was to invest the son's share in securities so that at the proper time the latter would be able to secure his bequest.

The guardian acted contrary to instructions and invested the money in other ways, which resulted in its loss. Now Mr. Menzel is bringing action against the guardian and the estate for what is due him, about $10,000, and the chances are that he will get the money.

Mr. and Mrs. Menzel will stop at Hotel Bresslau, which is kept by a relative, and which is one of the swell summer resorts in that part of the country. They will remain there until next May, as they do not want to cross the ocean in the winter time with their children.

While Mr. Menzel is away his music store on West Front street will be managed by Harry C. Yaeger, of Liberty street.

BASEBALL TODAY.

Riverdale F. C. and Montclair A. C. to Play Deciding Game.

There is every prospect that there will be an exciting game at the Crescent Oval this afternoon between the Riverdale Field Club, now of this city, and the Montclair Athletic Club. The recent rains have left the diamond at the Oval in rather poor condition but no time will be lost in putting it in as good condition as possible for today's game. The game is called at 3:30 o'clock. Stages will run to the Oval every ten minutes from the North avenue station.

This afternoon's game between the Riverdale Field Club and the Montclair Athletic Club will be followed by other games of interest. The management of the Riverdale team, now to be called the Plainfield team, have spared no efforts to get the best teams from the country round to play at the Crescent Oval for the remainder of the season. Next Saturday they have secured the Arlington Athletic Association team, of Arlington, N. J., a famous aggregation of semi-professional players, many of them college men who have been anxious indeed to try conclusions with the Riverdale team. For the following Saturday the team from the New York Athletic Club, New York's well-known athletic organization, will come here. The New York A. C. boys are all athletes of considerable prowess and the team is a strong one.

Two games will be played at the Crescent Oval Labor Day. Negotiations are now in progress with the Cuban Giants, the famous colored ball players, to come to this city on that occasion.

NO PERMIT.

So G. H. Kenyon Gave Up His Proposed Race Meet.

G. H. Kenyon, who held the race meet on Maltby's track a week ago, was planning to hold a twenty-five mile road race over the Fanwood-Scotch Plains course September 1st. He has now definitely decided to give the race up. He applied for permission to hold the race to Chief Grant in the absence of Mayor Fisk. The Chief was not inclined to grant it, and knowing that the race must be started at once or not at all, Kenyon gave it up.

LARGE CUCUMBER VINE.

CURIOUS PLANT THAT IS GROWING IN CHARLES STIMPSON'S GARDEN

The Seeds Resembled Acorns, But They Grow Rapidly—Increased as Much as Six Inches in One Night—Common in the West

The "California cucumber" is the homely appelation by which a rapidly-growing vine in the garden of Charles Stimpson, of West Sixth street, is known. The plant deserves a nobler name, but with true western taste for brevity and distinctness, was dubbed the cucumber, and cucumber it still remains.

The plant is a curious one, and has attracted quite a little attention on account of the enormous fruit it bears as well as its phenomenally rapid growth.

Early this spring Mr. Stimpson received from a friend five brown seeds, in shape something like an acorn. They were planted in a box in a sunny part of the house until warm weather came, when they were transplanted in the garden.

The nature of the plant which was to be grown from these seeds was not fully known, and so the subsequent development of the vine has been as much of a novelty to its owner as to others. After a long time three of the seeds sprouted and sent forth green shoots. Almost from the first they showed an inclination to rapid growth, and the three shoots have since been growing at the rate of eight or ten inches a day.

The blossoms were a delicate white, four inches across, with six drooping petals, the design and pattern being perfect and regular. The blossoms were very frail, and soon withered when separated from the vine.

When the fruit or cucumber appeared it excited great interest. Growing rapidly, it sometimes lengthened at least six inches in a night. The vines were trained on a tressel, so as to permit the cucumbers to grow downwards and hang which prevented them curling up, as is usual with plants of this kind. The vines are full now of growing cucumbers. One gigantic fellow has far outstripped the others, and last night measured 4 1 2 feet in length. It is about four inches in diameter.

This one hangs so near the root that a hole has been dug under it to permit it to grow downwards without touching the ground and curling up and the hole is deepened as occasion requires. When ripe the cucumbers are good for food.

The plant belongs to the gourd family (cucurbitaceæ) and to the branch known as the 'bur seeded cucumber." It is quite common in the west from Kansas to the Pacific coast, but is seldom seen so far east as New Jersey. Just how much longer this gigantic fellow will grow is not known, but as yet it shows no signs of turning yellow and going to seed which is their natural end.

RIVALRY BETWEEN BROTHERS.

Exciting Ride of Tom and Harry Cuming to Philadelphia.

Wednesday evening, Thomas A. Cuming and Harry Cuming returned by train from Philadelphia. They went awheel and made a rather sensational ride of it, lowering the elder Cuming's record for the course of 76 miles by 5 miles. There has been a friendly rivalry between the two brothers of late. A year or two, Tom was the better of the two and he found great enjoyment in outriding his younger brother. Last year, they went together to Philadelphia. Harry kept up with his brother as far as Bristol and then had to give up. The elder Cuming made the distance in 4 hours and 43 minutes. Early last Tuesday morning they started off. Harry has been riding a great deal of late and was in fine form, while the elder brother was rather soft as a result of considerable office work. They set a lively pace all the way, making up all they lost in the bad spots by holding a fast clip whenever good roads appeared. Down the Bristol pike it became a race. Neither could shake the other, but the younger rider made his brother put forth his utmost endeavors to hold the pace. As it was, they finished in 4 hours and 33 minutes. They then visited friends at the Oxford Club and at Mullica Hills. In returning from Mullica Hills Wednesday morning they rode the twenty miles through a driving rain.

Fell Overboard From a House-boat.

Miss Sarah Ball, of Myrtle avenue, met with a rather exciting experience two weeks ago while cruising on the house-boat of her father, F. H. Ball, in Great South Bay. While lowering a pail over the side for water, she lost her balance and fell in. Her brother, Fred C. Ball, saw her fall and sprang overboard. He soon landed her in a place of safety. No ill-effects followed the unexpected bath.

MEMBERS LOSE FAITH IN LOAN ASSOCIATION.

N. J. Central Building and Loan Association Under Suspicion.

COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE.

PLAINFIELD WILL CO-OPERATE WITH BLOOMFIELD BRANCH.

It is Said That the Officers of the Concern do Not Provide the Members With Information That Satisfies Them Everything is All Right—Lawyer Codington and A. B. Thorn Appointed as the Committee.

There was a meeting of the stockholders of the New Jersey Central Building and Loan Association last evening in the Board of Trade rooms for the purpose of taking some action regarding the interests of the members. It has been reported that the condition of the association at the Newark headquarters is unsafe. In response to a request from the Bloomfield branch, a committee was appointed to confer with a like committee from the Bloomfield branch for the purpose of ascertaining what steps can be taken against the officers at headquarters. Lawyer W. R. Codington and A. B. Thorn were appointed on the committee and they will at once communicate with the committee from Bloomfield and appoint a time for a meeting to be held soon.

The members of the Bloomfield branch say that there is something wrong with the management of the association, and after repeated efforts, it is alleged, they have been unable to get the information they seek. They have examined the books at headquarters and cannot satisfy themselves that the accounts are straight.

It appears that at least $40,000 has been received at headquarters since the association was formed a year ago last January, and of that amount it is said that about $12,000 is out on second mortgages of doubtful character. All the money in cash that the committee was able to find was $140 in the Essex County National Bank, of Newark. When the officers of the association were asked concerning the rest of the money received they were unable to give a satisfactory account of it.

It is for these reasons that it has been deemed best to take some other action regarding the management of the association at headquarters.

STATE ENDEAVOR CONVENTION.

To be Held in Asbury Park in September.

The twelfth annual convention of the New Jersey Christian Endeavor Union will be held at Asbury Park, September 28-30. A special Christian Endeavor train, on the Central Railroad of New Jersey, for Endeavorers and their friends, will leave Somerville Wednesday morning, September 28th, about 9 o'clock, going through to Asbury Park; returning, will leave Asbury Park Saturday morning, October 1st. Only those having special Christian Endeavor tickets, issued and for sale by the transportation committee, will be taken on this train. Persons from stations beyond Somerville and Elizabethport, or from branch roads, can secure tickets from the committee and connect at either of the above named stations. The committee include Rev. T. E. Davis and F. N. Voorhees, of Bound Brook; Rev. D. R. Warne, of Kingston, and Rev. W. E. Davis, of Lebanon.

An Important Purchase.

Edward White spent all day Wednesday in the auction rooms in New York attending the underwriters sale of the stock of one of the largest importers in New York. He secured many good bargains in towels, table linens, napkins, white bed spreads, fine portieres, blankets, fancy table covers, embroidery linens, pillow case linen, stair crashes, ladies' and children's hosiery, etc. All are now on sale, and it will be well worth your while to see the great values.

Seeking the Finny Tribe.

Justice V. W. Nash and his friend, Wm. Dyas, of Cold Springs, N. Y., went to Perth Amboy this morning in pursuit of members of the finny tribe. The Judge has long been promised a visit by his friend, and it was agreed that they should go fishing when that event occurred. Last night the friend came and this morning the promise was kept. They are considering the advisability of running a special train from Perth Amboy to transport the fish they catch.

—A watermelon sociable and free entertainment will be held at the vacant store room of George Feller's, corner of Pearl and Warren streets, tonight under the auspices of the Christian church.

THE WAR AT AN END

M. Cambon for Spain and Sec. Day for U. S., Sign the Protocol.

AN ARMISTICE DECLARED

Spain is to Give Up Cuba, Porto Rico and All Other West Indian Islands Are Ceded to the United States, Also One of the Ladrones. Manila to Be Held Pending Negotiations.

Washington, Aug. 13.—The protocol preliminary to a treaty of peace between the United States and Spain was signed at the White House at 4.22 o'clock yesterday afternoon. Secretary Day acted for the United States and M. Cambon, the French ambassador, for the government of Spain.

Immediately after the signatures were affixed telegraphic orders were sent to the military commanders in Cuba, Porto Rico and the Philippines to cease hostilities, as peace had been restored. These orders had been prepared in advance, in order that no time might be lost, and placed in the custody of Adjutant General Corbin. This fact gave rise to the rumor that the orders had already been dispatched. This is still denied absolutely and categorically by Secretary Alger and Adjutant General Corbin, the latter speaking for the president.

The Protocol.

The protocol provides:

1. That Spain will relinquish all claim of sovereignty and title to Cuba.

2. That Porto Rico and other Spanish islands in the West Indies and an island in the Ladrones, to be selected by the United States, shall be ceded to the latter.

3. That the United States will occupy and hold the city, bay and harbor of Manila, pending the conclusion of a treaty of peace which shall determine the control, disposition and government of the Philippines.

4. That Cuba, Porto Rico and other Spanish islands in the West Indies shall be immediately evacuated, and that commissioners, to be appointed within ten days, shall, within thirty days from the signing of the protocol, meet at Havana and San Juan, respectively, to arrange and execute the details of the evacuation.

5. That the United States and Spain will each appoint not more than five commissioners to negotiate and conclude a treaty of peace. The commissioners are to meet at Paris not later than October 1.

6. On the signing of the protocol, hostilities will be suspended and notice to that effect will be given as soon as possible by each government to the commanders of its military and naval forces.

Arranging for Signing.

Washington, Aug. 13.—President McKinley was notified at about 2 o'clock yesterday of the receipt of a dispatch from the Madrid government by M. Cambon, and was informed that the protocol would be signed later in the afternoon, the exact hour to be fixed by Secretary Day.

WILLIAM R. DAY, SECRETARY OF STATE

The dispatch authorizing the French ambassador to sign the protocol looking to a cessation of hostilities between Spain and the United States began to arrive at the embassy at 1 o'clock.

It was said at the embassy that as soon as the translation has been completed M. Thiebaut would take a copy to the state department and arrange for the visit of the ambassador to sign the protocol with Secretary Day.

M. Thiebaut, first secretary of the French embassy, arrived at the state department at 2.45 o'clock to make arrangements with Judge Day for the visit of M. Cambon to sign the protocol.

M. Thiebaut was at once shown into Judge Day's room. He brought with him a copy of the cable dispatch defining M. Cambon's powers and certifying to his authority in behalf of Spain.

The interview between Secretary Day and M. Thiebaut closed at 3.05 o'clock, and the secretary immediately went to the White House to consult with the president.

When Secretary Day left the White House at 3.20 o'clock he said that the protocol would be signed at the White House between 4 and 5 o'clock.

It had been originally planned to have the signing take place at the state department, but at the request of the president, who desired to witness it, it was decided that M. Cambon should meet Secretary Day at the White House.

The cabinet adjourned at noon, having spent the morning in discussing routine affairs and speculating on the outcome of the protocol, assuming that its execution was certain to take place shortly. Much satisfaction was expressed over the prospect of an early resumption of peaceful conditions and a return to the consideration of the ordinary matters of government.

After the order for the cessation of hostilities comes the formal armistice, to be followed in turn by the appointment of peace commissioners, the preparation of a treaty and its ratification by the Senate, which will be called in special session, just before the regular meeting time of Congress in December.

While the work of the peace commission is being performed the president will be occupied with studying the intricate problem of establishing forms of government, temporary and permanent, in Cuba, Porto Rico and the Philippines, a delicate and perplexing task requiring the most profound investigation and careful handling.

M. JULES CAMBON FRENCH AMBASSADOR.

It is still believed that Secretary Day will not leave the state department until the treaty of peace is arranged, notwithstanding that he is to be president of the peace commission. There is much speculation as to the make up of the commission. The names of Senators Allison and Gorman are mentioned.

TOWNS SURRENDER TO STONE.

He is Taking Them Faster Than He Wants Them.

Ponce, Porto Rico, Aug. 10, via St. Croix, Aug. 12.—Some shooting was reported at Coamo late this afternoon, the Spaniards having attacked the American outposts, but no damage was done. The American outpost station is impregnable against an attack by any number of the enemy.

General Wilson is here to-night in conference with General Miles.

General Roy Stone has pushed on toward Arecibo and Lares with his handful of men, taking towns on the way faster than they are wanted. He has impressed some natives into his service, and these, together with the men of the Signal Corps, who accompany him, made a demonstration at night before Arecibo.

The object of the demonstration was to give the Spanish an idea that they had better not attack him. He pursued the same tactics at Lares, and the demonstration brought from the Spaniards an offer to surrender.

General Stone refused to accept this offer, however, on account of the smallness of his force, which numbers only about 200 men, all told. The Spanish force, on the other hand, was double that number, but the Spanish made no aggressive movement.

General Stone sent a messenger last night to General Miles with a request for men and also for money with which to pay the natives who had worked in improving the roads. The messenger returned alone to-day.

The taking of Arecibo and Lares before Generals Schwan and Garretson are ready to form a junction of their forces would change the plan, which was to give the Spanish in all quarters a chance to run to San Juan if they were so inclined.

THE PRESIDENT DECLINES.

Writes to Major Gen. Breckinridge That He Cannot Visit Chickamauga.

Washington, Aug. 13.—In answer to a request that he visit Chickamauga, the president has sent the following to Major General Breckinridge, declining the invitation:

Major General Breckinridge, Chickamauga Park, Ga.:

Replying to your invitation, I beg to say that it would give me great pleasure to show by a personal visit to Chickamauga Park my high regard for the 40,000 troops of your command, who so patriotically responded to the call for volunteers and who have been upward of two months making ready for any service and any sacrifice the country might require. My duties, however, will not admit of absence from Washington at this time.

The highest tribute to pay to the soldier is to say that he performed his full duty. The field of duty is determined by his government, and wherever that chances to be is the place of honor. All have helped in the great cause, whether in camp or battle, and when peace comes all will be alike entitled to the nation's gratitude.

WM. McKINLEY.

Big Reception for Our Soldiers.

New York, Aug. 13.—A committee, consisting of Gens. C. H. T. Collis, Daniel Butterfield and Daniel Sickles, called on Acting Mayor Guggenheimer yesterday to request his active co-operation in the plan to organize a great reception here for the Santiago soldiers after they are released from Montauk Point.

The purpose is to invite the president and his officers from Washington to review the parade and the committee wishes to get an appropriation through the municipal assembly to defray expenses.

The acting mayor expressed himself as thoroughl yin accord with the movement and said he had heard Mayor Van Wyck express the same views. The mayor will appoint a committee of 100 citizens to arrange the details of the celebration.

More Paymasters for Manila.

Washington, Aug. 13.—The war department has decided to send more paymasters to Manila. They will take a million dollars with them to pay the troops in the Philippines. A million dollars also will be sent to pay the men in Porto Rico, but the paymasters at Santiago will be sent over to Porto Rico to distribute the money.

The Envelope Contract Case.

Washington, Aug. 13.--In the district court yesterday Judge Cole rendered a decision in the Purcell Company envelope contract case, denying the application for an injunction against the government. Judge Cole ruled that if the company had a valid contract it had a remedy in the court of claims.

DUN'S WEEKLY REVIEW.

Peace Talk Results Favorably on Business and a Number of Orders Are Placed.

New York, Aug. 13.--Prospects of peace have had a curious influence of business contracts, not quite explainable on common sense grounds. Nobody really feared disaster, or exhaustion of national resources, and nobody feared that anybody else was afraid either. Yet orders unusual in number and size have been placed since Spain asked for peace. In some industries the gain has been large for about two weeks, while in some textile manufactures it has only begun to appear this week, but it involves a considerable increase in the working force. Crop prospects are, on the whole, more encouraging, for the government's latest report as to corn is much larger than the commercial estimates, and its cotton return promises a heavy yield, while allowance is made for its habitual error in its wheat return. Money markets show no sign of possible disturbance, securities are stronger, and there is no harmful speculation in stocks or products. Rarely has the financial outlook been more nearly unclouded.

While wheat is 4 cents higher for the week, there is less doubt than a week ago that it will rule lower during the coming year. The general holding back of grain by farmers and consequent heavy shrinkage in western receipts have reduced the visible supply below all past records, but everybody understands that at this date many times that quantity is almost within a day's run of Chicago. The more effective change is the decrease in exports which have been only 3,237,819 bushels, flour included, from both coasts, against 3,832,974 last year, showing but a slight increase of half a million bushels for two weeks, compared with last year. The price of corn has declined a shade for cash, and the government report promising almost 2,000 million bushels against 1,825 million bushels promised by commercial accounts, has more weight because the official returns as to corn have not been systematically misleading and everywhere discredited.

In spite of all wars of rates, the railroads are doing an enormous and profitable business, with a heavy year's traffic to come.

The iron and steel trade fully supports inferences drawn from recent events. The demand for steel is so heavy that some of the biggest concerns have been buying, one taking 40,000 tons, advancing the price at Pittsburg from $14.50 to $15.25, which was at last refused.

In the minor metals there is heavy buying, especially of copper, at 11.75 cents for Lake, and of lead, which closed at 4 cents, while tin rose with London quotations to 16.25 cents, reported arrivals being small.

Textile works have been sleeping, but are awaking. The demand for woolen goods is now much better, although not yet extensive enough to warrant paying the prices asked for new wool, and nearly all the buying has been of old stock.

The volume of business reflected by bank exchanges is 5.6 per cent. lower than last year, and 24.4 per cent. larger than in 1892, when a holiday accounted for a loss of one day.

President's Proclamation.

Washington, Aug. 13.—The following proclamation was issued by President McKinley late last night:

Whereas by a protocol concluded and signed August 12, 1898, by William R. Day, secretary of state of the United States, and his excellency, Jules Cambon, ambassador extraordinary and plenipotentiary of the Republic of France at Washington, respectively representing for this purpose the government of the United States and the government of Spain, the governments of the United States and Spain have formally agreed upon the terms on which negotiations for the establishment of peace between the two countries shall be undertaken; and

Whereas, it is in said protocol agreed that upon its conclusion and signature hostilities between the two countries shall be suspended, and that notice to that effect shall be given as soon as possible by each government to the commanders of its military and naval forces;

Now, therefore, I, William McKinley, president of the United States, do, in accordance with the stipulation of the protocol, declare and proclaim, on the part of the United States, a suspension of hostilities, and do hereby command that orders be immediately given through the proper channels, to the commanders of the military and naval forces of the United States to abstain from all acts inconsistent with this proclamation.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the city of Washington this 12th day of August, in the year of our Lord, one thousand eight hundred and ninety-eight, and of the independence of the United States the one hundred and twenty-third.

WILLIAM McKINLEY.

By the president,
WILLIAM R. DAY,
Secretary of State.

Tight Collars Should Be Avoided.

Not long ago, according to an English journal, an American gentleman was found dead in a compartment of the train from Nice to Paris. The inquest showed that his collar had actually strangled him. There is a point of inhibition near the "Adam's apple," and if it be compressed the respiration is suddenly arrested, producing asphyxia. A collar which presses just a little when the wearer is upright can press much more when he is seated; and if he falls asleep, congestion, followed by coma and death, may ensue.

Somebody gives the following antithetical advice: "Drink less, breathe more; eat less, chew more; ride less, walk more; clothe less, bathe more; worry less, work more; waste less, give more; write less, read more; preach less, practice more."

As yet it is undetermined which is the worse--the man who can sing and won't, or the man who can't sing and will.

The Clearing Sale of Shirt Waists.

With the close of July comes the greatest price-cutting—the most attractive values ever offered. The remaining stock is divided into two lots, 49c. and 75c., former prices ranged from 75c to $1.50. There's not 200 waists in the entire assortment, so we advise an early call for the best selection.

Sailor Hats and Untrimmed Hats 49c.

This means that each and every hat, irrespective of former price, will be 49c. Of especial interest should the price be, as none have been less than 75c, and the styles offered are all of this season's production.

Sounds cheap, but the hundred or more shirts that go on sale have been selling at 75c., 85c. and $1. The patterns are all new and desirable, the kind that you would like. Clearing time is here, and the new price, 59c., will be the means of their quick disposal.

AFFAIRS AT SANTIAGO

Dismissal of the Spanish Officials Pleases the Cubans.

EMBARKATION OF TROOPS

Municipal Authorities in Outlying Towns to Be Retained. Arrangements for the Surrender of Baracoa and Other Places. Embarkation of a Portion of the 71st on the St. Louis and St. Paul.

Santiago de Cuba, Aug. 12.—The Cubans express great satisfaction over the dismissal of the civil government here, the retention of which, since the occupation of the town by the United States forces, had been a source of much contention.

Ros, the governor, was a major under Caprilles, and when the latter left with Admiral Cervera, Ros was made governor. Since the surrender his occupation of the office has been one of the principal causes of Cuban grievance.

The municipal authorities throughout the province are to be retained. There is to be no interference with education or religion.

The arrangements for the surrender of the outlying towns, Baracoa, etc., still in the occupation of the Spaniards, will be proceeded with as soon as possible. Lieutenant Miley of General Shafter's staff, goes to-morrow to receive the surrender of Baracoa.

The steamer Breakwater has arrived here with eight doctors, and a quantity of hospital supplies.

Embarkation of Shafter's Troops.

Washington, Aug. 13.—The war department has received the following dispatch concerning the embarkation of troops of General Shafter's army:

Santiago, via Hayti, Aug. 12.

Adjutant General, Washington:

St. Louis left the Morro during the night of the 11th, with the Ninth and Tenth infantry and two companies of the Seventy-first New York. St. Paul should have left Guantanamo last evening or this morning with Second infantry, four companies of the Seventy-first New York and General Kent, with his headquarters. Morteno leaves in a very few minutes with Twenty-first infantry. Rio Grande with Colonel Sargent's regiment on board has just arrived.

SHAFTER.

Colonel Sargent's regiment is the Second regiment of immunes.

Report of Fighting in Porto Rico.

Madrid, Aug. 13.—An official dispatch has been received here from San Juan de Porto Rico confirming the report that the American troops have occupied Mayaguez, the important town on the western coast of Porto Rico. The dispatch adds that the Spanish garrison, consisting of a battalion of infantry and some guerillas, with two mountain guns, commanded by Colonel Toto, made a sortie from the place, and during the engagement which followed the Spaniards had three men killed and nine wounded.

Some gendarmes, it is announced, overtook the Castillo band of insurgents at Cuevas yesterday and exchanged shots with the insurgents, who retired into the mountains.

THE AMERICA'S CUP CHALLENGE.

A Ninety-Footer of Valkyrie's Dimensions to Be Built.

London, Aug. 13.—When Sir Thomas Lipton, who has challenged for the America's cup with the Shamrock, through the Royal Ulster Yacht Club, received the news of the acceptance of his challenge from a representative of the Associated Press, he expressed delight at the promptness of the action taken and said:

"I expected they would deal with the challenge in a business like way, but I did not expect they would be so prompt. I know I will be as fairly treated in New York as I would be on the Clyde. I am certain the boat which wins will be the best boat. Fife starts for New Yor kin a few days, taking the dimensions of the Shamrock to hand to the committee of the New York Yacht Club. All I can say is that she will be a ninety-footer and of about the same dimensions of the Valkyrie."

Red Cross Gifts Distributed.

Washington, Aug. 13.--Surgeon General Sternberg has written a letter to Cleveland H. Dodge, chairman of the supply committee of the Red Cross society, acknowledging the receipt of $5,000, which he will distribute. He will send $1,000 to Colonel Forwood, the chief surgeon at Montauk Point, for the purchase of delicacies for the sick arriving at that place. To Lieutenant Colonel Harvard at Santiago, $1,000, for use of the sick at that place; $1,000 to Colonel Greenleaf, chief surgeon of General Miles's staff in Porto Rico; $1,000 to Lieutenant Colonel Hoff, chief surgeon at Camp Thomas, Chickamauga; $500 to Major Hale, in charge of the United States hospital at Fort Thomas, Ky., and $500 to Major Fay, in charge of the United States hospital at Fort McPherson, Ga.

Hot Wave in California.

San Francisco, Aug. 13.—Reports from Sacramento, Stockton, Fresno, Los Angeles and many other interior points show that yesterday was the hottest day of the year and one of the warmest ever experienced in the state.

The thermometer ranged from ninety-one degrees at Los Angeles to 122 at Darmington, in the San Joaquin valley.

At Sacramento it reached 110 degrees, the highest on record.

Hawaiian Sugar Output.

San Francisco, Aug. 13.—The directors of the Hawaiian Commercial Company have decided to propose to the stockholders an increase of capital stock from $10,000,000 to $15,000,000.

The directors propose also to increase the output of the sugar plantations and mills, and to introduce improved methods of manufacture on the islands.

Capt. Clark's Visit.

Cheyenne, Aug. 13.--Captain Clark of the battleship Oregon is expected in Cheyenne in a few days for a three weeks' visit to his brother-in-law, N. R. Davis.

FROM A SPANISH POINT OF VIEW.

A Note Issued to the Public. What Spain Expects to Secure.

Madrid, Aug. 13.--The question of the acceptance of the protocol having been settled and its signature explicitly and definitely authorized, the government is now considering the domestic situation, with regard to the best means of allaying the excitement and propagating the idea that Spain's surrender is not so complete as indicated by the bald terms of the protocol. As the first step in this direction, a semi-official note has been issued. It is as follows:

"The government is of the opinion that the most critical period of the peace negotiations has now arrived, as it depends on the arrangement of details as to whether the peace will be more or less advantageous. Spain wishes to preserve her sovereignty over the whole of the Philippines, to which she proposes to accord all political and administrative reforms consistent with the maintenance of her sovereignty.

"In regard to the evacuation of Cuba and Porto Rico it will be asked that the army be allowed to depart honorably, and that assurances be given guaranteeing that Spanish and foreign interests will not suffer.

"The army, which has not been conquered, will return to Spain with its guns, arms and munitions.

"In regard to the Cuban debt, as the United States refuses to assume it, Spain will endeavor to arrange with the Cuban treasury to pay it when the island is able.

"The question of the treaty of commerce will lead to considerable discussion, and the matter will be submitted to a commission of diplomatists, under the presidency of Senor Castillo."

The Liberal thinks the only bright feature of the peace treaty is the immediate suspension of hostilities, "so that our unhappy soldiers will no longer have to die without knowing wherefor."

It congratulates the country upon the fact that the war is ended, though Spanish rule in America is completely terminated. "We reserve the right to criticise the protocol," it says, "when freedom is restored to the press."

In conclusion it remarks: "Those who pretend that the events of the last three years were simply accidents which do not affect Spanish history, are deceiving themselves."

TROOPS TO LEAVE FOR MANILA.

Regulars and Recruits to Go on the Arizona.

San Francisco, Aug. 13.--General Merriam has issued an order which indicates that the troops to go to Manila on the transport Arizona next Sunday will consist of parts of the Eighteenth infantry, Twenty-third infantry, regulars, now here, and the Second Oregon recruits, Tenth Pennsylvania recruits, First Colorado recruits and First Nebraska recruits, making a total of 1,620 men.

The Scandia has been ordered to be ready next Thursday to take the Seventh California and possibly part of the Third artillery. The remainder of the Third artillery is ordered for service in Alaska.

General Merriam has sent word to the Red Cross Society that he would allow it to send to Manila six trained male nurses on the steamer Arizona, and an equal number on the Scandia.

Washington, Aug. 13.--The following dispatch has been received at the state department from Consul General Wildman at Hong Kong:

"Information General Corbin, steamship Sidney left Nagasaki twenty-seventh, Australia twenty-ninth, Pekin on the sixth, all direct 'Frisco without a stop.

"WILDMAN."

Yesterday Secretary Alger cabled to General Merritt asking when the transports sent to Manila would return and this reply of Consul General Wildman gives the information desired. It is expected that the ships will reach San Francisco about the 17th. The aggregate capacity of these vessels is about 3,000 troops, and that number will be at once embarked for manila.

MISSIONARIES KILLED.

Run Down in Yokohama Harbor.

Victoria, B. C., Aug. 13.--The steamer Victoria has arrived from the Orient bringing news of a frightful accident in Yokohama harbor, by which two women missionaries of the American Mission Board, the Misses Simmons and Allen, lost their lives.

The ladies had a number of friends who were journeying to this side of the Pacific by the Empress of Japan, and went out in a launch to see them off.

The good byes being said, the two ladies were going ashore in the launch, when a junk, which was sailing into the harbor, swiftly before the wind, came in collision with the launch. The junk's bowsprit struck Miss Simmons with terrific force in the abdomen and impaled her, killing her instantly.

Miss Allen was struck about the shoulders and head by the unwieldy bow, and was cut and lacerated terribly. She lingered in pain for the greater part of a day in the Yokohama hospital, and died on July 30, a few hours before the Victoria sailed.

To Abandon Two Bad Camps.

Tampa, Fla., Aug. 13.--The camps at Tampa and Fernandina will be evacuated within a week. The order for the Fourth Army Corps to go to Huntsville, Ala., came last night and the movement will begin in about two or three days.

The Fifth cavalry expects to leave to-day for Montauk Point and the Fifth infantry will leave shortly for its post at Fort McPherson, Ga.

The Fourth Army Corps has been ordered into summer quarters at the Huntsville camp, and includes all of the volunteer regiments at Fernandina and in Tampa.

Capture of Mayaguez.

Washington, Aug. 13.—According to a dispatch received from Ponce, General Schwan has followed up his victory over the Spanish at Hormigueros on Wednesday by capturing the town of Mayaguez, the third largest city in Porto Rico. The 1,200 Spaniards whom he drove back at the first named place did not rally at Mayaguez, but, picking up what remaining force there was in that city, retired to Lares. Schwan's troops entered the city at nine o'clock yesterday morning. He sent scouts in front to find out the next rallying place of the Spaniards.

WORK IN CAMP WIKOFF

Order Is Being Evolved and Much Better Conditions Prevail.

STARS AND STRIPES RAISED

Col. Hecker Chief of Transportation Has Control of the Preparations for the Troops and Matters Are Progressing Satisfactorily. The Water Supply Is Increasing. The First Death in Camp.

Montauk, L. I., Aug. 13.--Out of chaos has come a rough kind of order. Yesterday morning Colonel Hecker, the chief of transportation, arrived from Washington on a special train of the Long Island railroad. No soldiers had arrived since noon of the day before as General Young directed that all the troop trains be stopped until the camp could be gotten into better shape. Five hundred Rough Riders, under Major Dunn and Captain Curry, are scattered along the way. They are expected at any hour.

The storm has passed over and the conditions are more auspicious. The men have resumed work in the fields and are pushing it rapidly. Colonel Hecker has taken rigorous hold of affairs and he will solve all problems of transportation and arrangement. The unanimous verdict is that a grave error has been made in rushing troops here from Florida before preparations to receive them could be made.

The first flag was hoisted by the First Regular cavalry yesterday morning, and wild and demonstrative enthusiasm prevailed.

A good supply of water was struck in a ten foot well and pumps are at work. Within a few days the full supply of 250,000 gallons a day will be obtained. Two thousand gallons of hygea water sent by the Red Cross arrived yesterday and 1,000 more gallons are expected this afternoon.

Three government tugs are here to assist the transports when they arrive.

The marine disinfecting barge Protector arrived at 10 o'clock yesterday morning and anchored in Fort Pond bay, nea rthe Red Cross yacht, which came in the night before. The revenue cutter Dexter will also assist in quarantine work. Deep sea divers have been examining the foundations of the iron pier and find them in good condition.

During the night over 100 mules belonging to the recruits of the Tenth cavalry got away and scampered toward Amagansett. It is hard work corraling them again.

The first death among the soldiers in camp occurred Thursday afternoon. F. A. McKinley, a teamster of the Sixth cavalry, 43 years old, died suddenly on his wagon at the railroad station. He had been complaining for several days and stated in the morning that he was going into the hospital. While holding his team he dropped dead. The ambulance was called and his body taken to a temporary morgue, which has been put up in the rear of the general hospital. Yesterday Dr. Ira Brown performed a post mortem examination. The teamster will receive burial in a cemetery to be marked out to-day by General Young.

There are now seventy-five men in the general hospital. All of these are faring well.

Landing the Sick.

The general camp is situated about two miles to the east and north of the railroad depot, and the quarantined section will be three miles from the same point. At first it was decided to land sick suspects and all at the larger of the two piers on Fort Pond bay, a stone's throw to the westward of the depot. Thursday it was announced, however, that the sick will be taken from the transports in lighters, and landed at the second or smaller pier, which is now being used by fishermen. This dock is the property of the Montauk association.

A single path from the pier winds up to the broad plateau, back of which the detention and other hospital tents are located, or will be. The general hospital will have 500 beds. The number of cots for the isolated, suspect and detention camps, which will be some little distance from the regular camp hospital, have not, of course, been decided upon.

The arrival of the transports will settle that point. Up to noon yesterday, however, thirty tents in all, fully equipped as regards cots and flooring, had been set up for the exclusive use of yellow fever victims. The single road leading to the isolated camp will be strongly guarded by soldiers both night and day.

Robbers Sieze a Train.

St. Joseph, Mo., Aug. 13.--The incoming Omaha flyer on the Burlington road was held up at Dug Hill, two miles north of here, at nine o'clock last night by five or six well armed men. After securing possession of the express car, the robbers rolled the Adams Express Company's small safe from the car door into a wagon and endeavored to haul it away. They abandoned their task, however, and soon dumped the safe upon the highway. It was recovered two hours after the hold up.

Although several shots were fired to intimidate the train men, none of the passengers was molested.

The McCoy-Corbett Fight.

Buffalo, N. Y., Aug. 13.--Charles M. Wilson, manager and secretary of the Hawthorne Athletic Club, said yesterday that he would continue to make preparations for the Corbett-McCoy contest regardless of the result of the ministers' meeting held Thursday, at which a letter was read from the sheriff declaring his intention to stop the fight.

He said he had secured the best legal advice in New York and this city, and there was no intention of violating the law.

Governor Will Not Interfere.

Albany, Aug. 13.—Governor Black has not received any application to interfere in the McCoy-Corbett fight which is scheduled to take place in the vicinity of Buffalo next month. The governor would not take any action in the matter should an application be made because he would not care to anticipate that the local authorities would permit the laws to be violated.

Jersey Soldiers May Not Vote.

A stir has been created in political circles by the discovery that the new election law, passed at the last session of the Legislature, provides for the acceptance of the soldiers' vote from the field only "in time of war." The probability of an immediate cessation of hostilities means that no state of war will exist on election day, and unless the New Jersey regiments are discharged prior to that date it is estimated that about 6,000 voters will lose their right of franchise.

In New Jersey 6,000 votes either way might decide the result of the State election, inasmuch as the net Republican plurality in the State last fall was only 1,258. For that reason the leaders, both Republicans and Democrats, have been working hard to capture the soldier vote and have already prepared the necessary blanks ready for forwarding to all points where New Jersey volunteers and regulars are stationed.

In making these preparations it was not assumed that the war would cease before election day, but as soon as it became apparent that it would, a careful study of the law was made, and the first section has caused the politicians no end of worriment. It reads as follows:

"Section 1. Whenever in time of war any qualified elector of this State shall be in the actual military service of this State or of the United States in the army or navy thereof, and by reason thereof be sent from his election district, such absent elector shall be entitled to vote as fully as if he were present at his place of residence, in the manner hereinafter provided."

Senator Foster M Voorhees, who became Governor of the State when John W. Griggs resigned to become Attorney-General of the United States, is much concerned over the interpretation of the new law. He is a candidate for the Republican nomination for Governor, and his strength lay in his great popularity with the volunteers, who he insisted should have all necessary equipments before permitting their removal from the State camp at Sea Girt. Governor Voorhees said he had not considered the law carefully until today, and he proposes to submit it at once to Attorney-General Gray for a judicial interpretation.

The War is Over.

The war is over—the most welcome words which the United States has heard since Grant and Lee met under the apple tree at Appomatox. Not the gratification, however, that comes to us bringing hope of relief from defeat and oppression, but a sentiment that a victorious nation receives at the height of its powers as an end to a conflict into which it entered only because the welfare of humanity demanded it.

Dewey's magnificent victory, the valorous charge up San Juan hill, the destruction of Cervera's fleet and the surrender of Santiago were events that thrilled the people with patriotism and scattered the enemy's forces, but not one or all—except as they brought nearer and surer an end to the ravages of a war—compare with the intense satisfaction felt at the realization of truth in the words—the war is over. Glorious, indeed, they are.

Hawaiian Politics.

The people of the Hawaiian Islands, white and brown, are already beginning to feel the political fever hot in their veins. The commissioners appointed to formulate the basis on which they will come to the United States in territorial form are now on their way to Honolulu. It will probably not be later than October when they will have finished their labors, and congress will doubtlessly dispose of the matter by proper legislation early in the session. The fact that President Dole is not much discussed in political circles as the probable new governor of the territory is significant. It is known at Washington that though on general consideration of personal fitness and experience he would be the right selection no choice could be more distasteful to the majority of the islanders. The cause is not far to seek, and it carries with it the whole Iliad of recent Hawaiian history and the seed of what is to come. Mr. Dole was the representative of the white man's, or "missionary," party, so called, and as such the most influential in causing the late revolution. That party, though the agent of a most important and progressive work, was very small in numbers if large in wealth and influence. However the native Hawaiians may rest content or even rejoice at the latest change of status they do not carry pleasant memories of the chief agents.

Of course the commissioners can only settle on the broadest base of suffrage in determining that question at the outside. It will be for the territorial legislature later in Hawaiian evolution to define conditions more accurately. Here, the indications show, will be the first great political battle. The white man's party will unquestionably struggle obstinately to establish ultimate suffrage on a property qualification sufficient to exclude many of the natives. The brown man's party will insist on a qualification not more exacting than the ability to read and write at the worst. This promises the first great collision. A second issue already looms up, which may split the whites among themselves. This will be the problem of the contract employment of Asiatics, of whom there are already 10,000 in the islands, invaluable to the planter and the country interest, detested by the merchants, mechanics and artisans. It is the Pacific coast issue with the Chinese even more seriously complicated. These are two of the questions, though the most ominous at present, which will soon set the Hawaiian pot of politics boiling over.

Ministerial Vacations.

It has often been made a text of reproach aimed against churches and their pastors that the sacred edifices are shut, or at least their services greatly diminished in interest, during the summer months. The fact that many of the ministers, especially those of city churches and of the Protestant denominations, take a vacation ranging from one to three months is charged as a neglect of religious duty. Scoffers indeed insinuate that it is another proof that preachers of the gospel in heart look on their business as a trade, not as a sacred dedication wherein one must labor in season and out of season. This has a lack of sincerity which rings of malice. One cannot even labor intensely in saving souls for 10 or 11 months of the year without being pretty well pumped dry of vital force and needing rest. The pastor of a big city parish, if he lives up to his opportunities, is a very hardworked parson, quite as much so as the busy lawyer or doctor. He does not need become a victim of fanatical zeal to prove his clerical usefulness. It is to be regretted that there are those who expect too much of fallible human strength. Piety cannot ignore the need of physical energy. The editor of The Church Economist offers another consideration. He claims that the forces of evil are less active in the summer—as, for example, the theaters (he ignores the roof gardens)—and argues that even the devil grows languid under extreme heat, though he of the horns and hoof is ordinarily credited with a salamander constitution. But, whether or not the devil in going about under the summer solstice seeking whom he may devour is less voracious than usual, there is no question that his most redoubted opponents do not lessen their chance of victory by keeping themselves in the fittest condition for the crusade.

The public school system of the United States is about to be introduced into South Africa under the auspices of Cecil Rhodes and Earl Grey of the British South Africa company. Bishop Joseph Hartwell of the Methodist church will have charge of the movement, which bids fair to be an important one for African welfare.

There could not be a patent on the Jernegan method of extracting gold from sea water. The process is as old as the world, when humanity began to be differentiated into fools and knaves. The pockets of credulous gulls will always remain a mine richer than any in the Klondike.

Dr. Eastman, the educated Sioux who married a paleface poetess, gives the quaint reason for his Sioux brethren bearing a bitter grudge against Spain that it was she who discovered the continent and thus enabled the white usurpers to grind his people under the heel.

WHAT THE SHEARS FIND.

Editorial Comment From Other Papers of Interest in Plainfield.

It is getting to be the custom in New Jersey for Republicans to renominate their Congressmen for third and fourth terms. Formerly no Congressman was given more than two terms. The present Congressional delegation is donsidered very strong, and the Republicans see the wisdom of not making any change in its personnel at the present time. But the Democrats may change it for them. —Plainfield Press.

Yes, the Democrats may change it when they get leaders who can inspire confidence, respect and enthusiasm. They are not likely to allow themselves to be tied to the chariot wheels of men who know no higher or holier incentive than unadulterated selfishness and greed.—Tribune.

The Plainfield Press notes that a recent visit of a State Insurance Inspector to that city "disclosed some rather surprising facts among men who are supposed to be wealthy. Scores of houses owned and occupied by Plainfielders who maintain fine establishments, with plenty of horses, servants, and other details of luxurious living, are blanketed with heavy mortgages." Sort of one-night barnstormers; they sleep in the place overnight, do some sort of business in New York during the day, buy the best part of their living there, and when they arrive home they would have the people of the town believe that they are only once removed from angels—and this is truly right, for they will never be burdened with white wings—they disturb a town more than they do it good, as after a few years they have the town as deep in debt as they are themselves; they sling on style but don't always pay for it. Every town within easy reach of New York is troubled with these credit-systemizers and every town would gladly trade them off for good honest sons of toil.—Bound Brook State-Centre.

THEATRICAL.

Current Dramatic Attractions That Plainfielders Can Witness.

That great scenic and sensational melodrama, "When London Sleeps," comes to Stillman Music Hall Wednesday, 17th inst. It is from the pen of Charles Darrell, an English playright, and all American rights are held by James H. Wallick, the sensational play actor. The play is a picture of life in the great English metropolis after dark, and is a realistic drama full of excitement and descriptions of the dark and dreamy side of a great city, abounding in exciting scenes and thrilling situations.

Mistaken identity has from time immemorial furnished a basis for amusing complications. In A. Q. Scammon's latest musical comedy, "The Real Widow Brown," which comes to Stillman Music Hall Friday night, the 19th inst., a young man by a clever disguise for a time impersonates the real widow, thereby furnishes the incentive for the fun, and the events following are screamingly funny. Fetching costumes, graceful dancing and taking music enhance the attractiveness of the performance.

* * * * *

A large audience gathered in Music Hall last night to see the great and only John L. Sullivan. Those who occupied seats in the front rows of the orchestra circle had the chance of eyeing him for a couple of hours as he occupied the right procenium box, and then later on the one-time champion pugilist made his debut on the stage for a few minutes and the gallery filled the auditorium from pit to dome with every variety of yell known to the human voice. The gladiator that was is now as corpulent as an alderman; so fat, indeed, that he doesn't appear in fighting togs for fear that his shape will be a burlesque on the ideal that his career of nine years as champion made him in the public mind. Sullivan as an actor is not a great success, the few words he speaks being jerked out with about the same grace and elegance he would show an opponent in the ring in his palmy days. But since he has surrounded himself with a clever vaudeville company, and they give practically the whole show, the audience was very well satisfied.

Any sensitive people who stayed away from the theatre for fear of seeing a coarse and vulgar performance certainly had no cause for such action. The performance was a clean one throughout.

Take Advantage of Our Closing out Prices.

On Shirt Waists, Crash Suits, Duck Suits, Pique Suits, Wash Skirts and Summer Goods of all kinds. We are already making preparation for New Fall Goods, and it is imperative that we close out Summer Goods to make room for them. We have several weeks of hot weather before us, and prices will be cut deeply enough to make it an object for you to buy even this late in the season. Of course the assortment of styles and sizes is much broken, but we have many excellent things yet well worthy your attention.

Sundry Good Things.

Careful scouring of the market late in the season has secured sundry special values.

A case of very fine Bleached Ribbed Vests with wing sleeves at 10c per garment is one. You have paid 25c for no better.

An odd case of Scotch Lawns overlooked in stock-taking and consequently almost given away to get rid of (about 4,000 yards of excellent styles) we bought to sell for 3c per yard. Won't last forever at the price.

Still another stunner—a large lot of extra fine Waitress Aprons, LARGE SIZE, at 25c. Real value is 50c.

One of the best things, perhaps, is an assortment H. S. Handkerchiefs in all white, mourning borders, embroidered, etc., at 5c each. We don't hope to get rich selling them, but derive a great deal of satisfaction from knowing we are giving our customers wonderful value.

Wash Goods Reduced.

Scotch Ginghams	that	were	25c	are	now	15c.
"	"	"	39c	"	"	25c.
French Organdies	"	"	25c	"	"	15c.
"	"	"	39c	"	"	25c.

And so it is all through the store. Good things in every department being cleaned out every day.

If interested in UMBRELLAS we suggest you take a look through our line. Have received during the past week a fine assortment fresh from the factory.

Dunellen, August 13.—Miss Pauline Denton, of Plainfield, who has been visiting Miss Nellie Brown, has returned home.

Mr. VanSyckle, of Hackensack, has been engaged by the Board of Education to supervise the borough schools next year. The Board held a meeting last Thursday evening and considered a number of applicants, but Mr. VanSyckle's seemed to be the best suited for the Board, and he was accepted. The Board has also made arrangements to have music taught in the schools next year.

One of the laborers on the trolley work in the borough, whose duty it is to assist in the macadamizing of North avenue, has thus far found twelve pennies at different times. Yesterday he found another penny and remarked at the time, "This makes the twelfth penny I have found since working on the streets."

Tomorrow morning Rev. Mr. Burr, of Westfield, will preach in the M. E. church. Tomorrow evening F. H. Martin, of Plainfield, will occupy the pulpit.

'PLAINS AND FANWOOD.

(Special Correspondence of The Press.)

Scotch Plains, August 13.—A party of young men from Scotch Plains were in Broffe's furnishing store Tuesday evening, where one wanted to look at the caps, claiming to have lost his on the way here. The party went out without making a purchase and Mr. Broffe missed a cap. He had heard them speak of going by trolley to New Brunswick and at once proceeded to overhaul the stage on the Main street extension. In it he found the young man with the missing cap upon his head, but stated that another one of the party had stolen it and given it to him. The young fellow, who gave the name of Witson, was taken before Recorder Brampton, who bound him over in his own recognizance to await action of the grand jury.—Bound Brook Chronicle.

The Ackerman and Coles families, of Scotch Plains, have contributed generously to the Children's Country Home ever since its organization, and are continuing the good work this season. Last month Mrs. Warren Ackerman gave $25, and yesterday Mrs. J. C. Bucknell handed the president $10 to buy a weekly treat of ice cream and cake for the little ones.—Westfield Standard.

Mrs. Charles Joery, died very suddenly at her home on the commons Friday morning of cholera morbus. Mrs. Joery was taken sick Thursday morning, and her death Friday was a great surprise. Mr. Joery is employed by Dr. J. Ackerman Coles, as gardner. Mr. and Mrs. Joery have only lived in town a short time.

This seems to be night blooming cereus week in Scotch Plains. On Monday evening Mrs. Chas. Haberle; Wednesday, Mrs. George Stillger, and Thursday, Miss Kittie Buckley had several blossoms in bloom.

The camp meeting at Netherwood seems to be a drawing card for Scotch Plains wheelmen. Every evening quite a number attend.

Rev. Mr. Lewis will lead the prayer meeting in the Methodist church this evening.

Henry Keuhn has finished his contract painting Henry Meyer's store.

WOMEN'S REALM

WHAT TO WEAR AND HOW TO MAKE IT

May Manton's Hints Regarding Seasonable Toilettes.

Fawn colored cashmere and golden brown silk ribbon velvet made this handsome dress, the yoke and collar being of very fine linen batiste that comes all ready tucked for this purpose.

The simple and stylish arrangement of this costume recommends it to mothers who do their own sewing, it being well adapted to the making over that has so often to be done where the family is large. A yoke of velvet, silk or other contrasting material, with the fitting portions of the sleeves to match, will eke out short material, while the rows of velvet will cover up joints that are unavoidable when adding to the length of both skirt and waist.

A sash worn around the waist gives added style to this otherwise up-to-date costume. The blouse waist is arranged over fitted linings, the yoke being cut square in Pompadour style, and the closing is made invisible in centre back.

Square cornered epaulettes turn back stylishly from the yoke, bands of velvet forming a pretty trimming. The five-gored skirt is gathered in the back and the top is sewed to the lower edge of the waist, the sash being tied in a small looped bow in centre back. This style is as well adapted to cotton as to woolen fabrics and will be found easy to launder if the epaulettes are made adjustable and the lower edge of puffs arranged on a draw string.

To make this gown for a girl of eight years will require three yards of 44-inch material.

Lady's Blouse Waist.

French organdy, showing a bluet design with green leaves on a white ground is here tastefully decorated with blue baby ribbon and white lace. The full waist has the front and back shaped in one portion with a perfectly straight upper edge. This is gathered in five evenly spaced rows which are distributed over the neck of the glove fitted lining which supports the fulness.

Smooth under-arm gores separate the full fronts and back and the lining closes the centre front.

The full waist has the front and back shaped in one portion with a perfectly straight upper edge. This is gathered in five evenly spaced rows which are distributed over the neck of the glove-fitted lining which supports the fulness.

Smooth under-arm gores separate the full fronts and back and the lining closes the centre front.

The full waist may close at the left shoulder and under-arm seam, or the more practical centre front closing is quite possible and can be readily made invisible, if so preferred.

The full waist can be cut off at the lower line of perforations and the smooth yoke only used as shown in the small sketch.

To make this waist for a lady of medium size two and a half yards of material, 44 inches wide, will be required.

Miss Cisnero Married.

Evangelina Cisinero was married at Baltimore to C. F. Carbonel, who assisted in rescuing her from a Havana prison.

MAKES QUEEN'S STOCKINGS.

Long and Faithful Work Duly Recognized By Her Majesty.

"Who makes the Queen's stockings?" "We," say Messrs. Morley of Gisborne street, Derby, "we make her stockings." They are purchased by the Queen from Messrs. Shears & Wells, for whom they are manufactured by Messrs. Morley. The latter firm commit the work to an old weaver, Mr. John Meakin, who has been employed by them for upward of seventy years. The old man has recently been brought to the notice of her majesty, who has caused to be forwarded to him an autograph portrait as a token of her appreciation of the long and faithful handiwork he has done for her. A representative of the Press, who called on Mr. Meakin soon after he received the portrait, found him engaged on a pair of hose for the Queen's summer wear. They were of the finest white lace silk, though, as a rule, they are said to be black with white tops and feet. A coronet with the letters "V. R.," and the initials of the sellers and the weaver in smaller letters, are worked into the hose. Mr. Meakin, who is hale and hearty, in spite of his 84 years, has been photographed, with a view of returning in his own way the kindly compliment which her majesty has paid him.

MR. JOHN MEAKIN.

A Perfect Trunk.

With delight will the woman who is far seeing and up to the times go about her task of trunk packing. No longer is she to have visions of possibly crushed gowns at the end of her journey, and of hats "squashed" out of all semblance to the original styles. For there has come a fresh era in trunks and "boxes," and packing will have no more terrors.

The trunk that has been popular for so many years—the "trunk" that was simply a packing case, various in size and shape, with one deep tray divided up into boxes of odd sizes—has this year passed into the realm of departed fashions. In its place there is a new trunk of very different pattern. It is a trunk of trays—four or five trays, and in the case of the largest even six—all fitting snugly into the trunk's framework.

Each of these trays is intended to hold one gown and three small pieces. They are quite as convenient for men's clothing—trousers and coats travelling in them without rumpling or creasing. In the trunk's very bottom, under the lowest tray, boots, slippers and heavy articles generally may be stowed, held in place by the tray directly over them, the necessity of tightly wedging thus being avoided.

It is not that the average clever woman cannot pack everything and in a space that mathematicians would at once declare entirely too small. The trunks of the past have presented no unsolvable problems when it came to filling them up. But with these new trunks the wear and tear and the worry of packing is all past and gone, and the daintiest dresses can with the greatest expedition be laid in the trays and the cover closed.

To put hats in trunks this year will be no part of the feminine philosophy. The woman who has pretty hats will be foolish to trust them in the recesses of a trunk amid linen, gowns and the odds and ends of milady's gear. Modern mechanical science has devised a very simple answer to the question, "How can we most safely carry our elaborate hats?"

A hat box has been invented that, though small in compass itself, can hold six hats of the greatest amount of "fuss and feathers." In this, on sides, bottom and top, there are small metallic arms that turn and can be slipped over the brim. The sides carry four hats, the bottom, the fifth, the cover the sixth. Firmly held in place in this manner none of these can interfere with each other. This hat box locks in precisely the same manner as does a trunk. Not only does its cover lift up, but on opening one of the sides falls. Thus any hat can be taken out or put back without disturbing the others.

Indian Princess Graduates.

Miss Lois Minnie Cornelius, an Oneida Indian girl of royal parentage, was graduated with high honors from Grafton hall, an Episcopalian girls' school of Fond Du Lac, Wisconsin. Miss Cornelius is a direct descendant of a long line of chiefs. Her grandfather was the famous old chief Skenandore, well known even now throughout Wisconsin, and her father would now have been chief of his tribe but for the protective government of the United States over the Oneida reservation.

Last year Miss Cornelius won first prize in crayon sketching out of a large class in art. Some of her sketches are remarkably fine. She does not intend to devote herself to art, however. She will take up a course of study in some medical college.

HOUSE HOLD TALKS

AN OUTDOOR ROOM.

Every year the veranda is becoming more and more an integral part of the house beautiful. It is no longer merely a shelter from the elements, sparsely furnished with chairs, but is a living-room and treated as such, and is furnished with the same taste and care that are bestowed upon the rest of the rooms. Of course, it goes without saying that both the textiles and furniture employed must be as far as possible weather-proof, but this is no handicap nowadays, as rugs and materials that defy rain and snow are to be had in the greatest variety—except directly on the seashore, where the dampness and high winds make it impossible. An out-door room, netted in so that the lights at night will not attract troublesome insects, prettily and comfortably furnished, should be a part of every country house. Curtains made of colored awning cloth and hung with small brass rings on a slender galvanized iron rod, so that they may easily be pushed forward and back, are both useful and pretty, although some people prefer Venetian blinds or the rattan shades, which now come for verandas of any width desired. Hammocks, of course, are the natural lounging places for a veranda room, but they are now made much more elaborately than formerly, with valences hanging on either side, and piled up with cushions of many colors. Another recent accessory to outdoor furniture which has become popular is the swinging sofa, legless, of course, swung by four chains to the roof, and filled with cushions. Even the divan has been adapted to open-air furnishing.

The accompanying sketch shows one which filled a corner of the veranda of a seaside cottage last summer. The shape is an irregular elongated triangle, with two sides against the walls of the house, and consists of a frame a foot high, on which is a mattress covered with India-rubber cloth. Over this is a buttoned covering of green denim, with a flounce, and the drapery, consists of an old sail and a fish net, which is held up by a pair of oars and a crabnet, all of which have been well-seasoned by wind and weather.

Chocolate Ice Cream.

An excellent chocolate ice cream may be made of a quart of cream, a pint of milk, a large tablespoonful of English gelatine, a cup and a half of sugar, two ounces of unsweetened chocolate scraped fine, and a tablespoonful of vanilla extract. Soak the gelatine as before, stir it into a cup of the milk, and strain it into the cream. Stir the scraped chocolate into the remainder of the milk, which must also be heated to the boiling point; stir the preparation of chocolate over the fire until the chocolate is all melted and the whole is a smooth dark mass. Add the sugar and stir all into the cream. Add the vanilla and freeze carefully.

Excellent Veal Curry.

Slice an onion and fry it to a delicate brown in two ounces of butter, add the same quantity of flour, and mix till smooth and brown, adding by degrees half a teaspoonful of curry powder, one bay leaf, one sprig of parsley, one cup of cream and one cup of stock. Simmer all together for twenty minutes, strain and add about three-quarters of a pound of cold cooked veal cut into small pieces; heat all together and serve in a border of rice. Scatter chopped parsley lightly over the rice after it is set on the dish.

Keeping a Meal Hot.

When it is necessary to keep a meal hot for a belated comer, do not set the plate holding the food in a hot oven, thus discoloring the china as well as drying the food; instead, place the plate upon the fire over a pan of boiling water, covering the plate with a pan that will just fit over the edge of the plate. The food will keep hot and there will be enough steam from the boiling water in the lower pan to keep the plate moist and prevent the contents becoming dried.

Banana Ice Cream.

Use one dozen fine ripe bananas, the juice of one lemon, and two oranges, one pint of sugar and one quart of water. Boil the sugar and water together, for five minutes and when cold peel the bananas, mash them fine and add at once to the sirup with the fruit juices. Freeze. When done remove the dasher and stir in the stiffly beaten white of one egg, repack and set aside until serving time.

CURRENT COMMENT.

But yesterday, as it were, calcium carbide was merely a scientific plaything. Now it has enough commercial importance to form a trust, with $12,000,000 capital. Thus does science acquire value nowadays. The scientists who, like the elder Agassiz, are "too busy to make money," are very few.

Chauncey M. Depew is a director in 58 different companies, Cornelius Vanderbilt in 54, Daniel S. Lamont in 47, George F. Baker in 29, Samuel D. Babcock in 25, George J. Gould and Russell Sage in 24, J. Pierpont Morgan in 23, Charles S. Smith in 13, J. Edward Simmons in 12, and Dumont Clark in 11. These men are kept very busy in attending board meetings.

Unless Nicola Tesla is misquoted or mistaken, he has discovered a use for his oscillator, of which so much has been said, that will render all further military operations by the United States unnessary, provided he will only sell his discovery to this Government. By his oscillator he claims to be able not only to transmit messsages without electric wires any distance, but also to send a spark into the powder magazine of any hostile ship, thus blowing it up with its own ammunition. Such a discovery as this would not only bring the Spanish war to a speedy conclusion, but would lead to universal and permanent peace.

Some interesting statistics of the population of Russia are reported by Consul Smith, stationed at Moscow. According to the census taken a year ago, the total population of the empire is 126,411,000, almost equally divided between the sexes, there being but 94,000 more males than females. Russia has not done much fighting in recent years, and her men are not wanderers; when they emigrate they usually take their families with them, hence the numerical relation between the sexes in that country is pretty nearly the normal one. It is also shown to be a rural population to an extent that should please the essayists who deplore the tendency of the people of this and other countries to flock into the towns. Only 13 per cent. of the Russian population lives in towns and cities, yet we do not read that the nation is richer, wiser or happier on that account. The student of political economy will find much to interest him in the details of the Russian census.

Here is a passage from Macaulay, which American commanders and soldiers should remember, for it will apply to Cuba, under Spanish rule, as well as to Spain:

"There is no country in Europe which it is so easy to overrun as Spain; there is no country which it is more difficult to conquer. Nothing can be more contemptible than the regular military resistance which Spain offers to an invader; nothing more formidable than the energy which she puts forth when her regular military resistance has been broken down. Her armies have long borne too much resemblance to mobs (Lee's criticism of the army in Cuba), but her mobs have had in an unusual degree the spirit of armies. * * * Castile, Leon, Audalusia, Estramadura rose at once; every peasant procured a firelock or a pike; the allies were masters only of the ground on which they trod. No soldier could wander a hundred yards from the main body of the invading army without imminent risk of being pionarded."

The episode recently reported from Hong Kong, China, in which 150 American and British sailors, while on a lark, joined forces and broke through the ranks of more than twice their number of tars of other nations, recalls another more serious incident, in which the two nations fraternized. It was in 1859, in Chinese waters, and on this occasion an American naval officer added to the English language a phrase which has continued popular ever since.

The English and French were bombarding the Chinese forts in the Peiho river. On July 25 English gunboats were removing some obstructions in the river when the Celestials opened a murderous fire upon them. Capt. Josiah Tatnall of the United States Navy, a veteran of the Mexican war, was a witness of the attack on the chartered steamer Toeywan. He remained passive as long as possible, when, suddenly turning to a junior officer with the exclamation, "Blood is thicker than water!" he ordered his boat manned. Getting into it, he rowed for the flagship of the British flotilla and reached her with the loss of his coxswain, who was killed by a shot from the Chinese, while his lieutenant was severely wounded.

Arriving on board the British gunboat, Tatnall, with his crew, helped to fight and defeat the Chinese. He afterward used his vessel in towing up the British reserve. This action, although contrary to the law of nations, was never questioned, and promoted good feeling between the English and American seaman.

CHAPTER IV.

A fresh, bright afternoon, a vagrant from spring coming between stretches of torrid heat.

The stone hall leading from the editorial rooms to the stairs was deserted as David Temple stepped from his office. He could hear voices and laughter through half opened doors, the din from the streets and shrieking from factory whistles sounding at that height like the growing howl of a mob. When he turned the corner, he saw Anne Garrick, her hand upon the brass scrollwork around the elevator. She looked tired and very young.

A protest leaped into David's heart. He had sometimes experienced the same feeling for a city child contentedly threading beads in the gutter, a wish to transplant it to something more happy, to a meadow where breeze, sunlight and leafage were a symphony. At the thought a grim smile twitched his lips. Miss Garrick was weary of peace and loved the treadmill work in the noisy world. She had told him so.

"Have you rung?" he said, reaching her side.

"Yes, but there's some delay below," said Anne, peering down.

"I'll emphasize the fact that the editor and one of the best writers on The Citizen are waiting." A flash of humor came into his eyes and he kept his finger upon the bell until its vibrations awoke echoes in the shaft. It was no use, and David looked distressed.

"We'll have to take to the stairs. Give me your parasol and let's make the best of it. You can rest by the way."

They went side by side down the seemingly never ending iron stairway.

"Are you tired?" he asked when the second landing had been reached. "Wait a minute."

David took off his hat and stood facing her. They were in deep shadow, the sounds of life above, below, seeming to skim around without touching their isolation.

"Miss Garrick, I've wanted to say something to you for several days," he said, smiling. "I want to take back what I said about women being unfit for newspaper work. You have done splendidly and against great odds."

"Oh, do you think so?" And the color came into Anne's cheeks. "I did find the work hard, and it's been so hot." Her glance became a little challenging. "And do you think a woman may be still feminine even if she is not an exotic?"

"Oh, I like the exotic woman!" said David as they went on. "I like a woman sublimely useless, providing she's a lot of other things. You have proved your right to the career you've chosen, but you're one of a paralyzing minority. Why don't you acknowledge it?"

His tone was intentionally provoking, and Anne laughed, her glance a negative.

As they stepped from the shadow into the light of the lower hall the glare through the archway of the door dazzled them.

"It's a lovely day," said David. "The atmosphere is amazingly clear." They paused for a moment on the doorstep and looked at the picture of the city. "Every detail," he added, "shows with the accuracy of a photograph—the blue in the shirts of those laborers, the brown of the trench, the violet green of that bit of grass, the flags in the blue air. Are you going to walk?" he asked abruptly.

"Yes; there's such a good breeze."

"If you've no objection, I'll walk with you."

A pulse of exultation quickened in Anne's heart as they went up the swarming street, David adapting his steps to hers.

"Tell me," he said curiously, "what Dr. Ericsson thinks of your independent spirit."

"He takes it entirely for granted."

"I am behind the times, I suppose," he said, with a short laugh. "Well, I can't help it. I don't like the independent woman. Oh, she has virtues! But when woman loses her inconsistency and self doubt she loses her charm."

"She needn't. If she's in earnest and loves it, why shouldn't she work and live alone as I do"—

"But you live with your uncle, don't you?"

"No. I am much more comfortable as I am. I came here sure of a small income. I earn that sum twice over now, I live alone, and I'm writing a book."

"Really."

They continued in silence, and then David looked at her squarely.

"I am thinking what an amazing gulf lies between you and your great-grandmother. Wouldn't she scold you if she could come back? Wouldn't she, though?"

"I dare say," said Anne placidly, "but I wouldn't approve of my great-grandmother, nor of my grandmother either."

David threw back his head as a boy does before a shout of laughter, corrected himself and looked at her with weighty seriousness.

"Really, impertinence couldn't go further."

Anne's smile was both naive and speculative as she continued:

"My grandmothers had no spirit, no originality, went in for artistic fainting and wrote silly love rhymes. They were as savorless as oatmeal without salt, those admirable, chimney corner women. Their husbands thought nothing of crying 'Tush' at them, and they 'tushed' beautifully. Oh, they wouldn't be at all popular today."

"But you are not a new woman?" said David with some awe.

"No," and the denial was uncompromising. "I hate the new woman. You have not classified me correctly. I hope I am the awakened woman."

"I never heard of her before."

"Well, I'll tell you something about her. Without retaining the womanliness of the clinging heroine of the past and without feeling to a sensible extent a desire for progress she could not exist. She is the result of extremes past and present."

"Many of her?"

"She's everywhere. Her privileges are so many she's busy enjoying them. There's little said about her, but every one who thinks knows she is the woman of today."

Her earnestness made her face strangely lovely, and the thought prompted David's next words.

"Does she like to be pretty?"

"She delights in it. She's not only a good chum with men or a plaything or an intellectual machine; she's a woman," she said, and there was music in the word. "She believes that marrying the man she loves—and she can't love the weak, the stupid, the hopelessly corrupt—is the culmination of the purpose for which she was created. She's not ignorant of the existence of evil, but it has not tempted nor hardened her. But best of all, she's not a paragon. Her aspirations are high and good, her faults alluring. Now you know my ideal."

"But you are not a new woman!" said David with some awe.

By the time her home was reached they were very well acquainted. Anne felt herself come very near the gentlest side of David's nature as she gave him her hand. He clasped it earnestly as he looked into her untroubled eyes.

"New York is dead in summer time," he said irrelevantly. "All one's friends away! So few people one cares to talk to anyway!"

An unreasoning sense of gladness filled Anne. She knew he was waiting for her to speak.

"Dr. Ericsson spends many of his evenings here. When you feel inclined, come in too."

"I will," he said gratefully.

And he did. Often after busy days during which scarcely a word was exchanged between them he would find himself strolling through the sultry night to the grateful coolness of Anne's rooms. Dr. Ericsson was generally there, but sometimes they were alone.

The unusualness of unhampered comradeship with a bright, young and pretty woman, their long, satisfying talks on subjects whimsically varied, the independence of Anne's solitude, her courageous position as a worker, level with his own as a man, appealed to David with a charm new in his experience.

As he grew more and more interested his visits became more frequent. They became good friends. Sometimes while the moon looked over the roof tops and the candles flamed in the night breeze Anne sang to him. Sometimes Dr. Ericsson and she dined with him, mostly in cool, suburban places, requiring long drives along the almost empty avenues and through the massed shadows of the park. Sometimes on David's roof top, made comfortable with rugs and hammocks, they three saw the day die and the stars gather like eyes to watch the clashing ways of life. Every day his fondness for her deepened. She was his comrade and friend. He felt himself her silent champion and protector.

CHAPTER V.

"Do you think Temple will get here tonight before the paper's out?" And the news editor nervously rolled and unrolled the copy he held.

"When he says he'll do a thing, he does it," said Frawley, the managing editor, who was covering the pages before him with blue lines from his flashing pencil until they looked like maps of a railroad that followed an inconsequent course and met in a labyrinth.

Anne looked at the clock. It was after 10. The pencil dropped from her fingers and she pulled the shade from above her tired eyes. Since 7 she had been writing in a race against time, and now, her work completed, she was tingling with fatigue.

It was the 1st of November. The summer, unlike any other of her life, seemed far away. Made up of dusty, feverish days and happy nights, it was past, like a sleep. Through the window before her she could see the fog dripping over the city, a curtain of sootiness, its folds breaking on the angles of houses, the lights of the town white splashes on the haze. The world looked sullen, as if choked under that sooty pall into submission and silence. And yet none knew better than she, sitting aloft among the chroniclers, of the snarl among the unhappy, of the turmoil and crime seething there, and the ambition which spared no brother for the uprising of self.

It had been a day of extraordinary climaxes. A murder in high places had horrified the city. The political struggle was hurrying to a crisis. The latest telegrams told of disastrous floods in one state and a strike of many thousand miners in another.

As a result there were tonight more striking of bills and dragging sound of hurrying feet than were usual even during the exciting hours just previous to the paper going to press. There was expectancy on the absorbed faces. Unrest hung in the air like a stormcloud.

After a week's absence David Temple was momentarily expected. He had wired to suspend any arrangements regarding the assignment of reporters to the scene of the strikes until his arrival. While the usual routine of making the paper went on the men were waiting for him.

Anne was waiting for him too. A trembling anticipation swept over her as she fancied him coming through the open door. He would bring restfulness into the confusion, a visible power to the handling of the several problems, and it would be good to see him again.

"He ought to be here now," said Jack Braidley, strolling over to her desk. "I hope he'll let me out of Platt's Peak. I don't want that assignment. Starving miners are not much in my way."

"I thought not," said Anne dryly, gathering together the copy headed "The Sunday Page," which during the present stress she edited. "I never saw you look as happy as the day you were sent out to inspect and describe the Duke of Stockbury's wedding clothes when he came over to marry the sugar refiner's daughter. They were in your line."

"Oh, I say, you do chaff a fellow horribly! But seriously, I'm playing for the dramatic critic's place. Jove, fancy calling that work—every pretty actress smiling at you pleadingly! I was made for it. By the way, Miss Garrick, why don't you go on the stage? Beastly work this for a pretty girl!"

Anne was not listening to him. Leaning her elbow on the back of the chair, her hand curved like a cup to support her chin, she was looking at Donald Sefain, who had just come in.

There he was, shabby, silent, a recluse among the alert crowd. The discontent in his worn eyes, his hopeless but unconquered air, seemed now as always like a minor, passionate phrase woven unfittingly into the flourishes of a hackneyed tune.

She wondered if she would ever know him, ever learn just what sinuosities of character, what experiences, had made him the creature he was. This wish had begun to tinge her days. Nothing, however, seemed more unlikely. They had not exchanged a word. He held aloof from her as from every one else.

"Look at that beast Sefain," muttered Braidley.

"Why do you call him that?" And Anne turned sharply upon him.

"Look at his clothes."

"They're not like the Duke of Stockbury's, are they?"

"Besides he drinks. I saw him drunk once in this very room. It was last spring, I think. His eyes were frightful that day. I expected to have a good story about his suicide next morning. But fellows like him never kill themselves."

Anne moved away and stood near Frawley's desk, just as Donald went up to him.

"I want to do the pictures for the Platt's Peak strike," she heard him say in his surly, indifferent tone.

"Mr. Temple attends to that," said Frawley, strolling over to watch the telegrams coming in like mad.

"But I can't wait to see him unless he comes within five minutes. I wish you'd tell him I'd like to go to Platt's Peak. I don't suppose there'll be a rush for the place anyway."

"D——d fussy about his minutes for a beggar," thought Frawley, but answered in a colorless voice, "All right."

Donald slouched over to his desk and picked up his hat. He had neared the door when Frawley, peering over the operator's shoulder at the wire, uttered a cry.

"Good God!"

Consternation and suspense fell upon the place. It was as if a full heart had suddenly ceased beating. In the stillness the shrill warnings of fog whistles from the bay were eerie, as if witches shrieked at the windows. Donald paused at the door. Anne stood like a stone.

"I want to do the pictures for the Platt's Peak strike," she heard him say.

"Hear this. Temple"— And Frawley sank back into a seat unable to obey his impulse to speak.

"What, for heaven's sake?" And one of the men waiting seized the tape from the operator's fingers.

"Southern express wrecked south of Philadelphia. Many dead. David Temple fatally injured."

There was much more. Details followed, speculation, exclamations of dismay and pity, but Anne heard only those last four words. They had descended like a sword, striking strength and motion from her body and all but one thought from her mind. She stood with pale lips, a shadow weighing upon her eyes. She shivered as if in the clammy dusk of death. There was a blur, a grotesque mixing of faces and objects, a sense as of being seized by a horrible separating current and torn away from all things to which she could cling, a sense of crushing loss.

She sat down before her desk facing the black window where the city lights flickered. The horror faded into a passionate cry which, though unuttered, shook her whole being. David among the injured! David far away, not strong and controlling, but lying in voiceless pain under the sullen sky! They said, "Injured fatally." Perhaps it meant dying, perhaps it meant dead. Dead! The word seemed to take her by the throat, hold her, look into her eyes, deep into her heart and laugh at what it saw there.

Nothing in the past mattered beside the rich truth that David had been her friend, nothing in the future beside the craving to touch him and hear him speak her name once more. She knew in a revealing blaze the secret of her heart that before she had not even dimly understood.

Unconsciously she prayed as she sat there staring into the vacuity of the window.

"Save him! I love him, I love him, I love him!"

WHEN A BURMAN PRIEST DIES.

Body Preserved in Honey, Funeral Taking Place Three Months After.

Nothing could be weirder than the curious ceremonies attending the burial of a Burman priest, or, as he is called in his own dreamy country, "phoongyee."

The funeral does not take place until three months after death, the corpse having been meanwhile preserved in honey, and placed in a box-like coffin of many colors and extraordinary ornamentations. Towards noon the pulsing pause of the droning day is broken by the hum of far-away incantations which rise and fall drowsily, and one knows that the burial service is going forward.

The coffin has been raised to the top of a huge gilded bamboo erection, and is being swung monotonously to and fro on the bare shoulders of forty or fifty Burmans. The chanting never ceases, nor the queer gliding backwards and forwards.

Until sunset the incantations beat away on the stilly air without a pause. Then the coffin is shot off the bamboo erection on to the funeral pyre, and as the red sun sinks the whole thing is set alight.

JUST AS THEY WERE.

Fanny Kemble Believed in No Deviation from an Agreement.

"When can these be returned to me, washed and ironed?" she inquired.

"The day after to-morrow, madam, at noontime."

"Be it so," was the dramatic reply—"at twelve on Wednesday."

But on the hour appointed the clothes had not been returned, and at ten minutes past noon a servant stood before her, in response to the short summons of the bell.

"My clothes that were to be returned at twelve to-day—bring them."

"But, madam, we have not been able to get them ready, owing to a difficulty in the laundry. You shall have them to-morrow."

"Bring them now—they were promised to-day!"

"I know it, madam; but they are not ready."

"It matters not to me; bring them just as they are."

The servant went out, and a few moments later two men entered, bearing the clothes in a tub full of soapsuds and wet clothes, set them on the floor and went out.—Golden Days.

JEWELRY AT THE MINT.

People Deposit It to be Melted and Turned into Legal Tender.

Shortly after the holiday season the mint is overburdened with deposits of gold jewelry for melting, brought by persons unable to keep the valuable trinkets or jewelers disposing of patterns out of date.

From 1873 down to last year the amount of money paid out by the government for old gold and plate annually has increased steadily. The high-water mark was reached in 1891, when the government paid out for plate and jewelry $4,035,710. In 1873 the amount was $774,218, and it reached the million mark in 1880, the two-million mark in 1886, and the three-million mark in 1889. Except for the year 1891, when it went to four millions, it was between three and four million dollars until last year, when it fell to $2,810,284. The Philadelphia mint melts nine-tenths of the plate and jewelry presented to the government. Payment is generally made in gold when the jewelry is of that metal.

Ziegler Jones, of the weighing department of the mint, said that the principal metal received was gold, as the mint did not recoin silver, but simply refined it 999-1000ths fine. "There are," he said, "many people who deposit jewelry at the mint which is very valuable, but out of style. Many of them are stirred up in the matter by reading of robberies and realize that the keeping of old jewelry is a temptation for servants and sneak thieves. Only this morning a poor Russian left a heavy gold watch to be melted. It was given him for bravery in his native army. The net amount turned over to the astonished foreigner was $60.

"By far the greatest amount of metal is sent to the mint from jewelers, dentists and assayers. As a rule, we do not accept a deposit which will net in the essay under $100. The hard times have a very great influence on the amount of jewelry received from private individuals."—Philadelphia Times

BEAN-BAG SONG.

Bean-bag, bean-bag flying through the sky,
Come and let me catch you—
Do not fly too high!
Now I send you back again;
Do not fly too low,
Fall into my hands, and then
Up again you go!

Bean-bag, bean-bag, sailing in the sun,
Why do you come down so soon
When your flight's begun?
Spread your wings and fly away!
I'd change you to a bird
Were I a fairy who could say
The secret, magic word!

Bean-bag, bean-bag, wouldn't it be funny
If I were but a princess,
And you a bag of money?
But if you fell upon her nose
'T would make the princess scold!
Beans are safer, I suppose,
Than silver or than gold!

—Christoper Valentine in St. Nicholas.

Tricks in Swimming.

Plain swimming, with its attendant diving, treading water, floating and rolling in the warm sand, is quite good enough sport for most young people. But there are a number of tricks and games in swimming which will help to make the sport more fascinating than it is.

Few people realize how very nearly the human body comes to floating. Drop your arm loosely in the water, and it will rest near the surface, buoyed in its place by the pressure of the water. It it were not for the weight of the head in proportion to the weight of the body a man would swim as easily and naturally as a horse or dog. With these facts in mind, the good swimmer or floater keeps as much of his body under the surface as he can. On the same principle a swimmer may keep himself afloat by holding a very small piece of wood in each hand, provided he allows himself to sink deep into the water. It merely requires a little confidence in letting the body so deep into the water.

A boy who falls overboard from a ship, if he keeps cool and does not try to raise himself out of the water, as many frightened people do, can keep afloat for some time by paddling gently, his clothing acting as a float until it becomes well soaked.

One of the greatest sports "in swimming" may be had with a rubber tube ten or twelve feet long. Two large empty spools should be fastened to the ends of the spool by crowding the rubber into the hole in the middle of each, which has first been enlarged with a jack knife. The swimmer allows one of the spools to float on the surface of the water or fastens it near a stone or log on shore or next to a stake driven into the water. Then he places the other spool in his mouth and sinks out of sight under the water. Of course he can breathe through the tube, and he can remain a considerable length of time without rising to the surface. Any boy can readily imagine the various pranks he may be played with such an invention. It will also be found useful in diving for lost objects.—Boston Journal.

Paddy Polan's Bath.

It was the day of "the greatest show on earth," the "Eleven Elephant Show," and all the little ragamuffins in town had followed the circus wagons from car to show ground, and from there to the river, where the eleven elephants were to be given the unusual treatof a bath; or rather the chance to bathe themselves, and one another.

The small boys of the place spent most of their summer days "goin' in" also; but among them was one little, pug-nosed, freckle-faced little fellow—Paddy Polan by name—who could neither be coaxed nor driven into the water.

Paddy was the most mischievous, as well as the dirtiest, of them all, and no sooner had the creatures from the circus entered the water and began to enjoy their clumsy gambols, with loud trumpetings and the dashing of fountains of air over one another, than Paddy stationed himself on the edge of the bank and began to throw stones and unkind remarks at them.

The elephants, whose drab velvet coats had been changed to black satin by the water, were at first too happy to be teased, but their keeper, who had walked beside the baby elephant to the river, carrying in his arms a great milk bottle from which she took her dinner, warned Paddy not to hit the baby, as the mother elephant, Beatrice, was very cross.

Paddy foolishly kept on, and soon a stone struck the baby, and before the boy could make his escape, the mother, with a yell of rage, had seized him in her trunk, and taken him out into the middle of the river.

The crowd was silent with horror, expecting to see poor Paddy dashed to pieces or his life trampled out by the herd. But, no, the others all stood back, and let Mme. Beatrice punish as she would.

She dipped the struggling Paddy in the water, then taking him to where the baby stood she used him as a scrubbing brush, or sort of a wash rag on his fat back and sides.

Then, while every one screamed with laughter, she threw Paddy on the bank, a sadder, wiser and cleaner boy, and there a chorus of voices greeted him, crying:

"Paddy went in! Paddy Polan went in!"

BABY WASPS' WONDERFUL MEAL.

Spiders Paralyzed by the Sting, Living for Months In That Condition.

The wasp is not a vegetarian like the bee, and our cement maker has before her the problem of supplying her young with meat rather than with bread. As her eggs are laid out in hot weather, and as enough food must be stored in the cell with the egg to mature the young insect, the question is how to preserve the meat fresh for so long a time. She meets the difficulty thus: After a tube is finished except one end, which is left open, she flies off on a hunt for spiders. She finds a fat, healthy one, pounces upon it, stings it, and carries it off and places it in the mud cell. She repeats this process until she has placed as many spiders in the tube as, according to her judgment, will be needed. She then lays an egg in the cell and walls up the opening.

The remarkable thing about this performance is the magic effect of her sting. Whether it is the result of a subtle poison, or whether it is the special spot in the spider's nervous system where the sting is inserted we do not know. Certain it is that after being thus stung, the spider lives on in a paralyzed condition for weeks and even months. It can move only slightly, and remains helpless in its mud sepulchre until the wasp egg hatches into a voracious grub, which at once falls to and eats with great relish the meat thus miraculously preserved.

Whether the wasp sting renders the spider insensible to pain or not is a question not yet settled. However, the chances are in favor of the theory that it does. Anyway, we need waste no sympathy on the spider, the most bloodthirsty of all the little people of the fields and woods. There is a sense of retributive justice in the thought of a spider helpless and at the mercy of a small insect which it would have mercilessly devoured had it been able.

So we need not accuse our alert, industrious cement maker of any unreasonable cruelty if she, like us, insists upon a meat diet for her young, nor need we have any fear of her sting, for she seldom uses it as a weapon of offense or defense.—Chautauquan.

THE TWO TYPES.

Different Policies Pursued in Handling Teams.

Evidence is not wanting, this season, to show, very plainly, that two different policies in professional club government has been in direct antagonism in the National League arena; and they may appropriately be designated as "Brushism" and "Freedmanism." John T. Brush, the worthy president of the Cincinnati Club, is the able and consistent advocate of the former, and Andrew Freedman, the president of the New York Club, the persistent supporter of the other. "Brushism" represents the honorable policy of managing each individual club in such a manner as to rid the professional club business of the growing abuses which have crept into its ranks and lowered its reputation within the past five years. Moreover, "Brushism" involves the policy of catering solely to the reputable class of the patrons of professional base ball. Whereas "Freedmanism" was the very reverse policy in every respect, as it is one which not only encourages the evil of "kicking," with its sequence of blackguardism on the ball field and among the low class of spectators thereby catered to; but it was alike ruinous to the good reputation of the business, and costly to the financial welfare of the whole of the league clubs.

The engagement of Anson as Joyce's successor means the beginning of a new era at the Polo Grounds. May success attend the veteran.

CAUGHT ON THE FLY.

Tim Murnane says: "John Gaffney, loaded, can umpire better ball than half the members of Uncle Nick's staff."

Heine Reitz of the Senators is hitting better this year than ever he did for the Baltimores.

Hughes of Baltimore has shut out more teams this season than any pitcher in the league.

The payroll for the Baltimore Club for players alone is between $40,000 and $45,000 a season. Quite a neat bunch.

Gus Krock, who played with "Uncle Anson" in '89 and '90, is the pitcher for the First Wisconsin Regiment team at Tampa.

Snyder, the Colonel's new catcher, purchased from Washington, is six feet three inches in height and weighs 180 pounds.

Frank Selee thinks the Baltimoreans' hearts are broken because the fans have deserted them. "They like applause and miss it," says the Boston manager.

Baltimore critics profess to believe that the fight for the pennant this year will be between Boston and Cleveland. The Orioles are not figured on.

One good effect of the war is that the stronger clubs are economizing. This enables the weaker clubs to buy players and get in the game.

Tim Hurst is the most optimistic personage in base ball. When he concluded the deal for Quinn and Stenzel, the Browns' manager wired: "Nothing lower than the first division for us now. If I can make another deal as good as this, we'll chase the leaders out."

Some one should go out and resurrect John Clarkson, the once famous $10,000 pitcher. John wants to try it again. He is confident that he can pitch winning ball. The success that has crowned the efforts of those two old-time twirlers, Gus Weyhing and Mattie Kilroy, warrants one in believing that Clarkson might be able to go the route.

Base Hits.

Tom Brown is opposed to indoor work for ball players.

In complimenting Tom O'Brien's work as a short-fielder, Ed. Hanlon is fanning the flame of jealousy in the bosom of Hughey Jennings.

Charley Comiskey, of the St. Paul club, says mechanics play ball from the neck down, while artists play from the crown of their heads to the soles of their feet.

The Boston players want the club to offer some financial inducement to take high position in the race. Why not, considering that the club made $100,000 out of their work last season?

Manager Hainon alleges that the Cleveland players were the originators of rowdy work on the diamond and his Baltimore players learned such tactics from Tebeau's crowd. Well, the Baltimores proved to be apt pupils.

The famous John M. Ward is now a legal adjuster for the Nassau trolley road in Brooklyn, which is owned by Al Johnson and his brother, Congressman Tom. They say that Ward is making more money than he ever made in base ball.

A Dislike.

"I suppose," said Mr. Meekton's wife, who had been getting some new clothes, "you are one of these men who complain because the fashions change so fast."

"No," he answered. "When I look over some of the later ones I wish they'd change faster."

This May Explain.

"Why is it that the old and trusted employes are always the ones to abscond with the funds?"

"It must be because they are the only ones who are allowed to know the combinations to the safes."—Chicago News.

BASEBALL TOPICS.

PASSING OF THE OLD TIMERS.

Some Remarkable Records Made By Veteran Ball Players.

This seems to be the year for the downfall of "old timers." The retirement of the "oldest and noblest Roman of them all," Adrian C. Anson, seemed to be the signal for a break in the ranks of the vets. Within the last week Dan Brouthers, who has been drawing salary as a professional ball player for over 20 years, received his "ticket of leave." As Dan was fired by a minor league club it means that the greatest batter the game ever knew is probably out of it for all time to come. Next came the dismissal of Billy Barnie, manager of the Brooklyns. He has been a player and a manager ever since 1875. He helped organize the American Association. Barnie was strictly honest, and never knew the time that he was afraid to say just what he thought. He called a spade a spade at all times and at all places. He was once unjustly blacklisted, along with two other martyrs to the game, Fred Pfeffer and Al Buckenburger. It was an unheard-of and unjust ruling by the National League, and will always stand as a black mark on the fair name of the parent base ball organization. None of the three did any more than look after their own interests. They should not have been barred by the league. Following closely on the release of Billy Barnie came the dismissal of Tom Brown from the Washington management, and the release of Billy Nash by the Philadelphia Club.

Nash and Brown came to fast base ball company the same year. Both have been drawing major league salaries for 14 years. Brown first attracted attention with the American Association club at Columbus, Ohio, in 1884, and it was this same season that Nash made his major league appearance with the Richmond (Va.) Club also in the American Association. One by one the old line guard is passing away. It will not be long at the rate the old-timers are dropping out before none of those who started out in the early eighties will be found on any of the league clubs' rosters. Sam Thompson, who started in 1885, and Charlie Ganzel, who branched out as a major league star in 1884, are two more veterans who bit the dust of dismissal this year. There are not over a half dozen players in the National League whose period of service runs back as far as 1886.

The thinning out of the ranks of the veterans only emphasizes Biddy McPhee's greatness. He has been a major league star since 1882, and after 17 seasons of consecutive service he stands at the head of all major league second basemen. Best of all, he is batting harder this season than he ever did, and is one of the only three members of the Cincinnati team with a batting average of over 300 per cent. for this year.

Richard J. Padden, the second baseman of the Pittsburg Club, was born at Martin's Ferry, W. Va., in 1870. He has recently rejoined his team, which he deserted when President Watkins fined him $25 for conduct which resulted in his being put out of a game by an umpire. Padden began his career as an amateur pitcher at his home and in small cities of Ohio near the

RICHARD PADDEN.

West Virginia line. His arm having lost its cunning, Padden became a second baseman in 1894. The following season found him with the Roanoke Club of Virginia League, which he captained and also managed for a while. The Pittsburg Club secured him in 1896 and he was sent to its farm at Toronto, Can., until July, when he was recalled to take the place of Bierbauer, who was injured. Padden's excellent work led to the release of Bierbauer and his retention as the regular second baseman of that team. He plays the points of the game for all they are worth and ranks high as a batsman.

MONTCLAIR DEFEATED IN A STUBBORN FIGHT.

Riverdale Field Club Won the Deciding Game.

RE-OPENING OF BASEBALL.

CRESCENT OVAL SAW AN EXCITING GAME SATURDAY AFTERNOON.

Plainfield's New Baseball Organization Won From Montclair's Pets—Riverdales Made an Excellent Showing—It Was a Pretty Game Throughout—Home Team Won by Score of 4 to 2.

It was not until Fred Smith had fielded the ball squarely in Wood's hands and the umpire yelled "Man out," that the suspense was over and anybody knew who had won the game. Then the game was over and the Riverdale Field Club had won the deciding game from the Montclair Athletic Club by a score of 4 to 2.

It has been many moons since Plainfield was treated to such a fine exhibition of ball playing as was seen on the Crescent Oval. What made the game particulary interesting was the closeness throughout. Neither side had any decided advantage and each inning seemed likely to put a new phase on the game.

Twice before have the Riverdales and Montclair boys met. The first time, the Montclairites won, then the Riverdales were victorious, and Saturday afternoon the deciding game was fairly won by the Riverdales, now of Plainfield.

The game was an experiment in two ways. The Riverdale management wanted to see what they could do in Plainfield while the Plainfield enthusiasts wanted to see what kind of a game they were to see before they came out too strong for the new arrivals. Suffice it to say that they were more than pleased. The Riverdale boys played a good snappy game, full of life and energy. There was not any loafing and the Crescents would have found in them formidable rivals had the two clubs met.

The Montclair nine came over well strengthened for the match. Harrison, the great Princeton pitcher, did not show up at the start and Terry went in the box where he remained throughout the game. Harrison came in time, however, to take part in the second inning and went out in the left field.

Harry Westervelt, not Huyler Westervelt, was in the box for the Riverdales. He had plenty of speed and a variety of curves that the Montclair batters could not find. "Warry" MacLaughlin was on the bench for the Riverdales ready to take Westervelt's place, had he shown any sings of weakening.

The game began with careful playing by both teams and for the first two innings neither side did anything. In the third, however, Harrison hit safely for one base. Cadmus, who ran for him, stole second and reached third on a fumble by Reinacker. Bernard flied out to Fred Smith, and Wheeler, the ex-Princeton player and captain of the Montclairs, succumbed to Westervelt's curves and was struck out.

In their half of the inning, the Riverdales went in to score. Will Smith hit safely, stole second and was advanced to third on a sacrifice by Wood. Then Westervelt made a pretty hit sending him home. That ended the scoring that inning.

In the fourth, the Riverdales tried it again. Hays reached first on a juggled grounder by Bernard. He was forced out at second by a short infield ball by Hardy. Romig sacrificed sending Hardy to second. Will Smith again distinguished himself by a clean hit far over in right field on which Hardy scuddy home and Smith got round to second on the thrown-in. Wood ended the inning by a fly to Bernard.

The Montclairs tried hard in the fifth. With one out and one man on base, Harrison hit a ball down the foul line to first base which Wood did not get. The umpire and every man on the Riverdale team declared it was foul. The Montclairites hopped up and down and yelled "fair ball." Then there was a consultation. The umpire, Arthur Lederer, stuck to his decision and the chairman of the base ball committee of the Montclair A. C. lost his temper and was going to order his team off the field. Good counsel prevailed and Harrison went back and the game went on. The Montclairs did not score that inning, however.

It was in the next their fun came. Wheeler went out to Easton, Wood followed with a foul fly to Hays. Then Terry sent a long drive out to Hardy who misjudged the ball and let it escape him. Terry reached second and TRIED NEW WAY OF DRIVING TROTTERS.

Prize for One Who Could Go Two Miles Closest to Six Minutes.

MANY HORSES IN THE RACE.

DOUGLASS DARBY'S BROWN MARE "MINNIE" WAS THE WINNER.

Ellis Campbell and J. Wesley Johnson Tied for a Second and Toss of Coin Gave Prize to the Latter—The Exhibition of Speed at a Certain Gait was Very Interesting to All.

One of the best programmes of the season was presented at the track of the Plainfield Driving Association last Saturday afternoon. There was a large crowd of interested people present, showing how popular horse-racing has become. The feature of the afternoon was the three-minute trot open to all comers for a silver pitcher presented by J. Wesley Johnson, of the association. Great interest was shown in this exhibition. There were ten entries and each owner drove his own horse. Generally speaking, excellent time was made.

The first prize was for the horse that could trot two heats the closest to six minutes. Douglass Darby was the winner. His brown mare "Minnie" showed up in great form and rolled off the two miles in fine condition. For second prize, Ellis Campbell and J. Wesley Johnson were a tie and at their own suggestion they tossed up a coin for honors. Mr. Johnson won the toss and he selected the horse blanket as second prize, while Mr Campbell took the remaining prize, a horse whip. Below will be found in detail just what each horse did:

N. B. Smalley's Ned Norton	2:51¼	3:12	6:04¼
H. Hayes' Andy	2:57½	3:18	6:15½
Douglass Darby's Minnie	3:00	2:59½	5:59½
Ellis Campbell's Prince	2:55	3:04	5:59
C. L. Wright's Arpansa	2:59½	3:04½	6:04
Phil Jenner's Ida Mack	3:00½	3:02½	6:03½
Harry Gynette's Arrow	3:02½	3:10	6:12½
S. H. Edwards' Molly Prince	3:03	3:06½	6:09½
J. W. Johnson's Sidnut	2:50	3:11	6:01
W. A. Coddington's Belle	2:59½	3:20	6:19½

During the afternoon there were two good races. One was in the 2:30 class, in which were entered Douglass Darby's horse, "Sunday;" John H. MacLoughlin's horse, "Charles Tammany," and T. Hendrickson's horse, "Tom B." Mr. Darby's horse won the first heat in 2:30, while Mr. MacLoughlin's horse came in first in the second heat with the time of 2:33¼. The third heat was not given.

Another interesting race took place between J. W. Johnson's "Woven Wind," driven by John Osborn, and N. B. Smalley's new trotter, "Kittle Roe," driven by himself. It was the 2:25 class and "Woven Wind" won both heats. The first in 2:33 and the second in 2:33½.

Those who acted as timers during the afternoon were J. Wesley Johnson, Thomas Brantingham and W. F. Williams.

In the exhibition three-minute trot only one horse was allowed on the track at a time, and this was a feature that the crowd enjoyed. The three prizes offered were given by Mr. Johnson, and he was complimented for his public spirit and enterprise in his efforts to bring out some good horses.

STEAL TOO MANY APPLES.

Halsey Compton Suffers From Depredations by Boys in West End.

Halsey Compton says that he has to pay the taxes on an orchard he owns in the west end of the city, but that depredations of small and mischevious boys who like to taste of the forbidden fruit are so often that in the past few years he hasn't even secured enough from the fruit to pay for the taxes. It is thus that he has asked the city to arrest the offenders in return for the taxes he pays. Yesterday Mr. Compton detected four youngsters making a raid on his choice trees and he immediately proceeded to catch them. But the youngsters are very spry, and all but one got away. That one was Robert Scott, who got bottled up in a chicken-coop while trying to get out of the way and was captured and turned over to the police.

This morning Sir Robert was before Judge DeMeza and acknowledged that he took five apples. When the Judge heard that there were other boys implicated in the affair, he adjourned the case till Saturday to give the police a chance to arrest those who escaped yesterday.

Accused of Abusing His Wife.

David McLernon, of Richmond street, arrested for abusing his wife, was before Judge DeMeza this morning. He pleaded not guilty and his case was set down for trial Saturday morning.

Herbert Moore, of Grove street, is spending two weeks in the Catskills.

MAD HORSE PLUNGED ALONG COUNTRY ROAD

And Then Startled the Solitude of Scotch Plains.

WAS A THRILLING RUNAWAY.

TERROR-STRICKEN YOUNG WOMAN TRAILED ALONG IN A BUGGY.

The Horse and Buggy Owned and Driven by V. L. Frazee, Who Had Left the Rig for a Moment to Pick Some Clover at the Side of the Road—Plainfield Bicyclist Was a Hero in Stopping the Runaway.

(Special to The Daily Press.)

Scotch Plains, August 15.—A plunging, maddened horse, running at breakneck speed and pulling a buggy in which was seated a terror-stricken young woman, holding on for dear life to escape being thrown out of the careening vehicle, was the thrilling sight that aroused the usual Sunday morning solitude in this place yesterday. It was just about 11 o'clock when the residents heard the frightened cries of the young women and rushed to their doors to see the horse gallop by at a terrific speed, the reins trailing along on the ground.

Every moment it looked as though the swaying vehicle would topple over and perhaps mean the death of its fair occupant, or come in collision with some of the many bicyclists who were spinning along the road in a leisurely manner at the time.

At Stanberry's corner four wheelmen, who saw the runaway approaching, dismounted and made a concerted effort to corral the beast. It was as useless as it was valorous, though, for the animal whizzed by like a shot and the young men had to hustle to avoid being run over.

At Emery's corner the animal turned into Front street and started towards Plainfield. Walter Martin, of Plainfield, was wheeling towards the Plains and saw the horse coming. Mr. Martin quickly dismounted, threw his bicycle to one side of the road and as the horse, whose gait had slackened some by this time, reached where he stood he made a heroic plunge and succeeded in getting a firm hold on to the dragging reins. Martin was thrown to the ground, but pluckily held on and in a few moments had dexteriously turned the horse to the sidewalk where he was brought to a standstill. The stop, however, was so sudden that the young woman was thrown from the buggy in a hurry.

A crowd soon collected and the young woman was picked up. Except for being very nervous and excited, she did not seem to suffer any injuries from her perilous ride.

As soon as she became composed she told the circumstances of the runaway. Mr. Frazee and the young woman had started out in the morning for a pleasure drive through Washington Valley. When they reached J. A. Gavett's summer home, Mr. Frazee got out of the wagon to pick some clover. From some unexplainable cause the horse suddenly became frightened and started to runaway. Before Mr. Frazee could grasp the reins the animal had got out of his reach and was rushing pell-mell along the country road. Mr. Gavett hastily harnessed his horse and together with Mr. Frazee started in pursuit of the fractious animal. Expecting every moment to find the buggy a wreck along side of the road and the fair occupant seriously injured, the two men drove rapidly along. Reaching this place and finding the horse and the young woman had suffered no great injury, a great weight was relieved from Mr. Frazee's mind. In all its wild run the horse had not broken a strap of the harness.

After a few minutes Mr. Frazee got into the wagon and drove home.

Death of Miss Stevens.

The volunteers in Miles' army are now anxious to get home and are hoping to start soon. Orders have been received, however, to make the troops as comfortable as possible where they are at present.

The transports that have arrived are being unloaded as no orders to the contrary have been received here.

AMERICAN SUNDAY NOT CONEY ISLAND KIND

Rev. Carlos Martyn's Terse Ideas Of The Sabbath.

IS FOR WORSHIP AND HOME.

HE SAYS THAT SUNDAY IS ONE OF GOD'S BEST GIFTS TO MEN.

A Class of People Cradled on the Other Side of the Ocean Are Antagonistic to American Ideas—The Press, He Says, Champions Things That as a Rule Injure the Keeping of the Day.

Yesterday afternoon at the Y. M. C. A. building at 4:15 o'clock, Rev. Carlos Martyn, of New York, gave an interesting talk on "The American Sunday," a subject which always attracts. There was a good-sized audience present that listened attentively to what Dr. Martyn had to say. In part he spoke as follows:

"God has set apart one day in the week as a time of worship, and that day has been changed from the seventh to the first day of the week. Sunday, the first day of the week, the higher courts do not sit, the legislatures do no business, banks, exchanges, amusements and business is suspended on that day.

In the first place, the day should be used as a day of worship; secondly, as a home day. The great trouble with the American people is that they are born in a hurry, live in a hurry, die in a hurry, and are taken to the cemetery on a trot.

"In the third place, it should be a day when one another's companionship should be enjoyed. I would not like to see a return of the Puritan Sabbath, when it would be a crime for a man to kiss his own wife. Lastly, the day should be given to good works as largely as possible, to clothing, feeding and instructing those who need such.

"Sunday is one of God's best gifts to men, and possessing such a day we should be willing and ready to surrender all for that day. There are several things that tend to work against a proper observance of the day, and among them are the brothel, gambling den, grog shop. In the second place, there is a class cradled on the other side of the water that are taught to regard Sunday as a work day, and these people hinder the work of Sabbath observance. We have typical Americans in Dewey, Schley, Sampson. Those men have given the law, they have not taken it.

"Now, in a great measure these things that injure the observance of the Sabbath day are championed by the American press, which is called the American Bible. Through the Sunday edition of the newspaper we have a most insidious thing that leads people away. People who read the Sunday newspaper read of the flesh, the world and the devil. What is the average newspaper? It is an expression of instantaneous thought. The newspaper says something and then gets behind a stone wall to see what the effect will be. Until there is conversion we may always expect the paper to champion these things. They claim to speak for the people and say that the library, museums must be open on Sunday, and that concerts must be given, simply for the reason that during the week the working people have no time to enjoy these things. Those who expose such things for the working people are just the ones who would like to have a Coney Island Sunday. Sunday is distinctively an American institution and if it is God's day we must keep it. If it is man's day people will be inclined to keep it to suit themselves. It is a grand institution and it behooves all to so regard it."

CONCERT AND DANCE.

A Pleasant Evening Spent at the Hotel Hunterston Saturday.

There was a big attendance at the concert given in the Hotel Hunterston Saturday evening. Besides the guests at the hotel there were a number of others present. The concert was arranged by the Hunterston orchestra. It included several selections by the orchestra, a contralto solo by Miss Katheryn Krymer, of New York, two cornet solos by J. Berger, a solo by Edward T. Groeschel and a clever sleight-of-hand performance by Prof. Vanetti.

At the conclusion of the concert, which was heartily encored, the Saturday evening hop was held. The spacious parlors were thrown open to the dancers and were soon well filled with whirling and gliding couples. The dance was a most successful event.

Charles Hudnut, of Flemington, is spending a few days in town.

HUSBAND FOLLOWS WIFE TO ETERNAL HOME

Death of One of the Oldest Residents in Plainfield.

E. B. TITSWORTH IS NO MORE.

HE HAD DONE MUCH TOWARDS BUILDING UP THE CITY.

Born in New Brunswick in 1817, but Had Resided in Plainfield for Fifty-five Years—One of the Pioneers in the Clothing Business—First Volunteer from Plainfield in the Civil War.

For weeks husband and wife lay in adjoining rooms, both sick unto death. Two weeks ago the wife passed away, and at 1 o'clock yesterday morning the husband, Edward B. Titsworth, quietly succumbed to his fatal illness. In his death Plainfield loses one of her oldest citizens and business men who played a prominent part in the building up of the city, while a large circle of friends mourn the loss of a good and true man. The death of Mr. Titsworth took place at his home, 311 New street.

Edward B. Titsworth was born at New Brunswick in 1817. He has been a resident of Plainfield for fifty-five years. In 1833 he was married to Ann Dunn, daughter of Hon. David Dunn, of New Market. Two years later they moved to Plainfield.

He was engaged in the general merchandise business and the manufacture of clothing. He was one of the pioneers of the system of clothing manufacture in which the articles to be made were sent out to the neighboring homes and made there instead of all under one roof. At different times he was associated in partnership with Reuben and Rudolph M. Titsworth, and his brother A. D. Titsworth.

He bought a home on West Front street, opposite where Music Hall now stands. A portion of the house was used as the printing office of Milton F. Cushing, who published The Plainfield Union, Plainfield's first weekly newspaper.

In 1857 Mr. Titsworth built Temperance Hall, now 110 West Front street, at that time the first three-story building in the city.

He was one of the first to volunteer from Plainfield in the Civil War, joining Company I, Third New Jersey Volunteers. Soon after going to the front, he was appointed Sergeant. He was with the regiment in all its engagements until May, 1863, when he was sent to the Newark Hospital with an illness contracted in the field and was finally discharged for disability.

He was always identified with the musical interests of Plainfield and was known all along the line of the Jersey Central Railroad as one of the best singing school teachers to be found. He was a prominent member of the Harmonic Society, of which Dr. Albert Utter was the leader, which was then to Plainfield what the Choral Society has been since.

Since the Civil War, he has been engaged in the manufacture and sale of washing machinery.

He has always been a Seventh-Day Baptist and is a member of the church of that denomination in this city. He has also been a member of Winfield Scott Post, G. A. R., since its first days. He was a member of Plainfield Lodge, No. 44, I. O. O. F., and was one of the oldest Odd Fellows in the city, having been a member of that organization for 49 years.

He leaves three children, Mrs. Halsey B. Greene, of West Fifth street, Mrs. Truman W. Saunders, of Williamstown, Mass., and David E. Titsworth, of East Seventh street.

Mr. Titsworth was the last male member of a family of ten children, two of whom survive him, Mrs. Phœbe D. Ross, of West Fifth street, who is in her eighty-ninth year, and Mrs. Cornelia M. Dunn, in her eighty-fifth. Two of his brothers have been prominently identified with Plainfield interests, Abram Dunham Titsworth, who died a number of years ago, having been County Judge here for many years, and Isaac D. Titsworth, who died last year at the ripe age of ninety-one, having been a director of the First National Bank from its organization, and its president for some years prior to his death.

He had a large circle of friends in this city and the surrounding towns. He was known to many as "Uncle Ed," although there was no relationship. His lovable disposition and helpful nature made him a man popular with all. His willingness to render aid to those in trouble made him many friends.

The funeral will be held from his late home tomorrow morning at 10:30 o'clock.

DR. PETERS SPOKE AT CAMP MEETING.

Eminent New York Divine Addressed a Large Audience.

MANY ATTEND THE MEETING

MUST WORSHIP WILLINGLY TO ENJOY RELIGION.

Dr. Peters Told of Conditions in Many Churches—Many Have Not Time to Worship But Have Time to Die—Church Needs Money as Well as Prayers—To Continue Another Week.

In the varied experiences of the well-known New York divine, Rev. Dr. Madison C. Peters, it never happened until yesterday afternoon that he took part in the services at a negro camp meeting. It was a negro camp meeting in the sense that it was given by the negroes although a large percentage of the audience who assembled in the grove at Netherwood yesterday were of the Caucasian race. Many were drawn there by the announcement that Dr. Peters was to speak and came to hear what he might say under such rather unusual circumstances.

There must have been nearly two thousand people scattered about in the grove, some coming in carriages, awheel, on the trolley or afoot. Many of them occupied the rude wooden benches in the open air auditorium or stood about in the rear of the seats. The carriages formed an outer circle about the camp

After the opening services, led by Rev. Dr. Coster, the colored pastor of St. Peter's A. M. E. church, under whose auspices the camp meeting is held, Rev. Dr. Peters was introduced.

It was not a sermon that he gave, rather a little talk. His subject or text was from Gal. 4:15—"Where is the blessedness ye spake of?" It could be put in another way, he said, why are you not as happy as you used to be? It was a question, he declared, that could be addressed to any evangelical church in the country. The evidences of it were the abandoned prayer closets and forsaken Bibles, the want of religious enjoyment and the giving less to the church.

He spoke very eloquently of the subject. He pointed out that many served God because they thought they had to and not from a willingness to do so. The only way to enjoy religion was to worship willingly.

In these busy times some thought they did not have time for worship and so had gradually given up their share in the observation of Sunday and the daily worship. They all had time to die, however, he said.

He spoke of the necessity of giving as well as praying, for it was the dropping of the money into God's treasury that makes the machinery go. The goods of a man are not for his enjoyment alone. He is supposed to use them for the benefit of mankind. Poverty was not a pass to Heaven; it was just as Christianlike to make all the money one could honestly. Some men, he explained, were given a talent to make money, just as others were talented as preachers.

He spoke about the way in which many churches were run. One man did all the work and the rest all the talking. He urged his hearers that their first duty was toward their church.

Many of those who now called themselves Christians, he compared to the "Leaning Tower of Pisa," just as crooked as it could be and stand up.

In concluding, he made a plea for aid for the St. Peters' church and announced that a collection would be taken. Then several people in the audience were noticed to rise and start for the rear of the grove.

"Stop," said Dr. Peters. Anybody who leaves now is a Spaniard" There was a laugh and those who had started sat down again under that charge.

Sunday morning, Miss Lizzie Babbitt, the colored woman evangelist, spoke to a large audience. In the evening, Rev. Dr. Carpenter and the Jubilee Singers attracted many.

This evening, Miss Lizzie Babbitt will speak again, and Thursday evening a gospel temperance meeting will be held.

SPAIN'S HOME TROUBLE

The Carlists Think "It Is Now or Never" With Them.

MADRID AFTER THE WAR

A Prominent Member of the Carlists Says No Opportunity for Succesful Uprising Will Ever Occur Again. They Can Count on Many Thousands of Supporters and Harrass the Government for Many Months.

Madrid, Aug. 15.—There seems to be much division in the Carlists' ranks. Some of them, such as Olazabal, say: "We are not going to fight."

The following conversation with the most prominent Carlist in Madrid is reported. From a previous statement that nothing in this world could prevent them fighting he has now departed to the extent of saying:

"If the Carlists do not fight at this juncture they will never fight again."

"Do not your sentiments of patriotism prevent you causing Spain the terrible disaster of another war?" was asked.

"On the contrary," he replied cynically, "if we do not go forth this time and save the honor of Spain, if we abandon her to the hands of those who have placed her in extremis, we may consider the Carlist party forever dead. It would be mere suicide. When will such another occasion ever present itself? The Carlists can dispose of many thousands of men and carry on a guerilla warfare until such time as the country comes over to its side.

"As regards the regular army, we are just in the same position as the insurgents in Cuba, where 250,000 regulars could not get the better of 8,000 or 10,000 insurgents. If the Cubans counted on the people of the island we Carlists count upon the support of the whole north of Spain, part of Catalonia, Aragon, La Mancha and old Castile. In short, you may state that the Carlists are ready to rise."

Affairs After the Signing.

Madrid, Aug. 15.—The government has telegraphed instructions to the governors general of Porto Rico and the Philippines for the carrying out of the terms of the protocol signed by the United States and Spain, and to prepare for evacuation

Instructions were also sent as to the policy to be adopted in the event of the insurgents refusing to observe the armistice.

Official circles are most disturbed regarding the future of the Philippines. Reports are afloat that Spain will endeavor to induce the powers to support morally her efforts to retain the islands. In this connection importance is given to France's part played in Washington. An official statement is given out that the good offices exercised by France on this trying occasion must make closer all future relations between the two countries, especially when it is remembered how many interests they have in common.

The Liberal, commenting on the gravity of the situation as regards the Philippine islands, says it appears certain that the peace commission will accord to Spain sovereignty over almost the whole of the archipelago, but that Spain will lose more than she will gain if Aguinaldo's insurgents do not submit.

The Tiempo urges the government to hasten in every way possible the completion of the peace negotiations.

Havana, Cuba, Aug. 15.—Although nothing official has been published, a semi-official note in the newspapers assures the people that peace is about to be made. The people doubt this, and are now awaiting official confirmation.

The colonial cabinet met yesterday and Captain General Blanco informed the members that as the representative of the Madrid government he had called them together to notify them that a peace protocol had been signed by Spain and the United States.

Captain General Blanco said he could not state the precise terms until he received dispatches from the government in Madrid. These dispatches have not yet been published, and the people are still in ignorance of the conditions. It is stated that General Blanco will publish a peace proclamation in the Official Gazette to-day.

Perfect order is maintained in the city, but the people are anxious to know on what basis peace has been arranged.

The Peace Commision.

Washington, Aug. 15.—The question demanding immediate attention is the appointment of the peace commission, which is to meet at Paris. The president conferred with Secretary Day during Saturday relative to the peace commission, but it was said at the state department late in the day that an announcement of the commissioners might be deferred for some days.

It is understood that the president has not fully determined upon the personnel of the commission. Several of the public men who saw him yesterday were satisfied that the commission would be made up of Secretary Day, Senators Allison and Gorman, either Joseph H. Choate or Elihu Root of New York and probably a prominent army officer.

The president desires to have Adjutant General H. C. Corbin a member of the peace commission, and it is probable that he will be selected. The matter is being considered in reference to the duties which will come under General Corbin's direction in relation to the suspension of hostilities and if it should appear that the duties which he will be called upon to perform as adjutant general can be assumed by another officer without detriment to the service, General Corbin no doubt will become a member of the commission.

Cable Restriction Removed.

New York, Aug. 15.—The censorship on all cable messages written in plain language, dispatched from this city, has been abolished. The only restriction that now remains is upon cipher and code messages, other than governmental dispatches, to Cuba and Porto Rico.

FROM MONTAUK POINT.

Visitors to Be Excluded Entirely. Completing Quarantine Arrangements.

Montauk, L. I., Aug. 15.—Gen. Young has issued an order that has particular interest for sightseers and visitors who may have in mind a visit to Camp Wikoff, and it will be anything except satisfactory news to them. He has decided that no visitors, even though they be friends of the soldiers here, will be admitted within the camp confines, and that anyone having in mind a visit to Montauk for the purpose of visiting the camp might just as well stay at home and save his money, for he, or she, as the case might be, would not be permitted to pass the guard lines.

While this may seem a harsh measure, particularly to the friends of the soldiers, it is not without reasonable cause. There is still an immense amount of work to be done to get the several camps in readiness for the soldiers, who will shortly be coming in daily. The space about the depot is already thronged with teams, wagons, horses and workmen, and a crowd of visitors or excursionists landed at the station would of necessity be forced into places where they would be in the way of somebody who, in the present crowded condition of affairs, is doing his utmost to accomplish the greatest possible work in the shortest possible time. Besides, there would be the usual number of questions to be asked by persons strange to the place and situation, and nobody has time to answer questions here.

So, altogether, General Young has thought it best that visitors be kept away, at least for the present, and has issued his orders accordingly. The Long Island Railroad, which had not as yet thought of doing so, will not run any excursion trains, therefore, and any excursion boats that may come into the harbor will be promptly met and ordered away by the auxiliary Alleen, which, on the water, in her coat of black paint, looks to the uninitiated as terrible as a policeman does on land. Preparations have not been made yet for transporting back to New York the typhoid fever patients at present in the Camp Wikoff hospital, as Dr. Doty suggested should be done. The suggestion, however, has met with the hearty approval of General Young, commanding officer of Camp Wikoff, Colonel William H. Forwood, his chief surgeon, and the Red Cross Association, and was considered a most excellent idea, because of the intention from the first has been to make this camp as healthy as possible, and keep it absolutely free from disease.

So far there are only about ten cases of typhoid, but if this number greatly increases and the increase be kept there there is no knowing to what extent the disease may run among the troops. Particularly if the drainage should get in the water, and in such a sandy soil there is the bare possibility, even with the greatest precautions.

Y. M. C. A. at Montauk.

New York, Aug. 15.--The army and navy commission of the Young Men's Christian Association intends to erect no less than six tents at Montauk Point. One tent that has been used in Tampa, Fla., arrived with the Rough Riders Wednesday, and was at once pitched.

Three more tents have already been ordered and it is expected that they will be up before all the troops homeward bound from Santiago reach Montauk Point.

The work of the commission is greatly appreciated by the soldiers, as the tents afford them many comforts and pleasures that they would not otherwise have. In the tents are ice water, free reading matter, facilities for correspondence and other things.

All these comforts and conveniences are free, and serve to bring the men together under the best circumstances.

CHARITY IN FRANCE.

Ladies of Rank Nurse Cancer Patients in the Hospitals.

Ladies of the highest rank, who seem the most engrossed by frivolous pleasures, will perform heroic acts of charity in the most unexpected manner. The Infirmary for Cancerous Diseases, containing the most fearful and loathsome examples of that repulsive malady, is regularly attended by ladies of rank, who have their fixed days of duty, when, each in turn, they dress the wounds with their own hands. The Duchess d'Uzes, one of the best known leaders of fashion, whose splendid festivities fill the chronicles of the leading newspapers, is one of the most assiduous, showing an adroitness in the exercise of her charitable functions, which induces her care to be particularly desired by the patients.

Great families, when residing in their country houses, have regular days in the week when the daughters of the family dress wounds and sores among the surrounding peasantry. The mothers in such families repress energetically any morbid sensibility which might interfere with such duties. "What will you be fit for in after life if you cannot command your feelings?" said a venerable Marquise who looked as if she had stepped down from the frame of one of her pictures in her chateau. Another instance is a lady in a less high position, who took in a wretched beggar child on a cold wintry night, performing maternal offices as regards removing the consequences of his neglected condition which were so repulsive that her physical strength gave way and she was taken violently ill in consequence. On being praised for her charity, she exclaimed almost indignantly: "What! when our Lord washed the feet of His disciples, you would have me shrink from doing what is necessary for a poor, wretched child, merely through a feeling of disgust?"

It must be acknowledged, however, that by the side of acts of heroic charity there is, saving exceptions a great lack of that genial kindness which shows itself to equals in any trouble by many little friendly attentions in England and America—the "cup of cold water" of the Gospel.—Century.

PREPARING FOR PEACE

Our Government Must Now Face New and Untried Conditions.

MANY SERIOUS QUESTIONS

Great Change in the War and Navy Departments Since the Protocol Was Signed, Peace Now Being Assured the Next Step Will Be to Settle the Difficulties by Commission.

Washington, Aug. 15.—Since Secretary of State Day and Ambassador Cambon signed the peace protocol on Friday, there has been the most remarkable change in the war and navy departments. For the first time since the memorable February 15, when the battleship Maine went down in Havana harbor, there is a decided relaxation in the work of the officials in these departments. Peace is now an assured fact and the administration, realizing this, is giving its officials a little rest after their long and trying period of war and preparations for war.

The next step which will be taken by the president, in settling the difficulties existing between the United States and Spain, is the selection of five commissioners who will represent the United States at Paris. It is understood that President McKinley has practically decided upon these commissioners and will make their names public as soon as they have signified their willingness to serve. Judge Day's name will head the list.

An official of the war department states that before September at least one hundred thousand volunteers will have been mustered out of the service of the United States. The remainder of the army, as it is now organized, will have to be retained in the service of the government for several months. Troops will be sent to Cuba in large numbers; troops will be retained in Porto Rico and for some time the army will necessarily remain in the Philippines. The regular army will remain upon a war footing for many months, and in fact the chances are that the size of the regular army will never be reduced to the old minimum, but rather will be increased.

Chairman Hull of the House committee on military affairs, says that every effort will be made by his committee to keep a large standing army. It was his opinion that the army would never again fall below 75,000 men, and might possibly be kept as large as 100,000 men. With the expansion of territory under the sovereignty of the United States it necessarily follows that both the army and navy must grow in dimensions.

The secretary of war is assigning the regiments mustered under the second call to corps. They are being ordered from their state rendezvous to the various army camps. These regiments organized under the second call were yesterday ordered to their camps as designated:

The Second West Virginia to Middletown, Pa., Second corps.

The First Delaware to Middletown, Pa., Second corps.

The Tenth Ohio, from Columbus, O., to Middletown, Pa., Second corps.

The secretary's purpose in sending these troops out of their states is not understood by army officials. They will undoubtedly be among the first troops mustered out of service, and for this purpose will be sent back to their various states. It simply means additional expenditure for the government for the transportation.

As yet nothing has been heard in Washington from either Admiral Dewey or General Merritt. Whether or not there has been an unnecessary loss of life in the Philippines has yet to be learned.

Considering the fact that both of the American commanders in the Philippines had been informed by the government that peace was near at hand, the officials of the administration hope for the best.

Camp Alger, in Virginia, is to be wholly abandoned this week. All the troops now stationed at Camp Alger will begin immediately preparations for leaving. They are to march to Middletown, Pa. The troops which left Camp Alger and are now in the vicinity of Manassas are also to march to Middletown and encamp at that place.

Occupation of Manila.

Washington, Aug. 15.—It is expected that the American occupation of Manila will occur immediately after the receipt by Admiral Dewey and General Merritt of the order sent them last night. This may not be deferred by the lack of cable facilities, as the American occupation of Manila probably will result in the opening of direct cable communication between that city and the outside world. The only difficulty thus far has been that the cable company would not recognize American control of the cable so long as the American forces were not in possession of the city. The orders sent Admiral Dewey are much more specific than those sent other naval commanders, as the occupation of Manila and the holding of the bay and harbor involve more important considerations than the mere cessation of hostilities.

It was at first thought the navy department had a dispatch boat at Hong Kong ready to carry forward the orders to Admiral Dewey and General Merritt, but the department learned today that no dispatch boat was at Hong Kong, although one was likely to reach there to-day or to-morrow. Meanwhile it is possible that Consul Wildman may charter a steamer and send the orders forward. He has general instructions as dispatch agent, and it was said at the state department that these instructions govern in the present case. General Greely is satisfied no use can be made of the cable connecting Hong Kong with Manila, as there are no cable operators at the Manila end.

Mail Matters at Santiago.

Washington, Aug. 15.--The reports from Santiago indicate that the amount of mail matter handled there is enormous. On July 27 Mr. Kemper, the agent, reports that 50,000 pieces of mail were sent to the United States, on July 29, 12,500 pieces, and on August 1, 14,500 pieces.

The Clearing Sale of Shirt Waists.

With the close of July comes the greatest price-cutting—the most attractive values ever offered. The remaining stock is divided into two lots, 49c. and 75c., former prices ranged from 75c to $1.50. There's not 200 waists in the entire assortment, so we advise an early call for the best selection.

Sailor Hats and Untrimmed Hats 49c.

This means that each and every hat, irrespective of former price, will be 49c. Of especial interest should the price be, as none have been less than 75c, and the styles offered are all of this season's production.

Men's Negligee Shirts 59c.

Sounds cheap, but the hundred or more shirts that go on sale have been selling at 75c., 85c. and $1. The patterns are all new and desirable, the kind that you would like. Clearing time is here, and the new price, 59c., will be the means of their quick disposal.

Men's Summer Underwear 20c.

Nearly 600 pieces gauze underwear to be 20c. This is ordinarily the best 25c underwear sold, but 20c will be the clearing price.

ARRIVALS AT CAMP WIKOFF.

Four Ships Loaded With Troops from Santiago Arrive.

Camp Wikoff, Montauk Point, L. I., Aug. 15.—There was great commotion in camp Sunday morning when the St. Louis and three other transports were sighted off the point and bore down on the landing place.

With two companies of the Seventy-first New York, and the North and Tenth regular infantry, the St. Louis was far in advance of the others.

They were the Miami, bearing Colonel Theodore Roosevelt and the Rough Riders, and the Matteawan and Vigilancia.

They had been expected since early Saturday and as soon as the St. Louis was made out on the horizon, the bustle of preparation for the reception of her troops began.

On board the Matteawan and the Vigilancia were the First regular cavalry, Battery H, Fourth artillery, the Thirteenth and Sixth infantry.

A small transport which was held in readiness at the dock, immediately put out to sea to bring off the troops.

The St. Louis sailed from Santiago on the night of the 11th, and the joy of her men and those of the other transports at once more setting foot on New York soil will doubtless keep the camp in a roar for the remainder of the day.

Men already in camp have made a hundred and one preparations for the reception of their comrades in arms, and many relatives and friends are on the spot awaiting the landing of loved ones. Officers have been busily making ready the detention camp, which is now in shape to receive a thousand of the men. Five hundred more tents are up to-day and the detention hospital is now completed and under General Randall's direction.

The landing of the troops is to begin at once.

COL. HAY TO SUCCEED DAY.

The Secretary of State to Go on the Peace Commission.

Washington, Aug. 15.—It seems to be settled that Ambassador Hay is to succeed Secretary Day when the latter becomes chairman of the peace commission. The authority for this statement is unofficial, but from a source which shows that such is the determination of the president at present. The indications are that Secretary Day's resignation from the state department will be in and accepted within a week.

It is understood that the president contemplates the appointment of Secretary Day to a circuit judgeship after the work of the peace commission has been finished. A bill is pending in Congress for the appointment of an additional judge for the Sixth circuit, which includes Michigan, Ohio and Kentucky. The district is so large that it overtaxes one judge, and it is understood that the appointment of another will be authorized soon after the meeting of Congress, and that the new position is to go to Judge Day. It is said, though, to be possible that Judge Taft, the present judge of the circuit, may retire, and that in that event Mr. Day will be appointed without waiting for action by Congress.

Pope Broken With Age.

Berlin, Aug. 15.—A special dispatch from Rome to the Cologne Gazette says that the condition of the pope is no longer capable of being disguised.

His health has gone from bad to worse until now he is completely broken with age and infirmity.

He rarely speaks, and when he does his voice is very weak. He is unable to write, work or follow the course of business in any way.

Even thinking tires him and prayers confuse him. His holiness has been observed to commence the same prayer ten times without noticing the repetition. In fact, his life is slowly ebbing away.

Cardinal Rampolla attends to all of the Vatican business.

The Blockade Raised.

Washington, Aug. 15.—The merchant vessels of the world are now open to enter and leave all Cuban and Porto Rican ports.

The state department holds that no further proclamation is needed raising the blockade of these islands. The orders issued to the military and naval commanders and the president's proclamation of peace are said to be sufficient in themselves to end the blockade and open all ports to the shipping of the world. This means much not only to Spain and the beleaguered islands, but to the merchant shipping of Great Britain, France, Germany and other countries having commerce with Cuba and Porto Rico.

Sampson and Schley Coming.

Washington, D. C., Aug. 15.—Admirals Sampson and Schley will come to New York on their respective flagships, which have been ordered to that point. The orders issued Saturday night covered the flagships of both admirals, but did not specifically state that these high officers would come. It is said at the navy department that no special consideration has been given as yet to the disposition of these officers and commands of various battleships and cruisers during the period of repairing the warships, but the officers probably will remain with their ships, visiting Washington occasionally on personal conferences.

No Yellow Fever in Santiago.

Santiago de Cuba, Aug. 14.—General Leonard Wood, military governor of this city, and a board of physicians have just completed a house to house inspection of Santiago. Considerable sickness, mostly malaria and dysentery, was found, but no authentic case of yellow fever was discovered. The sanitary precautions taken since the occupation of Santiago by the United States forces, have had the effect of reducing the death rate from 103 to 37 daily, on an average.

The Spanish Commissioners.

Washington, Aug. 15.—Little is known here of the personnel of the Spanish peace commission. The general belief, however, is that Senor Leon y Castillo, the Spanish ambassador at Paris; Senor Moret, minister of the colonies; the Duke Almodovar de Rio, minister of foreign affairs, and Senor Polo de Bernabe, the late minister at Washington, will be considered when the names of commissioners are chosen.

FIRED A PARTING SHOT

A Havana Shell Spoils Howell's Quarters on the San Francisco

FINAL WAR MOVEMENTS

News from the Havana Blockade Tells of a Little Spanish Rifle Practice Which Did No Serious Damage. The Bombardment of Manzanillo, in Porto Rico Mils Fought Until Orders Came to Cease.

Key West, Aug. 14.—Several naval vessels arrived late last night from the Cuban blockade. Among them, and to which now attaches peculiar interest on account of having been in the last engagement off Havana, when the flagship San Francisco was made a mark for Spanish batteries, was the torpedo boat destroyer Sylvia, under command of George H. Peters.

He reports that Thursday night, in anticipation of some unusual incident, Commodore Howell gave orders to close in on Havana. The blockade fleet patrolled off the harbor entrance during the night.

When the morning dawned the flagship, with the Sylvia close astern, was within three thousand yards of Morro. Suddenly a battery opened fire with 6-pounders to get the range. When the Spaniards were satisfied they had the flagship where they wanted her, they opened fire from their ten and twelve-inch guns.

About twenty shots were fired, the shells passing between the San Francisco and the Sylvia. One shell exploded close to the flagship, a piece of which tore a hole in the stern of the San Francisco, passing through the commodore's and captain's cabins and destroying the furniture. The Sylvia was not injured.

Signals were displayed from the flagship not to return the fire, but to withdraw out of the range of the Spanish batteries.

The Sylvia was manned by members of the Brooklyn naval reserves, who were anxious to engage the Spaniards.

After the firing the Sylvia was sent into the harbor under a flag of truce with dispatches from the commodore. Steaming in under the frowning guns of Morro castle, which were still hot from the shots fired at the American vessels, the Sylvia set her signals. They were answered shortly by the arrival of a Spanish gunboat from the harbor. Courtesies were exchanged, dispatches delivered for General Blanco, and the gunboat and the Sylvia parted.

Fired for Hours at Manzanillo.

Santiago de Cuba, Aug. 14.—Advices were received by General Shafter yesterday to the effect that Manzanillo was bombarded Friday night and again Saturday morning.

General Shafter at once cabled to the Spanish commander at Manzanillo that peace had been declared and requested him to advise the American commander of the fact under a flag of truce, which he did, and the shelling of the town ceased.

Miles Fought Until the Last Moment.

Washington, D. C., Aug. 15.—The troops under Major General Miles in Porto Rico continued to fight up to the very eve of the signing of the peace protocol. This dispatch was received at the war department concerning the fight near Abonito Friday afternoon:

Ponce, Aug. 13.

Secretary of War, Washington:

General Wilson reports Major Lancaster, with Potts's battery, at half past one p. m., 12th inst., quickly silenced enemy's battery at Asomanta, near Abonito, and drove him from his position and rifle pits. No infantry fire on our part. Lieutenant John P. Hains, Fourth artillery, struck by stray Mauser bullet; not serious.

A shell from enemy's gun burst just over one of our pickets, killing Corporal Swansen and wounding Corporal Jenks, Company L, Third Wisconsin, neck and arm; Private Vought, same company, seriously, in abdomen; Private Bunce, same company, in chest; not seriously. MILES.

Adjutant General Corbin was asked about the reply from General Miles to the orders to him directing him to cease hostilities, and this is the text of his reply:

"I acknowledge the receipt of the proclamation of the president commanding that all military operations against the enemy be suspended."

A distinguished military official said last night that it was probable from a military standpoint that the troops of General Miles would for the moment rest where they were and go into camp to await the future orders referred to in the instructions sent yesterday.

There will be no further attempt to stop the expedition under General Frederick Grant now on the way to Porto Rico, and it will be expected to remain there with the army of General Miles. It can be safely said that there will be no increase of the Porto Rican army at present, but that Major General Miles will so distribute his troops as to effectively garrison the different points of the island.

It is understood both by him and the administration that he will be able with his present force to enforce order in the island and to put into effect any regulations that may be prescribed. His troops will take possession of San Juan as soon as the Spanish evacuate it.

It is believed that the prisoners confined in Porto Rican prisons for alleged political offences will be released as soon as the cities in which they are imprisoned are occupied by American forces.

General Miles will doubtless place his troops in positions from which they will be able to advance to occupy San Juan as soon as the arrangements have been made for this move by the military commission. It is possible he will make an arrangement by which he will occupy San Juan even before the commissioners have acted.

Vesuvius in Eruption.

Naples Aug. 15.—Mount Vesuvius is in a state of eruption from a new crater. The eruption is supposed to be connected with the seismic disturbance at Messina and in southern Italy.

PEACE NEWS AT SANTIAGO.

City Went Fairly Wild When It Got News That Hostilities Had Ended.

Santiago, Cuba, Aug. 14.—On receipt of the president's proclamation of a cessation of hostilities, General Shafter took steps for the immediate notification of the Spanish commanders in the vicinity and also of the insurgent leaders. The Spanish commanders at Manzanillo, Colonel Pirron, when he was notified, was asked to transmit the news to the insurgent leaders in the neighborhood.

Jibari was also communicated with, and steps were taken to send couriers direct to Garcia, who is before Holguin, to inform him of the facts.

General Shafter said yesterday: "I have no doubt that the insurgent leaders will act on the notification to cease hostilities. Though not instructed from Washington, I have taken measures to inform them of the signature of the preliminaries of peace between the United States and Spain.

"I had conversation with many prominent Cubans in reference to the attitude of the insurgent forces, now that the peace preliminaries have been signed and hostilities ceased between the United States and Spain. All express the belief that the insurgents will loyally observe the conditions. So far as eastern Cuba is concerned, the insurgent leaders will immediately cease operations against the Spaniards on notification of the president's proclamation. Garcia is operating now in the territory at Holguin outside the part of the province under military occupation by the United States.

"The president's proclamation was received here with the greatest enthusiasm. The officers and the men of the army of invasion are alike supremely satisfied with the definite declaration of peace. A period of uncertainty and inactivity is now ended. The spirits of all have been raised since the cessation of active operations before the city of Santiago."

LI HUNG CHAMG AND RUSSIA

Said to Have Promised Control of Imperial Customs.

London, Aug. 15.—A special dispatch from Shanghai, received here has the following to say:

"The China Gazette states that the Russian government holds Li Hung Chang's promise, made during his visit to St. Petersburg, that China would place the imperial customs under Russian control whenever the interests of the two countries demanded the change.

"Li Hung Chang is said to favor M. Pavloff, the Russian charge d'affaires, superseding Sir Robert Hart as inspector general of the Chinese customs.

"The emperor has issued several striking decrees ordering the viceroys and Tartar generals to concert measures for the formation of a new navy under foreign instructors, and urging the provincial governors to abandon time-honored Chinese ideas in favor of western methods and to encourage the development of the country on European lines.

Russians have obtained control of large tracts of land along the route of the proposed New-Chwang railway."

To Reopen Trade With Cuba.

New York, Aug. 15.—Steamship men, exporters and importers, and the commission merchants of this city are confident that the revival of Cuban and Porto Rican trade is at hand and that a rapid increase in commerce between the West Indies and this port will follow closely upon the establishment of peace.

The Cuban trade of the port, even in times of peace, the merchants say, has furnished no idea of what it may be in the future, under new conditions. The island has not had the advantage of civilized government, and its resources have not been developed as they will be now that Spain has lost control. American capital will furnish the stimulus and American settlers will go there to help build up the trade with their native country.

The export trade for Cuban ports will actually begin to-morrow, when the steamships Lydia and Matanzas of the Ward Line will clear for Havana, each with a cargo of provisions valued at $200,000. They will return in ballast, because it is too soon after the war for Cuban merchants and planters to have anything ready for export.

Three ships of the Munson line will also sail this week with provisions.

Report from Shafter

Washington, Aug. 15.—The following has been given out at the war department:

Cuba, Aug. 13.—The Rio Grande, Seneca and Comanche are here with the Ninth and Tenth cavalry, Fourth and Twenty-fifth infantry, all loaded, and will go out this afternoon unless a hurricane, of which reports have been had as blowing south of Jamaica, prevents. The Breakwater, City of Macon and Arkadia will go to-morrow with two light batteries and the Twelfth and Seventeenth infantry. One of the hardest rain storms we have had is raging this afternoon.

Am getting the sick that have to be left behind in very comfortable condition. Two thousand Spanish troops are to be loaded to-morrow on the only other ship that is in as soon as it can coal, probably two days. Hope to get troops off so as to be able to start the latter part of the week for the United States. Will ship 400 convalescents on Catania Monday.

SHAFTER,
Major General.

Will There Be War?

London, Aug. 15.—A dispatch to the Observer from Vienna says the concensus of opinion there is that an Anglo-Russian war is inevitable and that Russia profits by its delay.

The News Wiener Tagblatt declares that England can only save her position by an alliance with Germany, stoutly resisting Russian aggression.

St. Petersburg, Aug. 13.—The St. Petersburg press are generally of the opinion that the prudent and pacific portion of the British public, aided by a wise and conciliatory course on the part of the British government will be able to avert complications which Russia sincerely desires to avoid.

FOR THE VACATION SEASON.

Subscribers leaving the city for the summer season can have The Daily Press sent to their new address by notifying the buisness office. The address will be changed as often as desired. "Home news" will prove most interesting while you are away.

Don't Like Camp Life.

Soldier life to those patriotic Americans who enlisted in New Jersey regiments and never got any further than Pompton Lake or Sandy Hook, is evidently not what they thought it would be. They have found the routine duties of camp life very irksome and monotonous, and according to reports from Pompton Lake they are averse to staying in camp. Since Friday morning it is said that more than 200 men have left the camp without leave of absence. Colonel Lee had issued orders that only those men who had not been at home at all should have leaves of absence in the future, and no sooner had these orders gone forth than the men determined to take French leave. Colonel Lee had sought to outwit the soldiers by ordering the Erie and Susquehana railroads not to carry any soldiers from Pompton Lake who cannot show a furlough.

Bound Brook Knows How to Do It.

The officials of Bound Brook are evidently in a mood not to be temporized with by trolley capitalists in the failure to follow out the agreements made for the construction and operation of the street railway. Information comes from that town of a tie-up of the trolley road which was due to neither an accident or a strike of employes. It was the result of an edict issued by the street committee of the Borough Council, the members of which were exasperated that the streets should not be repaired as they should have been. If the streets could not be repaired, then the cars would not be allowed to run. The result—cars are running, streets are repaired. Bound Brook sets a good example for other towns.

Kind Words for The Press.

Just now when The Daily Press is making no special effort in the way of enterprise or improvement—except to get out as good a paper as is possible every day—the following from the Bayonne Budget is appreciated:

Plainfield has a magnificent eight-page daily paper called The Daily Press, and Plainfield isn't a big place, either, not half as big as Bayonne, but then they are go aheadative and they take pride in their own daily paper.

The case of the American Mrs. Maybrick, condemned to life imprisonment for husband poisoning, has again been brought up before the English home secretary, this time by Mr. Michael Davitt, on the plea that such clemency would help the new international friendship. If this is the only good ground for pardon, Sir Matthew White would better continue inexorable.

Novels and romances, aside from newspapers and magazines, constitute three-quarters of the current literature which is really read. The probable reason is that both men and women, and specially the latter, when they are young, are desirous of anticipating what they wish to experience; when they are old, love to recall things which they have experienced.

A striking example of an evil working for good is the Italian army, which costs the overburdened government $45,000,000 a year. It is said by the keenest observer to be the best paying institution in the land and worth all the universities and schools combined in teaching a heterogeneous and ignorant people discipline, order and self respect.

Hero Worship.

One of the most salutary traits in human nature is its passionate admiration for those who rise far above the average life of their fellow men through the medium of heroic deeds. This superiority may be evinced on the battlefield, in the saving of human life by risking one's own, or by moral heroism in the domain of politics and statesmanship, or in other ways too numerous to cite. But it is to the hero of battle, through the full blaze of publicity which focuses the world's attention at a single point and the showy splendor which accompanies military exploit, that the fullest meed of admiration is generally given. The hero of peace may be quite as deserving of admiration as the sword bearer, but his deed lacks the splendid frame to set forth the color and proportions of the action. It may be set down as reasonably true that the man capable of great enthusiasm in the admiration of great deeds and their doers, is himself capable of doing something rightly noble when the opportunity occurs. It is this kind of admiration which keeps alike the sentiment for a higher ideal even under commonplace and depressing conditions. It has been a favorite theme of some of the great modern philosophers and essayists to consider, how far the stimulus given by war through the spectacle of heroic deeds to the mass of men who look on as spectators may compensate in moral elevation for the waste and bloodshed of war. At the time of the Crimean campaign of 1855 one of the magazines instituted a symposium on this subject, to which many of the leading thinkers of Great Britain contributed. The consensus of judgment was that the tendency of such an influence was clearly to lift public opinion and practice out of the rut of the sordid and the commonplace.

It does not need to go as far as Thomas Carlyle's doctrine preached in a thousand forms with such a fury of eloquent prose that the hero-man was the only savior of society, before whom all must bow down and worship if they would find salvation. But one cannot escape from the belief that the contemplation of the heroic deed tends to propagate similar actions by force of example and imitation and to put the admirer in a nobler frame of mind. Men forget at such times all that is mean and habitually unworthy in themselves to drink at a purer fountain of feeling. And as for women it is as natural for them to thrill with joy and adoration at heroism as it is to breathe the air of heaven.

War, then, has its elevating as well as its seamy side. Our war has not lasted long. Its opportunities for splendid deeds of daring and hardihood have not been profuse. But some have been achieved which will shine on the great muster roll of heroism as worthily as any performed during our five years' civil war. The rapturous admiration with which the country responded to such an exploit as that of Hobson, for example, shows that the wellspring still bubbles clear and deep in the national heart after a quarter century of money making peace. The golden calf on occasion is easily and quickly dethroned for a mightier idol.

Canon C. H. Robinson in a Nineteenth Century paper gives a very interesting account of an African civilization developed mainly from within. The country known as Sokoto is completely cut off from European influence, and, so far as it has known exotic modification, this has been derived from Arab and Abyssinian sources. The Hausa tribe constitutes the bulk of the population, and it possesses a written language, the only one evolved, so far as known, by any strictly negritic people. The characters are adapted from the Arabic alphabet, and the date of their introduction runs back more than 1,000 years. Their histories profess to cover nearly this period and are made up of a great variety of interesting traditions. The Hausas, though now governed by a Mohammedan dynasty, under whom they claim to have lost much of their former greatness, are energetic traders, skillful workers of cloth and metals, and they manufacture a considerable number of other commodities. Canon Robinson's description completely disposes of the contention of the ethnologists that there is no example known of a substantially self derived civilization among the black African peoples.

Ex-Senator Warner Miller and Senator Morgan, who have been from the outset the sturdiest supporters of the Nicaraguan canal, have again been urging the matter on Mr. McKinley. The assurance of the president is that he will ask for prompt legislation from congress at their reopening. He is said to favor governmental ownership in toto.

A litigant at law should have three bags—one full of papers, one of money and one of patience. Of the three bags the first goes on increasing in bulk, while the others rapidly get empty. Yet great writers have pronounced law to be the highest and noblest fruit of civilization. They were lawyers, however.

The Russian court ladies have been immensely exercised over the prohibition of the czarina directed against smoking cigarettes in the royal presence. The etiquette could never have been very severe if it has been allowed at any time. It is all a matter of taste, however.

Some time ago the local Board of Trade entered into negotiations with the Parker Wishart-Hall Co., of Stamford, Conn., manufacturers of machine tools, and endeavored to get the company to locate in this city. At first the company simply wanted a site. President Powelson and other members of the Board met representatives of the company and showed them available sites in Highland Park and this city. They then turned them over to the Milltown people and they exhibited their sites. Afterwards the Board received a letter stating that the company wanted the Board to build a factory for them. Then the correspondence was stopped. The company next looked at Plainfield. It has just decided to consolidate its plant with the Aluminum Plate and Press Company, of that city, and will join its plant with their plant at Plainfield.—New Brunswick Home News.

The Board of Freeholders meet again Monday afternoon to consider the bid of the Elizabeth City Railway for the county trolley franchise. Every citizen must admit that this is a question in which the future growth and prosperity of the county is concerned, and it is a matter of vital importance. At the meeting last week the sentiment of the people was fairly presented by the large attendance of citizens who favored the acceptance of the bid, but as is suggested by communications in today's Journal, there should be at Monday's meeting a still larger representation of the citizens who recognize the opportunity Mr. Kean's liberal offer gives to the county, and thus by a strong and united action convince the freeholders that the interests of the county demands its acceptance.—Elizabeth Journal.

THEATRICAL.

Current Dramatic Attractions That Plainfielders Can Witness.

Probably no play in recent years has caused so much comment as "When London Sleeps," the very realistic English melodrama which opens at Stillman Music Hall next Wednesday night, the 17th inst. The story refers to the love of two women for one man, and the wicked viles of a polished villain. There are many exciting situations during the progress of the piece, some of them of the most thrilling description. The story is very stirring and full of incident, and the plot moves briskly.

Fun makers of the first rank are always to be found in A. Q. Scammon's company of comedians. This season they present the famous comedy hit, "The Real Widow Brown," at Stillman Music Hall Friday night, the 19th inst. A widow, very much alive, endless misunderstandings on her account, and the masquerading of a gay youth as the widow, furnish a most laughable plot. Its rendering is equally humorous, and gay songs, bright costumes and excellent acting do the rest. "The Real Widow Brown" is a winner.

WESTFIELD.

(Special Correspondence of The Press.)

Westfield, August 15—The manager and the players of the Westfield baseball team have about decided that they do not understand the game. Saturday a team came down from the country in the vicinity of Springfield, and beat them by a score of 10 to 2. McLarty, of Plainfield, was doing the pitching for Westfield, and put up a good game, striking out twelve men and allowing only three men to walk to first on four balls, but his support was "rotten," and the string of errors by Davenport, Lee, Marsh and Mumford, of Plainfield, was the cause of the defeat given to the home players by the countrymen. Fully 200 people from Springfield came over to shout for their team, showing that the National game is still the leading sport in that part of the county.

Ezra S. Bloodgood, of this town, has been honorably discharged from the Third Regiment, N. J. G. MME. LE PLONGEON'S ADVENTURES AND EXPLORATIONS IN YUCATAN.

Spent Her Honeymoon Studying Spanish, Then Had Yellow Fever—Archæological Researches With Her Husband in a Central American Forest.

Archaeology is the last thing one would think of in connection with Mme. Le Plongeon. There is no flavor of ruins and antiquities about her; on the contrary, she is modern to her finger tips; yet she has endured untold discomforts and dared a host of dangers in the interests of science, and she talks of prehistoric peoples and of Yucatan bas reliefs as familiarly as most women talk of clothes.

She was not born to archaeology; but married it, in the person of Dr. Le Plongeon, when she was a girl of 19. Dr. Le Plongeon had spent many years in the study of American antiquities, and his stories of the life and work made his bride look upon archaeology as a most fascinating pursuit. Later, she cultivated the serious zeal of the antiquarian; but, when one hears her tell of her years in Yucatan and Honduras, with their difficulties and dangers, their discomforts and delights, one cannot help thinking that it was the poetic, picturesque side of the experience that appealed most strongly to her, though she made reverent obeisance to the ugly gods which her husband unearthed.

At the time of his marriage, Dr. Le Plongeon was planning an examination of the ancient ruins of Yucatan, but the honeymoon was spent in New York in order that Mme. Le Plongeon might learn Spanish. Yucatan is only two hours' sail from Cuba, and has recently made long strides in progress; but when the Le Plongeons arrived in Merida in 1873 the town was far from imposing, and the smaller places were painfully primitive. The first use Mme. Le Plongeon made of her opportunity for acquiring new experience was to fall ill with yellow fever. The natives cheerfully insisted that she could not live, and made preparations for her burial on the sixth day; but, thanks to the fact that her husband was a physician as well as an archaeologist, she pulled through, and enjoyed the proud distinction of being the only white victim of that particular epidemic who escaped the undertaker. When she had recovered from her illness, the delayed expedition started; and for eleven years the husband and wife worked earnestly, undauntedly toward a solution of the problems hidden in the ruins of Ake, Ishtul, and Chichen.

"The life was hard," said Mme. Le Plongeon. "There were fatiguing journeys, uncomfortable quarters, troublesome insects, omnipresent dirt, frequent dangers, and often gnawing hunger. Sometimes we would be where we could not get supplies, not even the mouldy tortillas and black beans which were our usual resource. We would hunt for deer or other game, but somehow or other game always eludes a starving man. I've seen the time when I was so hungry that I was in abject despair because a rattlesnake escaped me."

"I'd call that a cause for thanksgiving," said the reporter.

"But I wanted a rattlesnake stew. Oh, you needn't look disgusted. It's very good, I assure you; and a rattlesnake is much handsomer than an eel, if you are looking at the aesthetic side of the question. Then, a rattlesnake's escape would be no special cause for thanksgiving, anyway. They are amiable creatures."

The reporter looked dubious and remarked: "I've always understood that they had a few little peculiarities that were annoying."

"Not at all," Mme. Le Plongeon insisted. "A rattlesnake never bothers any one if he isn't insulted. There were hundreds of them down in Yucatan, and I never had a moment's disagreement with one except I wanted it for stew. I remember we were once going through the forest in search of deer. Dr. Le Plongeon was ahead, I came next, and an Indian lad followed. I stopped to examine a gigantic toadstool, and was hungrily wishing it was a self-respecting mushroom, when the Indian shouted, 'Go away!' I supposed he thought the toadstool was poisonous and I would touch it; so I reassured him on that point, but he kept on saying, 'Go away!' and looked up so frightened that I hurried on to join my husband. When I stopped to look back I saw, just beside the toadstool, a huge rattlesnake coiled. I must have been touching him where I stood. He was moving his head back and forth and darting out his tongue in a peevish way, as though he meant to say: 'Now, get out of this. You're bothering me.' I apologized to him and went away. You see, he wasn't vicious. For that matter, I never saw a snake that was, and yet the country down there abounds in poisonous varieties. I still feel rather creepy over an angleworm, but I got so that I didn't fear snakes at all. Some of them were beautiful. One day among the ruins, I was just stepping down from a big stone when out from under it came a superb snake about five feet long and marked with alternate rings of jet black and bright coral. He had his head in the air, and we looked at one another with mutual respect. I bowed and said, 'After you!' and he politely glided away, putting on a few extra graces and curves. I fancied, because he knew I was watching him. The venom of the little coral snake is deadly; but I've sometimes had to chase three or four of the pretty things out of my room before I could go to bed."

Miss Schenck Regrets Having Started an "Endless Chain."

Miss Natalie Schenck of Babylon, L. I., started an "endless chain" of letters to raise money for the Ice Plant Auxiliary of the National Red Cross society. Four weeks later Postmaster Dowden and Chief of Police Weeks of that village were in despair, and Miss Schenck and her mother have asked papers to announce that they wish the chain broken and the influx of letters and money to cease.

Miss Schenck is 17 years old. She took a great interest in the war and decided to help the Red Cross movement. Her mother is a cousin of Mrs. August Belmont, and during the summer they live with Mrs. Schenck's brother, Mr. Matthew Morgan. It was from Mr. Morgan's house that Miss Schenck wrote to a number of her friends asking each of them to send her 10 cents and to write to four of their friends with the same request. The letter sent out was as follows:

"The ice plant auxiliary in connection with the National Red Cross, being in need of money to supply the ambulance ships, a chain has been formed to collect some, and if you, on receiving this, will make four copies and send them to four of your friends you will greatly help the wounded soldiers. When you have made four copies, please return this letter to Miss Natalie Schenck, Babylon, Long Island, with 10 cents inclosed. The number starts at one and ends at one hundred, so that the person receiving the latter number will send 10 cents to Miss Schenck, same address, without making copies. Please number the head of each copy and make them exactly like this one, only number the next highest number and sign your name and address to each copy. Please make no delay in sending out copies, and, above all, do not break the chain that means so much to our brave soldiers on land and sea."

Within three days Miss Schenck had received three or four answers. The next day the number was slightly increased. Within a week Postmaster Dowden noticed that she was getting a hundred letters a day.

"That's a good many," said Postmaster Dowden, "but all of a sudden things took a big jump. The post office was swamped by Miss Schenck's letters. I had to hire an extra clerk, and one morning over 3,500 letters came to her in the one mail."

Then Postmaster Dowden began receiving letters of inquiry asking if Miss Schenck was really collecting money for the Red Cross, or if it was a swindle.

"They inclosed stamps," said the postmaster mournfully, "so I had to answer them. I am not obliged to answer letters of inquiry, but if I don't then some kicker writes to Washington that I am keeping their stamps. Why, I've sent hundreds of answers to inquiries, simply taking their letters and indorsing them 'This is O. K.'"

Of the letters received, more than 2,000 contained no money. The excuses were many and varied. Many of the writers declared their hostility to the scheme. One woman wrote six closely written pages explaining that her eyes were so weak that she could not afford to write the four letters required, but she approved of the scheme. She failed to inclose 10 cents, however.

All letters were not like these. The majority contained dimes, but several had dollar bills, and a number sent checks. The postmarks showed that the chain had reached to every state in the Union, to Canada, to Mexico, and even to Cuba. A letter containing a dime came from Mrs. McKinley; another came from Mrs. James A. Garfield, while a letter from President McKinley is saved and is highly prized. The Hon. Levi P. Morton also sent a dime, as did each member of his family.

"This is undoubtedly the most successful endless chain ever started," said Mrs. Schenck, "and had I realized what my daughter was starting, I would have stopped it. We did not consider what the patriotic Americans were capable of. We want it stopped."

Mr. Morgan thinks that Postmaster Dowden deserves great credit. "The daily mail in this village," said Mr. Morgan, "does not average over 300 letters a day. Here it jumps to nearly twenty times as much. I think the government ought to stand the extra expense Postmaster Dowden is put to, and if it don't I will."

The following table will show just how far an "endless chain" will go when the multiplier is four and the series is continued only to twenty:

To Banish Ants.

Ants can often be driven away by sprinkling about their haunts ashes saturated with coal oil. They can be trapped and killed by placing sweet oil where they can have access to it, as they are very fond of it, but it has the effect to close their spiracles and thus kills by asphyxia.

RICE AND PEA COAL.

To Use the Material in Dirt Heaps of the Coal Regions.

Quite a large quantity of rice coal is now going to market. It costs at the mines 25 cents a ton. It is the cheapest fuel in the world of its kind, but the railroad companies charge $1.35 a ton to haul it fifty or one hundred miles.

Rice coal is the product of the dirt banks. Mountains of coal dirt obstruct the anthracite regions near the collieries, and men have set up big washeries where the water supply is adequate, and wash out and screen out the fine particles of coal until the pure fuel, as small as rice, clean and burnished, comes to the surface on big platforms, and is dried for the market. The washers can produce this rice coal at about 15 cents a ton, and their profit is 10 cents a ton. The washers are satisfied with the profit, but they are hampered by high freight rates.

Rice coal is a modern size entirely. So is buckwheat, the next size to rice. These two sizes were not known in the commercial market until men began to wash out the mountains of coal dirt, supposed to be so much dead waste. Commercial sizes of coal are: Rice, buckwheat, pea, chestnut, stove, broken, steamboat and lump. The uses of lump and steamboat coal, large sizes for ships, are well understood. Stove and egg, or broken, are used for cellar heaters, and chestnut for kitchen ranges. Many people do not understand the uses of pea coal, and at this time when winter laying is thought of the study of pea coal is interesting. A few years ago very little pea was sold. People said it was dirt. Now they have small pea and large pea. Both sizes have sprung into a very large demand and the sales are increasing as the subject is understood. There are hundreds of families in this country who burn pea coal in their cellar heaters. Some who understand firing a heater use pea coal exclusively. Others mix pea and stove or egg together and use it in that way. Frequently pea coal is spread out on top of the large coal to keep the combustion well confined and to preserve the heat where it belongs—in the house. Very few families within a radius of thirty-five miles from the anthracite coal regions burn the old-time chestnut coal in their kitchen ranges. They save $2 a ton and buy pea coal, which goes further than chestnut, because pea packs more compactly, and does not burn away so fast. There are coal dealers who say this is not so, but successful and experienced housewives say it is a fact. Pea coal for keeping a fire all night in the kitchen is just the thing.

Bituminous coal is not used for domestic purposes generally, but the people are turning attention to it, right in the anthracite coal country here, because soft coal can be bought at $2 a ton, delivered, and there is more heat in a ton of soft coal than in two tons of buckwheat, or one and a half tons of good pea, which costs $3.50 a ton. Were it not for the smoke nuisance housekeepers would surely follow the manufacturers, stop using hard coal entirely and take up soft coal for the kitchen range and cellar heater. Those manufacturers who are using rice and buckwheat mix it with bituminous coal.

Electricity in the Philippines.

Mr. L. D. Hilles of Yokohama, while in New York, and in a conversation with a representative of the Electrical Review gave a number of interesting facts about the Philippines.

"Those islands should by all means remain in the possession of the United States," said Mr. Hilles. "Their commercial possibilities and native resources are almost unbounded. The sharpest competitors of the Americans and the Englishmen there are the Germans.

"Our firm has installed a central electric lighting station in Manila, which supplies current for 12,000 incandescent and 260 arc lights. The machinery is of American manufacture. I am now making large purchases of American steam and electrical apparatus to be installed in the far East, a part of which goes to Manila.

"There are about 720 miles of telegraph in the islands and only seventy miles of steam railway. Manila has a telephone system equipped with English instruments. All electrical conductors are carried on overhead pole lines with porcelain insulators. There is also a horse railway in Manila which would have been changed over to a trolley road had not the war occurred. The concession for this road has already been acquired. There is a wonderful chance for Americans in many industrial undertakings in the Philippines, and I hope our government will hang on to them."

At the Wedding.

"She trembles like a fawn!" whispered the man in the second pew beyond the white ribbon, as the bride swept down the aisle.

The woman who wept beside him laughed scornfully; at weddings women often laugh and cry at the same time.

"Go on!" she protested. "Nobody ever saw a fawn tremble like that! She acts as if she hadn't rehearsed one bit!"

And then, being invited to the breakfast after the ceremony she burst into more tears.

"Don't this old injury hurt you when you attempt to run?" asked the examining surgeon of a candidate for enlistment.

"Course it does. If yer lookin' for soldiers what's goin' to run jest count me out."

Lokal-Nachrichten aus der alten Heimath.

Württemberg.

Stuttgart. Der dem schwäbischen Lehrerstande entstammende Reichsschullehrer in Kamerun, Betz, der seit einigen Monaten auf Erholungsurlaub in seiner Heimath weilte, hat sich in einem hiesigen Hotel erschossen. Der Verstorbene besaß vorzügliche Kenntnisse in der Duallasprache und hat sieben Jahre mit Erfolg in der Kolonie Kamerun gewirkt.—Von einem schweren Hagelsturm ist Stuttgart heimgesucht worden. Von der elementaren Wucht des Unwetters zeugt am schlagendsten die Thatsache, daß von dem im Bau begriffenen Steuergebäude ganze Mauerpartien abgerissen wurden und das Baugerüst, so solide es auch konstruirt war, zu Boden gerissen wurde, wodurch ein Arbeiter getödtet und mehrere Andere bedenklich verletzt wurden.

Biberach. Unter dem Zeichen des Schützenfestes fand kürzlich das Kinderfest hier statt. Ueber 1200 Kinder nahmen daran Theil. Eine große Anzahl Fremder, worunter Biberacher aus weiter Ferne, trafen ein, das altbeliebte Jugendfest mitzubegehen.

Ebingen. Hier kamen Knaben auf den Einfall, ungelöschten Kalk in eine Flasche zu füllen, Wasser zuzugießen und die Flasche zu verkorken. Alsbald explodirte dieselbe, wobei ein Glassplitter dem des Weges kommenden Sohnchen des Radlers Walz in das Auge drang und dasselbe vollständig zerstörte. Ein anderer Knabe wurde stark an beiden Augen beschädigt; die übrigen kamen mit Brandwunden im Gesichte davon.

Heidenheim. Die Verbandstofffabrik von Paul Hartmann, die älteste ihrer Art in Deutschland, feierte dieser Tage ihr 25jähriges Bestehen. Alle Arbeiter — gegen 200 — wurden festlich bewirthet und erhielten namhafte Geldgeschenke. Vertreter der Zweiggeschäfte waren erschienen aus Berlin, Paris, London, Barcelona und Pavia.

Oehringen. Der fürstlich Hohenlohe-Oehringen'sche Forstwart Schmauder wurde im Walde Untersteinbach bei Oehringen von Wilderern meuchlings erschossen. Die Blutthat wird allgemein als Racheakt aufgefaßt.

Ulm. An Blutvergiftung starb hier der Sekondelieutenant Steiner, Adjutant beim 1. Bataillon des Infanterie-Regiments Nr. 124, Sohn des Oberstabsarztes Steiner hier. Er war von einem Insekt in den Kopf gestochen worden, hatte aber der Verletzung keine weitere Beachtung geschenkt.

Baden.

Karlsruhe. Ein 18jähriger junger Mensch aus Heidelberg, Namens Becker, feuerte sechs Revolverschüsse auf Marie Werner, ein mit ihm im gleichen Alter stehendes junges Mädchen, ab. Dasselbe wurde durch die Schüsse an Schultern, Arm und Knie schwer, aber nicht lebensgefährlich verwundet. Das Motiv der That ist angeblich Eifersucht. Becker versuchte nach der That zu fliehen, wurde aber eingeholt und verhaftet.

Bruchsal. Auf dem Speicher des Rathhauses entdeckte man kürzlich eine bis obenhin mit alten Urkunden gefüllte Kiste, daneben auch eine sogenannte „Zankgeige" mit Oeffnungen für Hals und Hände, wie sie in früheren Jahrhunderten als Strafmittel für zanksüchtige Weiber in Gebrauch waren. Von den meist auf Pergament geschriebenen Urkunden—195 an Zahl—ist die älteste vom Jahre 1278 datirt. Fast alle Urkunden sind mit sehr kunstvoll geschnittenen Siegeln versehen. Von ganz besonderem Kunstwerth sind bei den Urkunden aus dem 17. und 18. Jahrhundert die Initial-Buchstaben.

Kleinlaufenburg. Der badische Grenzaufseher Waibel rettete einen 70jährigen Schweizer, welcher in den Rhein gefallen war, mit eigener Lebensgefahr vom Tode des Ertrinkens.

Mannheim. Der Bürgerausschuß wählte nahezu einstimmig den Amtsrichter Hollander in Donaueschingen zum dritten Bürgermeister und genehmigte die Erbauung eines Elektrizitätswerkes.

Elsaß-Lothringen.

Kolmar. Das hiesige Schwurgericht verurtheilte den 41 Jahre alten Stadtrechner Carl Hug von Sulz wegen Unterschlagung und Fälschung im Amte zu zwei Jahren Gefängniß. Hugs Kasse wies einen Fehlbetrag von etwa 12,000 Mark auf. Um diesen Fehlbetrag zu verdecken, fälschte er die Bücher.

Neubreisach. Unser Städtchen feiert im kommenden Jahre sein 200jähriges Bestehen. Im Jahre 1699 wurde es von dem französischen König Ludwig dem Vierzehnten als befestigtes Achteck angelegt.

Niederbronn. Bei der hier abgehaltenen 26. Jahresversammlung des Vogesenklubs waren 32 Sektionen vertreten. An 15 wurden wieder Zuschüsse aus der Centralkasse in Höhe von 100 bis 300 Mark, im Gesammtbetrage von 2850 Mark bewilligt; damit werden die bisherigen äußerst verdienstvollen Bemühungen der eigentlichen Gebirgsvereine fortgesetzt, die herrlichen Vogesen durch Anlage neuer und Unterhaltung alter Wege, Markirungen von Fußwegen, Freilegung von Aussichtspunkten u. s. w. dem allgemeinen Besuche leichter zugänglich zu machen.

CURRENT COMMENT.

Boston seems to be losing its grip on a familiarity with matters of culture. In a recent literary contest only three correct answers were scored up to Boston, while the lost city of Brooklyn had no less than ten.

Of 16,000 claims staked in the Klondyke, only 200, it is said, are on a paying basis. Going to war at $13 a month and all traveling and living expenses looks like a bonanza against the Klondyke's perilous and uncertain returns.

Military surgeons familiar with Cuba say the best army ration there is bread or hard biscuit, beans, potatoes, beef and mutton. The only beverage recommended is coffee, not too strong. Alcohol in any form is forbidden. Salt meats should be sparingly used. The native Cubans and Porto Ricans drink coffee habitually, and, though not large, they are well built, agile and healthy.

Mr. Depew, in his interesting talk on European sentiment concerning our war, reports that one English statesman said to him: "You must join the concert of European nations. It is expensive, but you cannot be at Eastern power unless you belong to the band." This is a strictly logical view of the situation, and it is just the reason why this nation will not throw the Monroe doctrine overboard and become "an Eastern power."

Those whoague for "imperialism" from the success of our policy of expansion in the past, omit one indispensable factor. Up to now the growth of the country has always been upon the continent, and, with the exception of Alaska, which is scarcely an exception after all, on lines of contiguity. It has been a country that could be governed without the use of a navy, and, virtually, without an army. The policy of extension over thousands of miles of sea requires both army and navy. Are they sure it will work as well?

The young roosters who have been loafing around town all their lives and are now commissioned officers are well paid for their services to their country, considering that they couldn't earn a dollar at any other business. Colonels receive $291 a month, lieutenant colonels $250, majors $208, captains (mounted) $166, (unmounted) $150, first lieutenant $133, second lieutenant $125. Our privates receive for the first year of enlistment $13 a month, whether artillery, cavalry or infantry. Squadron A's chief trumpeter receives $22 a month, its chief musician $60.

Evidently the War Department officials now realize the gravity of the mistake they made in not supplying the army and navy with smokeless powder, for they issued almost daily explanations of their failure to adopt an invention the merits of which were obvious even to a Government as backward and unintelligent as that of Spain. And these explanations were as diverse as they were numerous. First, we were told that when the war broke out there were in America no manufacturers with plants adapted for making that kind of powder. Then this statement was seen to need elucidation, and we heard that there were no smokeless powder factories because the quantity which the Government would have ordered did not warrant their erection. The wise men in Washington were not satisfied with the foreign explosive, and the war came on while hopeful experiments with something that might be better were in progress. The foreign powder may not be perfect, but it is vastly superior to the black and brown varieties, and the timely acquisition of a supply of it would not have interfered a bit with the hopeful experiments.

The number of cripples riding bicycles is noteworthy. The progress instead of the more cumbersome tricycles which they formerly had to promade in building wheels has done much to improve the construction of cripple carriages, and the borrowing of ideas seems to be reacting, so that instead of putting bicycle features into cripple carts, true bicycles are being adapted for the needs of persons who are maimed in different ways. Riders with one leg shorter than the other are being accommodated, and even those having no use of the lower limbs can now have hand-propelled bicycles pel. Some riders having only one leg use an artificial limb when riding, while others remove it and pedal with one foot. An idea that has been adopted by a well-known candy maufacturer, who uses only one leg in riding, is that of removing the crank and pedal on the side not in use. All of the one-legged riders do not do this, but it should be heeded, as it narrows the clearance necessary for the cycle, and does away with the chance of the pedal catching in another machine, which is a common cause of upsets. The rider referred to carries a crutch with him on his wheel, and is something of a scorcher. He mounts and dismounts as nimbly as any athlete having two legs.

CHAPTER VI.

DEAR MISS GARRICK—Your breezy letter came like a voice from the outside world into the solitude of my sickroom. I am much better. In a week or two I'll be myself again. The consequences of the accident are a treacherously dizzy brain, a bandaged shoulder and head and a great weariness of everything under the sun. Your request stupefies me. I never heard of such reckless courage. Fancy you out among the miners in these times of bloodshed. Do you know what it means? I can imagine what you will say. You are a student of life, and a reading of selected passages will not content you. However, we won't tear this subject to shreds again.

Of course you know that from a mercantile standpoint your report of the strike, your description of the life of the women in that hopeless place, would be most valuable to the paper, and, if you still wish to go, please, for friendship's sake, ask Dr. Ericsson to go with you. I will write to him too. About the stories. Don't go into the intricacies of the strike. Tell the women's story in a woman's way. I'll feature them in the half weekly and Sunday editions. Sefain, whom you have seen in the office, is there now. I'll instruct him to illustrate your stories, and, as he does excellent work, too, they ought to make a hit. The relief fund which has been started will be forwarded to you for distribution. After all these instructions I urgently add—don't go. Faithfully,

DAVID TEMPLE.

This letter was held closely in Anne's hand, hidden under the folds of her traveling cloak, as the train carried her over the hills of Pennsylvania. Dr. Ericsson had closed his eyes upon the gloominess of his surroundings and fallen asleep upon the opposite seat. She was free to think uninterruptedly, her eyes upon the long lines of windows curtained with mist and irisated with raindrops, the reaches of land patched with melting snow, the smoke from infrequent cottages struggling in the dampness and vanishing groundward as if affrighted.

Ten commonplace days and nights had passed since sudden grief like a flame had illumined her heart and set before her eyes its hopeless, passionate burden.

Since then she had been unquiet; the happiness of knowing David's injury would not be serious mixed with a curious disinclination to see him again and a sense of defeat. It appeared unconformable that this love should have unexpectedly awakened within her when she had thought herself too proud and strong. It seemed as if her senses had lightly succumbed to the potency of environment, as if passion were a mere impulse, and the man treading the same path with her a man to love, not the man her soul had irresistibly sought and found.

And yet something within her after all reasoning insisted on being heard. It had an ecstatic voice and gave its own golden meaning to the dark day. She seemed drawn to David by a warm, strong hand, and the delight of yielding sent a feeling of sublime weakness over her as comes to one wearied who slips the will and sinks to sleep. It was a happy fancy and hid the meager land under the hurrying twilight from her sight.

Dr. Ericsson gave his body a chilly shake and roused himself, opening one eye querulously and then the other.

"You'll regret taking me as a traveling companion, my dear. How long have I been asleep?"

"For hours. We'll get to Platt's Peak in time for dinner."

Anne cleared away a spot on the glass with her finger and gazed at the blankness beyond. "You'll be hungry, poor dear, won't you?"

"Dinner? Be thankful if we get doughnuts and cabbage or pork and fried bread. I know these places," he granted. "You don't know what you've run into, young lady. I warned you. I might have saved my breath."

"Fancy being able from actual experience to describe the pangs of hunger," said Anne, with a laugh.

"Don't madden me. I've arrived at the age when I respect a good dinner as much as anything on earth. As the irreproachable bourgeois said at the pantomime when the ballet appeared, 'I wish I hadn't came.'"

"You're in a vile humor today," said Anne placidly. "I'm not."

"Of course you're not; you're a woman. You've had your way and you've made some one miserable, so there you are," he jerked out, a smile in his eyes. "But truly," he added in a different tone, "I had a letter from your aunt this morning which annoyed me very much. They'll be back some time in January."

"But you'll surely be glad to see them."

"Oh, fundamentally of course! But there's the house to be renovated—not good enough as it is. And I am made distinctly aware that Olga is to be brought here on a husband hunting skirmish. Foreigners evidently have been given up as hopeless. My beautiful daughter has no money, you see."

He clasped his hands and looked belligerent."

"Do you remember Olga at all? I took her down to your father's a few times when she was a little thing."

"I remember her very distinctly," and Anne laughed. "She scratched my face once. We quarreled all the time. I remember that a little guinea hen of mine died, and I buried it with proper, religious pomp, singing over it, 'Sister, thou wast mild and lovely.' But Olga wouldn't have this at all and interrupted the services with shrieks and dances. We parted the frankest of enemies. It will be curious to see her again. Do you know she wasn't at all pretty then?"

"Today she is a professional beauty with no other ambition than to make a good match. It will be strange to have them back. But you won't desert me then, Anne?" And he looked wistful.

"I have Mrs. Micawber's staying qualities, you'll see," she said gayly.

It was dark now. Beyond the windows lay a tempestuous blackness crossed at times by the red and green of railroad lights.

Anne sat back and closed her eyes. There was work before her, and she meant to do it well. Besides the stubborn law she had always followed of putting the best of herself into her work there was now a determination to become a name in the world of journalism, and all for a reason that made her a little ashamed—the milliner who hummed a ballad while she twisted a ribbon for a hat, the dairymaid who eyed her rows of glistening pans with a critical eye while listening for a footstep, shared this ambition with her—simply the longing to appear well in one man's eyes and be loved by him.

The rain was beating in a drumming downpour on the roof of the car when the brakeman swung in, a red lantern in his hand. As he stood in the doorway, the spray driving against his crouched shoulders, the bloody blotch of light against his rain soaked clothes, he seemed a figure of doom, as if the misery, cold and death rampant there had taken human form and entered, crying in hoarse accents:

"Platt's Peak colliery!"

Anne's dreaming fell from her like a cloak shrugged from uneasy shoulders, and she sprang up, her face bright with sudden energy.

On Dr. Ericsson's arm she plunged through the black night to the railway station. This was little more than a shed over a flooring and supported by begrimed posts. It was dark save for the yellow rays from a small window opening into a boxlike house where two telegraph operators sat, the beat of the machines stealing into the shadow like the clucking of a tongue.

A man stood looking in. When he swung around, Anne found herself face to face with Donald Sefain. They had seen each other constantly without recognition and without exchanging a word. The meeting there under the circumstances was a trifle perplexing. Donald's expression was almost forbidding as he awkwardly pulled off his cap.

"Miss Garrick, I believe?"

"How are you, Donald?" cried Dr. Ericsson, stepping into the light. "I haven't seen you for an age." And he seized him by the shoulder.

"Oh, I'm all right!" he said indifferently. "You'll have to walk to the hotel. The cab service is very deficient here. We've all got to live like paupers whether we like it or not."

He hurried ahead, the effort of being conventionally polite evidently a new role.

"I'll show you the way," he said brusquely.

"I say, Donald"—and Dr. Ericsson's tone was just as genial as when he had first spoken—"are things very bad?" Donald's stormy eyes flashed from beneath the rim of his cap. His tone was almost insolent.

"Hell is loose here," he said.

CHAPTER VII.

It was a dark morning, and Dr. Ericsson's mood matched it. He had rheumatism. It had rained for three days, was still raining, and they had again given him fried bread for breakfast.

"Thank God, sunshine and laughter are in the world somewhere! It is well to remember that here," he said, poking the fire furiously.

Anne stood near him, drawing on a pair of loose dogskin gloves. A fur cap fitted like a bandage above her troubled eyes.

"Tuck me in, Anne, dear. Then look out, like a good girl, and see if there's a break in the dirty sky."

She swept the rag of curtain aside and gazed on the marvels of desolation before her. The hotel was on one of the highest hills, and she could see mountains of coal waste looming black in the mist, rivers like ink flowing beneath gaunt bridges, vast hollows of moist, shrunken land above the mines spreading like emptied arteries beneath the surface, houses, as if shaken by palsy, leaning sideways upon erratic foundations, and over all a light rain driven by a wind from the east.

"The sky is as dull as ever," said Anne, still standing with the curtain in her hand, and she added in a vehement whisper: "It's all wrong, uncle. There's something horribly wrong with the world."

"Have you just found that out?"

"Last night as we came home from the funeral of the man Red Evans killed"—her voice trembled—"it came to me what these people are. They are the moving, untombed dead. The starving men guarding the black pits, the women, nothing but child bearing blocks, the picker boys with their undersized, ghastly bodies, have dead souls, uncle—quite, quite dead."

"Don't look so tragic, my dear. One comfort—they don't know how really badly off they are; brought up to it, you see."

"I know it"—the curtain slipped from Anne's fingers—"but that's what makes me fairly sick when I think of it—their apathy, their stolid acceptance of all. They don't crave anything except enough food to keep them quiet, and they can't get that. Then one of them grows frantic and the rest follow. Only now and then there's a Red Evans who has hate enough in him to kill the insulting despot who ruined his daughter and who has been crushing and cheating him for years. He went mad, and now the law is loose hunting for Red Evans as terriers hunt for a rat. If they find him, they'll hang him, and this is justice of course. But why need Red Evans ever have become what he was? Why? It's such a big, terrible question."

"The sky is as dull as ever," said Anne.

Dr. Ericsson caught her hand and kissed it.

"You should have put an iron casing round those too ready sympathies of yours, Anne, before you came here. We'll have a very hard time of it if we try to change conditions which have always been," he said mildly. "Besides, I've come to the conclusion myself for my own satisfaction that the small things of life are inevitably balanced here; so life in total with all its oppositions and wrongs must be as evenly balanced somewhere else. What are your plans for today? I wish I could go with you and Sefain. Confound this uncertain leg of mine!"

"I'm first going with money to Red Evans' sister," said Anne, seating herself on the arm of his chair and opening her notebook. "Then I want to see the interior of a mine if it's possible. I'd like to get an idea of the graves where these men spend their days. Tonight I must get a long 'special' ready."

"Sefain must go with you everywhere. Don't forget that. Goodby, my dear. Don't fret over what can't be helped. Remember all workers are not like these. Think of niggers singing in a lily field! Ah, I wish I were there now!"

Anne hurried down the stairs and found Donald waiting for her with a venerable carriage. He did not see her as she came up to him. Standing just outside the doorway, an Inverness cape flapping around him, he was sketching in the salient points of a noisy group across the road. One man stood on a barrel, his arms held up, while in howls he called on the others to resist. Around him were a score of men—Huns, Poles, with a smaller mixture of Irish and English—their working jeans discarded for antique and yellowed broadcloth. They were all stupidly listening without sign of answering spirit, their faces showing that they were hungry and shivering.

Donald was never fully aroused except when he worked. His brown, nervous fingers held the book intently, his eyes flashed keenly from the page to the men, but his dark face looked pinched in the raw morning. His air was frankly dissolute.

When Anne spoke to him, the smile of which he always seemed ashamed made his face attractive for a second before it settled again into the usual ungracious quiet.

The horse went at a crawling pace over the hills and across swampy land, and they talked of the work for the paper as if they were two men. No personalities were touched upon. There was nothing to brighten the drive, and after a long distance covered in the face of a mist that made Anne's cheeks like pale, wet roses they stopped before the house where Red Evans had lived.

The clamor following disgrace surrounded it. Women bowed by the malformations of toil and years stood shoulder to shoulder with idle men, all talking loudly, their eyes fastened upon the sulphur hued cottage, whose under story from the trembling of the tunneled land had been shot out like a hag's jaw.

"She's in there," said Donald. "They say she's like a crazy woman. I'll go in with you."

He tied the horse to a post and shielded Anne through the curious crowd. After some imperative knocking and promises of help to the woman shrieking abuse from within the door was guardedly opened, and they stood before Red Evans' sister.

Anne shuddered at the face. The forces in a soul that damn seemed to have set fire to all the softness in the woman and left their flames blazing in her hollow eyes. With lank gray hair falling to her shoulders and veined hands clinched at her sides she stood at bay in the desolate room, bitten through with grief, an epitome of hatred, famine and fear. Unnoticed Donald swiftly made a sketch of her and at a sign from Anne slipped out, leaving her to her difficult task.

In the warmth of her sympathy and gratitude for the visible help she brought the beast in the sufferer was conquered, and with wild weeping she told the story of her life. She had been born on a sheep farm in Scotland near a river winding through a valley and had left it to come to her brother when his wife died. Anne saw the lost home plainly as the homely sentences sketched it—a place of perfume, light and healthy sleep. She realized the gloomy change to this black valley with Red Evans, the morbid slave; his daughter pretty and wild, ready to sell her soul for a trinket and at length flying away in shame, and the younger son, Joe, a picker boy, choked with miner's asthma.

"An ye'll write what I tell ye, miss. Ye'll spek the truth. Ye'll belike mek people a bit sorry. Aye, aye," she said, nodding at the dead ashes on the hearth, "ye'll say our hearts are breakin, that shame an hunger's eno' to mek men distraught, but, ah, miss, ye won't mek 'em feel it; ye can't mek 'em feel it! I'd ha' to tek my heart out an put it inside ye before ye could know what I do an what I canna tell ye, miss."

Anne could not utter one of the comforting, philosophical things she had fancied at her command. She let her hand rest for an instant on the forehead where care had set a skein of tangled lines, gave a circular glance in the hopeless room and went out, her heart affrighted.

Donald was not among the crowd, but she went on, expecting him to join her. He did not appear, and soon she found herself close to the mine around which the straggling village was built. Before her stood the high, coal blackened building similar to a wooden lighthouse which miners call a breaker. She knew when the mines were working big cars were impelled up to this height from the fastnesses of the earth, that there the coal was broken, sorted and sent down through iron grooves to waiting cars. A feeling of curiosity impelled her to go up. It would be strange to stand in a high breaker, look out on a level with the hills, fancy the riven coal leaping down the rafters, and there write her notes of the morning.

Passing the silent engine houses and empty furnaces, she went up the steep ladders to the top. On the last step she paused, made suddenly aware the breaker was tenanted. Donald was sketching some one. Moving to one side, unseen, she saw the model was little Joe Evans, the murderer's son. He had assumed his working position beside an empty shoot, his head lowered, his hand extended, as if picking the refuse from the sliding coal. He had evidently digested the fact that his picture was being made for a newspaper, for there was exaltation in his face. Hidden in the shadow, Anne leaned against one of the posts and watched.

"The air must be filled with dust when the coal comes tumbling down before you," Donald was saying, and he whistled softly as he waited for a reply.

"It's that what gives us the asthma," said Joe, backing up his words by a most awful cough.

"Got anything on under that rag of a coat?" asked Donald cheerfully. "Let's see."

The child's blue pallor went crimson, but in a half fearful way he opened the jacket and bared his puny chest.

"All right," Donald nodded. "I wanted to know; that's all." And he commenced whistling softly, while Anne's heart grew hot. This was artistic savagery run amuck.

"How old are you, Joe?"

"Nine."

"What do you think of all day as you sit picking the slate from the coal?"

"Nuthin!" His violet eyes were vapid wells between grimy lashes.

"Do you know what the sea is, Joe?"

He shook his head negatively without any interest.

"The great, shining sea where ships sail—never saw that, Joe? Just turn your head a little the other way—so. Often hungry, I suppose?"

Joe smiled wanly as if at a jest. There was no need to affirm a self evident truth.

"The coal rushing down the shoot without a moment of rest must make your head ache, I should think?"

Joe forgot about the proper angle for showing off his knife blade chin and drawn eyelid. He dropped his head to his scrap of a hand, ornamented by knuckles and nails beyond redemption. His eyes looked up with unquestioning patience.

"It always aches. It's achin now."

A sigh came from his dry mouth, and it had the effect of a clarion call on Donald. The apathy went from him. He flung his book to the floor. His face was twitching. His eyes burned.

"By ——, child, how terrible you are!" Kneeling, he brought his face to a level with Joe's, his hands grasping the boy's shoulders.

"Don't be afraid, Joe. Don't cry. I'm not mad," he said, a sob creeping between his set teeth. "Oh, you poor little chap, you sad eyed little slave! Oh, hungry and sick and old and only 9, picking the coal the whole day through, thinking of nothing and breathing death! Joe! Joe! Where is your God and mine, that a child like you exists under the sky?"

Fascinated, shrinking, Joe looked into his eyes and said nothing. Anne could hear her heart in the stillness. Her eyes fastened first on Donald's discarded sketchbook, then on his kneeling figure.

"Joe," he said after a long silence, and now his voice was quiet, "something wonderful is going to happen to you, something better than your starved mind can understand. I'm going to take you to a great big city with me. I'm going to give you good things to eat, better than anything you ever tasted—warm clothes, too," he said, slipping his hand through the broken jacket and laying it on Joe's flesh. "You shall see the sea and everything that boys love. Oh, I've never loved anything, but I'll love you! You'll be a happy boy yet if it's not too late"—he groaned defiantly—"if it's not too late. Oh, you poor, little baby with your terribly wise eyes, will you come with me? Joe, will you?"

"Don't be afraid, Joe. Don't cry. I'm not mad," he said.

Anne made her way down the shaking ladders without being heard. Her swollen heart seemed crowding her throat. She stood in the chilling rain quivering with excitement. She had had her first glimpse into Donald's soul, and it had terrified her.

It was still early when they returned for lunch to the hotel. Joe, stunned into silence and with round eyes, accompanied them.

AMERICAN HOLLAND.

DIKES IN SKAGIT COUNTY, WASHINGTON, TO PROTECT THE LAND.

The Horses Wear Mud Shoes When Plowing—There is No Bottom to the Soil Which is Tremendously Rich — 124 Bushels of Oats Raised to the Acre.

In this great western country, where there is so much wild land, where millions of acres of soil have never felt the touch of the ploughman's share or the keen edge of the woodman's ax, it does not seem that it would be necessary to reclaim land from the sea to obtain acres for cultivation. But that has been done, and in Skagit county, almost in the very northwestern corner of the state, can be found scores of the finest ranches in the world, lying behind dikes built to keep out the sea and the overflows of the Skagit river, the largest stream that empties into the sound.

This is the veritable Holland of Washington. In Skagit county are situated the famous Swinomish flats, the Beaver marsh, the Olympic marsh and the Samish flats, all surrounded by dikes ranging in height from 2 to 15 feet. There are tide gates along the sea shore which act automatically, and which drain the land so perfectly that crops are raised on land below the sea level with safety. And such crops!

For ages the big river has been bringing down from the hills the richest sediment, and there is really no bottom to the soil. If a farmer in the east ploughs a little too deep he turns up clay or rocks; if the Beaver marsh rancher holds his plow handles too high he simply digs up more of the rich loam that raises every year without fail such crops that the old ranchers of other sections cannot believe the stories. One hundred and twenty-five bushels of oats to the acre, a ton and a half of hops, or five tons of hay, are common yields, while all sorts of root crops give equally large results.

In order to plow this land, which, of course, is soft and spongy, the ranchers often put "tuley" shoes on their horses, the shoes consisting of wide wooden blocks, to prevent the animals from sinking into the loam.

There are at present eight diking districts in the county, and nearly every ranch of any size is in one or another of these districts. Fully 100 miles of dikes are in use in the county, and many of them are used also as roads. Very picturesque are these embankments, in many places, as they wind around through the trees. When the Skagit is having a freshet, the people turn out to watch their dikes, and by repairing them, save their lands from inundation. Sometimes a very high tide will go over a dike and cover a number of ranches with salt water. If the water does not stand too long, this does no particular damage.

As there is nothing but sand and black loam to construct the dikes of, no permanent work has ever been done and cannot be until the river is so improved that it has a reasonably straight channel to the sea. Five or six forks or mouths discharge the water into the sound, and the delta thus formed is excellent farming land. If the water should be confined to one channel thousands of acres of land would be reclaimed, and the danger of overflow reduced to a minimum. By this improvement a magnificent navigable river, teeming with fish and flowing through a wealth of timber and mineral land, would be opened up and would provide employment for countless numbers of people.

The only failure of crops ever known there is when the dikes break and the growing grains are ruined with water.—Seattle Post Intelligencer.

An Indian Woman a Nurse.

During the past five years an attempt has been made to instruct the young girls at Carlisle Indian School in the art of nursing. Of the score of Indian girls sent to the hospitals to learn nursing but two or three remain in the profession. Several of them have married redskins and returned to the Indian Territory, while others have lacked the patience necessary to success.

One of the most successful professional nurses in Philadelphia is Miss Kate Grindrod, a full-blooded Wyandotte Indian, who lived for many years in the northwestern part of the Indian Territory. Kate Grindrod's services are eagerly sought after by many of the leading families in the City of Brotherly Love. She is a hard-working, experienced nurse and has been very successful. She enjoys the distinction of being the only girl to be graduated from Carlisle and from the hospital. Others have been graduated from one or the other, but the honor of a double matriculation belongs solely to her.—New York World.

Credit Money the Real Money.

The cost and inconvenience of transporting money from one part of the country to another was aptly illustrated at Topeka the other day when it became necessary for the Rock Island Railroad to send $257,000 to Chicago. If the money had been sent in greenbacks or gold the express charges would have been $321.50; if in silver, $577.75; but the railroad people rejected all three and made the transfer with a bank draft at a cost of only 2 cents. The credit money is the real money of the country, and laws to strengthen it are wiser than laws in relation to the coinage of metal.—Kansas City Journal.

"I don't object, Alice," said the patient father, "to your trying to make yourself look like a man. All I object to is the kind of man you succeed in looking like."

CYCLING COMMENT.

Fred Adams, of this city, spent yesterday at Pompton Lakes, with some friends at the camp there. He enjoyed the hospitality of the soldiers at dinner and reports having had a fine time. Mr. Adams returned last evening. He made the trip by wheel, and as the distance to and from his destination is eighty miles, it was a good day's work.

Robert A. Grant, bookkeeper in Rushmore & Co.'s lumber office, left this morning for Stapleton, Staten Island, where he and Mrs. Grant and family, will enjoy the hospitable home of a relative, Thomas Flanagan.

soon went to third on a passed ball. It was Reinacker's turn next and he foozled a grounder allowing Terry to score and Fountain to reach first. Burke sent one out to Will Smith who let it go through his hands. Fountain reached third and Burke second. A pretty hit by Clements brought in Fountain but it was fielded to Romig in sufficient time to catch Burke at third and end the inning with the score 2 to 2.

Nothing else happened until the last half of the eighth when Easton opened the inning by taking first on four balls. Fred Smith bunted, advancing Easton to second. Cadmus fumbled Hays' grounder and Easton reached third. Hays stole second without delay and then Hardy batted to short. Easton bolted for home and Bernard sent the ball there, but Drake, at the critical moment, dropped it, and Easton and Hays both scored amid the vociferous applause of the audience. Romig and Will Smith ended the inning.

In the ninth Montclair tried hard to catch up and filled two of the bases. There were two outs, however, and Harrison ended the inning with a hot grounder to Fred Smith, which was carefully deposited in Wood's waiting glove. Then the flood gates of the enthusiasm were opened.

Watermelon Cutting Party.

Last Saturday evening there was an entertainment and watermelon cutting party at the home of Mrs. David Bush, corner of Pearl street and Watchung avenue, for the benefit of Pastor McKane, of the Christian church. The affair was largely attended and the net proceeds gratifying. During the evening the Misses DeMott, Mrs. A. D. Pope and Rev. and Mrs. McKane furnished vocal music for the audience, while Mrs. Andrew Cox gave several recitations. Following the entertainment the watermelon cutting took place and ice cream was served. Those present liberally patronized the refreshment department and assisted materially in helping the pastor.

MR. VAIL EXONERATED.

COURT OF CHANCERY CLEARS HIM OF DIVORCE CASE CHARGES.

Advisory Master Williams Says That His Conduct Was Not as the Charges Made It—Counsel Concludes Argument.

(Special to The Daily Press.)

Newark, August 15.—The argument in the Corey divorce case, which has been dragging along in the Court of Chancery for several month past, was ended Saturday afternoon at 2 o'clock when William Newcorn, for the petitioner, closed his argument. Immediately after that Advisory Master Williams, before whom the case has been heard, made an important statement.

After hearing all the evidence in the case, Advisory Master Williams stated that he felt it his duty to lose no time in declaring the innocence of the charges that had been made against former Postmaster Wallace Vail, of Plainfield, who was named as corespondent in the petition. He said that he had carefully heard the evidence and weighed the arguments and was convinced that there was nothing to cast even a suspicion upon Mr. Vail, and that he was honorably and fully discharged from all the accusations in the petition. Mr. Vail received many congratulations in court as a result of the vindication made by the court.

Before adjournment was made an additional counsel fee of $100 was ordered to be paid by the petitioner to Mrs. Corey's lawyers, and the weekly payment of $2 for court expenses was ordered discontinued.

As to the charges against Joseph Gavin, the court decided to reserve its determination till a later date.

The Climax Gun Club, of Plainfield, were easy winners, and the members did not have to exert themselves. The day was a good one for shooting, without much sun and delightfully cool. There were present a number of the prominent sportsmen from this vicinity. After the match there were several sweepstakes shot, in which the honors were fairly evenly divided.

The New Brunswick Gun Club has joined the league and will have a team in the next shoot, which will be held under the auspices of the Climax Gun Club, of Plainfield, Saturday afternoon, Sept. 27th. The shoot will be held at the grounds near Fanwood.

RULES TO BE REMEMBERED.

Important Suggestions Well to Keep in Mind While Cycling.

Now that the cycling season of 1898 is fairly launched the following rules of the road will make most appropriate as well as valuable reading matter:

For the first few weeks of the season it behooves everybody to look out for the novice, who is very much in evidence these days. Many persons take to the wheel without the slightest knowledge of the rules of the road and many others who are aware of the restrictions of custom are entirely negligent in the observance. Following are a few rules which ought always be kept in mind:

In meeting riders, pedestrians and vehicles keep to the right. In overtaking and passing them keep to the left.

In turning corners to the left always keep to the outside of the street.

In turning corners to the right keep as far out as possible without trespassing on the left side of the road.

Never expect pedestrians to get out of your way; find a way around them.

Never coast down a hill having cross streets along the way.

In meeting other riders ascending a hill where there is but one path, always yield the right of way to the upriders.

Bear in mind that a rider meeting an electric car carrying a strong headlight is unable to see beyond the light; keep out of his way.

When riding straight ahead never vary your course suddenly to the right or left without first assuring yourself that no other rider is close in your rear on the side toward which you turn.

Do not ride too close to a novice, and in meeting a novice give plenty of room.

Training Hints.

Stop smoking.

Take plenty of sleep.

Stop drinking alcoholic and malt liquors.

Walk with the chest out, abdomen in, and swing the arms briskly.

Take a sponge bath and a rub down every time you finish riding.

Avoid all pastries, sweets, food with rich sauces and fresh made bread, lard crusts and hot biscuits.

Devote fifteen minutes to arm exercise after rising, in order to clear out and help strengthen the lungs. The better the lungs, the better the endurance.

Don't begin with a thirty-mile ride the first day, if you are training for bicycle work, or a ten-mile walk, if you are getting into condition to run. Just a little exercise for the first week will be enough. After that you can lengthen your "forced marches."

Roast beef, plenty of soft-boiled eggs, plain soups, graham bread, fresh garden vegetables, oatmeal, fish of any kind, not fried; not too many potatoes, neither coffee nor tea, and a glass of ale now and then after dinner will be found beneficial. Chops in the morning and at luncheon are easily digested. Let veal alone.

To Stop Crooked Riding.

Here is what could be called a decided innovation, one that the American tracks would do well to copy from: "All tracks in France have black lines painted around them, one line 18 inches from the pole and another about three feet. These lines are put there as a guide for the judges and referee at the race meet. The rules invariably call that a rider must come down the home stretch in a straight line when in a sprint. A man who rides crooked so as to impede the progress of other riders can easily be picked out by these lines, and immediate disqualification is meted out to the foul rider. Charles River track is the first in this country to adopt the European method, and it will be only a question of time when all the tracks in this country will have the necessary guide for the officials. Cutting down on the pole or up on the track when the men are in full sprint is most dangerous and must be avoided."

Talking of Raising Gears.

It had been thought that the folly of high gears had been amply demonstrated during the past two seasons, but there is evidence that the American cyclist, particularly he who is afflicted with the racing fever, will not be satisfied with even the extreme figures which have been seen of late upon wheels. The European riders now upon the race track in this country have brought over much higher gears than the average American sprinter uses, and, in consequence, all of the fast brigade have begun making changes that, ere long, give promise of landing the gears among the three figures. One hundred or 112 gear is hereafter to be a moderate figure.

Danger of Disinheritance.

According to Chicago advices, E. W. Peabody, the amateur crack, would like to turn professional, but dare not do so because of his father's threat that such a step will be followed by disinheritance.

A New York physician advises riders not to drink strong stimulants while riding, because the supposed recuperative effects are only temporary. The liquid in warm weather passes from the body in the shape of perspiration, leaving the alcohol in the system.

According to a new law in New Jersey justices are required to accept bicycles as collateral when cyclists are taken into custody for violating the laws.

A Greedy Little Fish.

The little fish known as miller's thumb—the fresh water sculpin—is one of the natural checks on the overproduction of trout and salmon. It eats the eggs and the young fish. It is found in all trout waters as fast as examined. It is very destructive. At an experiment once made in the aquarium of the United States Fish Commission, in Washington, a miller's thumb about 1½ inches long ate at a single meal, and all within a minute or two, twenty-one little trout, each from three-quarters of an inch to an inch in length.—New York Sun.

AGED COUPLE'S HOME NEEDS MANY GIFTS.

Destitution of the Clarks Worse Than The Press Told.

THINGS THAT THEY NEED.

CONTRIBUTIONS CAN BE LEFT AT THE DAILY PRESS OFFICE.

Mrs. Wallace Vail Visited the Ramshackle Shanty That Serves Them for a Home and Found Their Condition Pitiable—Both are Sickly and Deserve a Few Comforts in Their Last Days.

The dramatic recital in The Daily Press of the pitiful condition of the old fish-peddler, Jim Clark, and his wife in their ramshackle board hut near Stony Hill, has resulted in the bettering of the condition of the aged couple. Several philanthropic people of this city have visited the shanty and seen for themselves the destitute condition of the Clarks, and have extended aid to the couple.

Among those who went to see the couple was Mrs. Wallace Vail. She confirmed the reports of the others that their destitution was even greater than that pictured in The Daily Press. She says that their home is certainly one of destitution.

As a result of her visit Mrs. Vail learned that they have groceries on hand now that will last about two weeks. When they are gone they have no prospect of getting more, unless they are brought by some charitably-minded people. They are sadly in need of sheets and bed clothing.

Mrs. Clark is seventy-six years old. Her bed is upstairs. The bed is clean, but the only covering is a comforter of rags. She is troubled with a cough, coming from lung difficulty and asthma combined. She needs medicine for it.

Clark had a fall some time ago, as was told in The Press, which compels him to sleep down stairs, being unable to climb the ladder to the upper story. He has a running sore on his leg, the result of a dog bite, which requires many bandages, now lacking.

A set of springs for a bed would be gratefully received by those who are now looking after the aged couple. All articles of comfort or cash subscriptions for their aid can be left at The Press office and will be forwarded to the destitute couple at once by Mrs. Vail or Henry Rogers, who lives near the Clarks, one of the workers in the Wilson Memorial chapel.

James Clark, of West Seventh street, recently visited the home of the destitute people and gave them two complete suits of underclothing which was greatly needed. Mr. Clark, of this city, is no relation, but the Clark of Stony Hill was employed many years ago in carting bark to the tannery of the father of the Plainfielder.

A NEW SECRETARY.

Change in the Officers of the Watchung Water Company.

At a meeting of the Watchung Water Company, held a few days ago, Lewis S. Cook, of Bound Brook, resigned his position as secretary and treasurer, on account of ill health. He will still remain a member of the company. His place was filled by the election of George W. Waite, of Jersey City, who is manager of the freight department of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company at Jersey City.

The company has already made a number of improvements in their plant at Greenbrook, and more will be made. A new turbine wheel has been placed in position and the water power has been increased about 150 horse power. Pending several improvements the machinery has been stopped for a few days, but it is hoped by Manager Sebring that the plant will be started today. The company has decided to commence at once the work of digging several new wells with an idea of still further increasing the water supply.

Married Very Quietly.

The marriage of Miss Anna May Scowcroft, of 1731 West Front street, to Eugene Wheeler, an employe of the Pond Tool Machine Works, took place last Sunday evening at 8 o'clock at the home of Rev. B. W. Hand, 1045 West Seventh street. Mr. Hand performed the ceremony in the presence of his family, who acted as witnesses. The bride and groom have been residents of this city for some time, and they will reside in the future at 1731 West Front street.

LAND FOR ARMY CAMP.

PATRIOTIC OFFER MADE FOR BENEFIT OF THE SOLDIERS.

Henry Rogers Writes the President That He Has Fifty Acres Which the Government Can Have If They Want It.

Always count Plainfield and vicinity in at the forefront of responding to needs of Uncle Sam. If the War Department finds that it will require more ground for camp purposes for the brave boys who are being returned from Cuba, one hundred acres are at their disposal in this vicinity.

Today Henry Rogers, who owns a fine farm on the plateau of the Watchung mountains, forwarded a letter to President McKinley offering the use of fifty acres of his land as a camp for the convalescent soldiers. The land is level and well-drained, and plenty of wholesome water can be obtained. The air is pure and salubrious, as the land is 550 feet above tide water.

Phillip P. Roehricht, a jeweler, of 2155 Seventh avenue, New York, who owns fifty acres of land opposite Mr. Rogers' farm, and which he has cut up into building lots and named them Somerset Park, has also made a similar offer to the Government, and is in receipt of the following letter from Washington:

Executive Mansion.
August 9th, 1898.

My Dear Sir—I beg leave to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 8th inst., addressed to the President, tendering the use of fifty acres of land near Plainfield, N. J., as a camp for convalescent soldiers, and to inform you that it has been brought to the attention of the Secretary of War.

Very truly yours,
J. A. Porter,
Secretary to the President.

FAIR ONES GO IN FREE.

BASEBALL GROUNDS EXTEND A WELCOME TO THE WOMEN.

Riverdale Boys Do the Gallant Thing—Good Clean Ball, Such as Will Abound There, Ought to be an Attraction.

The Crescent Oval is quite a way out but still, with all the Riverdale boys there, baseball seems destined to be popular with the townsfolk once more. It was a rousing opening for the National game that the cranks saw at the Oval last Saturday. So pleasing was it that the old-timers who braved the threatening storm and went up there, all vowed to go again next Saturday. Altogether, the beginning of the career of the Riverdale Field Club as a Plainfield organization was bright to crowd and to management.

There was another thing evident and that was that the grand-stand was a perfectly proper place to which to take a lady. The game was clean and free from all objectionable features and the accommodations were excellent. There were a number of ladies present, but the management wants the united support of the Plainfield ladies.

It was with that end in view that Manager Haley announced that he would follow the precedent set by the Plainfield A. A. football team last year and admit the ladies free to the games for the remainder of the season. Further than that, the best section of the grand-stand will be reserved hereafter for ladies unaccompanied and ladies with their escorts. The grounds, grand-stand and all, will be free to the members of the fair sex who patronize the games the rest of this season. Now, Robert C. Wood, the president of the club, and Manager Haley are racking their brains for some other way in which to win the good graces of the representatives of the fair sex in Plainfield.

The free checking of wheels was found to be very popular and will be continued for the rest of the season. Some of the spectators who did not care to invest a dime to check their wheels became rather excited when the young man in charge of the wheel racks insisted in checking them but a few words of explanation that it was all free set things right.

The management has decided to retain the old name of Riverdale Field Club and hereafter the organization will be known as the Riverdale Field Club of Plainfield. Not a bad name, is it?

Saturday afternoon, the crack team from the Arlington Athletic Association, of Arlington, N. J., will try conclusions with Plainfield's new stars. The visiting team has been doing some great work and is considered right up in the front rank. Several weeks ago they met the Orange Athletic Club and were defeated by a score of 3 to 2.

TWO MEN TUGGED TO STOP RUNAWAY HORSE.

An Exciting Time Made By a Frightened Horse.

ONE MAN HELD EACH REIN.

WAGON STRUCK THE HORSE'S HEELS AND HE BOLTED.

Clark Mundy and William Watt Were in the Wagon and They Were Sent Flying Through the Air When the Vehicle Was Overturned—Watt's Face Cut—Wagon Was a Complete Wreck.

With one man at each rein, a frightened horse with butcher wagon attached went flying out Somerset street last evening. It was just past 6 o'clock. For block after block the wild ride continued. Then the man on the right gave a terrible pull on his rein. The horse sprang to the right. There was a grinding sound, a crash and a series of other crashes. Two forms flew through the air and the horse rushed forth from the wreck and continued on his way alone.

It was altogether the most exciting ride that Clark Mundy, of the firm of Crane & Mundy, West Front street butchers, and their clerk, William Watt, ever had. What tended to make it particularly exciting was the fact that it promised serious injury or perhaps death for both of the men.

They were going down Somerset street in the direction of the mountain. At Chatham street the breeching broke and allowed the wagon to run up on the heels of the horse. Frightened at that, the animal bolted. Mundy grabbed one rein and Watt the other. So they went.

Watt feared to pull in the horse for fear that the wagon coming right at the horse's heels would frighten the equine even more. Mundy was for trying to stop the animal. The ride continued until they reached Linden avenue. Then Mundy decided on desperate means and gave a terrible pull on his rein. As a result the horse made a sudden swerve, the wheels struck the car track and the wagon turned a complete somersault.

As the wagon went over, Mundy shot out of the opening at the side and went rolling over the street. Watt went down in the wreck of the wagon and finally crawled out of the debris, his face partially covered with blood that flowed from a cut just under the eye. Although it bled freely, the cut was not a deep one.

The wagon was a complete wreck as was the harness, part of which had been torn off the horse when the accident occurred. The horse was afterwards caught some distance out Somerset street and brought back. It was not injured.

This morning both men were able to return to work although somewhat bruised as a result of the tumble on the hard roadway.

LAWYERS PRAISED.

Codington & Swackhamer Attract Marked Attention in the Corey Divorce Case.

Former Postmaster Wallace Vail is receiving lots of congratulations from his neighbors and friends over his vindication in the Corey divorce case.

As stated the language of the court was direct and positive in declaring his absolute innocence and the result is received with satisfaction everywhere. Messrs. Codington & Swackhamer have attracted marked attention in connection with the case both in Newark and in this city, and it is said that while the defense was able and complete throughout, the final arguments, running through less than seven hours, were among the most cogent and eloquent that have been delivered in the Chancery Chambers. The Court in awarding the additional counsel fee of $100 paid a high compliment to counsel and stated that the sums allowed were no measure of the value of the services rendered, but that the circumstances of the compliment had to be taken into consideration. The Advisory Master, having gone on his vacation, he will ultimately dispose of the case on his return.

Age Didn't Hinder this Stepper.

The handsome silver pitcher won by Douglass Darby's horse "Minnie," last Saturday afternoon on the track of the Plainfield Driving Association, is now on exhibition at the meat market of J. W. HOW MANILA WAS TAKEN.

Combined Attack Made By Land and Sea.

OLYMPIA LED ATTACK.

BATTLE LASTED TWO HOURS, THEN CAME TRUCE FLAG.

Accurate Fire of American Gunners Almost Demolished Spanish Fortifications—Spanish Commander Skipped—News From Dewey Expected.

(From the Union Associated Press.)

Hong Kong, August 16, 12:17 p. m—The report of the capitulation of the city of Manila to General Merritt and Rear Admiral Dewey has been confirmed by the German consul here.

He says that at 10 o'clock Saturday morning Rear Admiral Dewey advanced on the city with his warships, having previously received a refusal to his demand to surrender.

The flagship Olympia leading the warships again signalled to the city to surrender. The Spaniards still refusing to capitulate the Olympia began a bombardment of the forts with eight-inch shells. The other ships afterwards joined in the bombardment.

Simultaneously with the bombardment by the naval forces, the land forces of the Americans marched against the city and made a determined assault.

The battle on land and sea lasted for nearly two hours during which time the accurate fire of the American gunners almost entirely destroyed the forts around the city. The white flag was then hoisted on the ramparts of the ruined forts.

Captain General Augustin and his family were taken on board the German cruiser Kaiserin Augusta at dusk and sailed for Hong Kong.

Rear Admiral Dewey expected to send one of his fast cruisers to this port to carry the news of the victory. It is looked for every hour.

ANOTHER DANGER TO SPAIN

A Madrid Paper's Apprehensions of the Outcome of the British-Russian Conflict.

(From the Union Associated Press.)

Madrid, August 16.—El Liberal, discussing the eventuality of a conflict between Great Britain and Russia, thinks it a cause of fresh peril to Spain, and urges that special preparations be made for the defences of the Balearic Islands and the coast towns of Andalusia.

It says: "For three years we have sought to defend our honor and Spanish sovereignty in the colonies. To-day we are threatened with another danger. We have to defend our homes."

50,000 Volunteers to be Mustered Out.

KEAN GETS THE RIGHT FOR COUNTY TROLLEY.

Offer of $250,000 Accepted by Board of Freeholders.

SIX MEMBERS ARE OPPOSED

PROMINENT CITIZENS HEARD FOR AND AGAINST THE PLAN.

County Attorney Codington Will Draw Up a Bond for Mr. Kean and it Will Then be Submitted to the Supreme Court for Approval—Plainfield Freeholders Voted to Accept Offer.

[Special to The Daily Press.]

Elizabeth, August 16—John Kean has added another great franchise to those he already holds. It is the right to construct and operate an electric street railway over the proposed widened boulevard—the greatest improvement ever undertaken in Union county.

The Board of Freeholders met in executive session last evening, and by a vote of 11 to 6 accepted the offer of Mr. Kean of $250,000 for the franchise.

There was a large crowd of citizens from all parts of the county in attendance at the meeting, which was held prior to the Board going into executive session, to give the people a chance to express their views on the subject. Speeches in opposition to granting the franchise to Mr. Kean were made by William Drysdale and Alfred J. McIntire, of Cranford, and Lawyer Depue, who represented Cranford property-owners. Theodore McGarrah, of Westfield, sent a written protest against the franchise being awarded, and warned the Freeholders that the cost would be largely in excess of Mr. Kean's bid. J. H. Bronson, of Elmora, was also opposed to it.

Remarks in favor of giving Mr. Kean the franchise were made by Judge Gilhooly, Lawyer Louis A. Graff, ex-Congressman Amos Clark, ex-County Engineer Louis Quien, ex-School Commissioner Charles Moore, and ex-Councilman Oliver Story, of Elizabeth; James T. Pierson, of Westfield, and Isaac Newton, of Cranford.

The Freeholders instructed County Attorney Codington to draw up a bond which will be signed by Mr. Kean and then submitted to Judge Van Syckel for his approval, in accordance with the provisions of the law.

Mr. Kean will begin at once to get the consents of property owners, and will also apply to the Elizabeth City Council for permission to connect his East Grand and East Jersey street horse railroad line with the proposed county trolley line.

The Freeholders who voted against granting the franchise were Robison, of Fanwood; Higgins, of Linden; Swayne, of Summit; Adams, of Cranford; Wahl, of New Providence, and Scudder, of Westfield.

JUDGE GROWS FACETIOUS.

Compares The City Jail to New York's Swell Hostelry.

"How did you like a night in the Waldorf-Astoria?" queried Judge DeMeza as old Peter Galbraith was arraigned before him. Galbraith had been over night amid the creeping and the crawling things in one of the cells of the city jail. Mrs. Carrie Boyle, a neighbor, was the complainant against him, charging him with being drunk and calling her profane and indecent names.

Now the Judge's question was a puzzler to Galbraith and he scratched his head and thought. Before he could collect his wits, the Judge began the examination.

It had been a quarrel of long standing and the prisoner, his wife and the complainant immediately began to argue about it in the courtroom. The Judge then adjourned the case until Saturday morning, when he will fully go into the case.

Bought Another Meat Market.

The increasing business of Fred Endress, the West Front street butcher, has brought about an increase in his arrangements for handling the cares of his customers. He has just completed the purchase of George Eddy's butcher shop on Muhlenberg place and will open a branch store there, where he will be able to look directly after the trade in that section. The store will be all newly equipped and furnished with the most modern appliances in the butcher business.

Confined in a Dark Room.

Councilman Murray Burtis, of the borough, has been confined in a dark room at his residence on Fairview avenue for the past month with a very serious attack of congestive ivetus, at one time threatening the loss of his eye. He is now convalescing and expects to be able to attend to business in a few days.

PREACHES TOO LOUD

SEVERAL NETHERWOOD RESIDENTS COMPLAIN OF CAMP MEETING

They Say He Disturbs Them and Attracts Many People to Netherwood Who Chase Away the Usual Quietness.

The stentorian voice of another colored preacher has made more trouble. First, there came complaints from the residents of West Front street regarding a colored church located there. Now several prominent residents of that exclusive section, Netherwood, have objected against the gathering in the grove, familiarly known as the camp meeting. No formal complaint has yet been made, but the residents about there have complained verbally to Mayor Fisk and other city officials, saying they are nightly disturbed by the shouts of the preacher in the grove.

Furthermore, they object quite seriously to the crowd it attracts. Netherwood has always been a quiet place, and they are loath to have the peace and quietude disturbed by the talking and laughing of the people strolling about, and the earnest pleas of the preacher, which can be heard nearly two blocks away.

PLANS FOR THE PARADE

JUNIORS WILL HAVE A BIG TIME AT ASBURY PARK THURSDAY.

Governor Voorhees and Staff are Expected to be Present—Franklin Council, of This City, Will Have an Important Part.

Members of the Jr. O. U. A. M. of Plainfield will play an important part in the big parade at Asbury Park on American Day, August 18th. Franklin Council will run an excursion to the Park and expects to take a big crowd down.

The councils will report at Railroad square, opposite the station, and the line will move promptly at 11:30 a. m. The first division will form on Mattison avenue, right resting on Main street; second division will form on Bangs avenue, right resting on Main street; third division will form on Summerfield avenue, right resting on Main street, and the fourth division will form on Munroe avenue, right resting on Main street.

The line will move over a short route in Ocean Grove, by special invitation from Ocean Grove Association, then returning to Asbury Park, over a short route in the Park to Ocean Grove, to the Auditorium and be dismissed at 12:30 p. m. This arrangement will allow the Mechanics to spend the whole afternoon with their families. To make the parade interesting three prizes will be given, as follows:

The State Council will give a silk flag to the council having in line the largest percentage of their membership. Asbury Council, No. 23, will present to the council having the second largest percentage of their membership in line, a bunting flag. Asbury Council, No. 23, will present to the council having the third largest percentage of their membership in line, a fine gavel.

Governor Voorhees and staff, together with the Mayor and City Council of Asbury Park, will take part in the parade and in company with the State officers will review the parade from a stand at the Auditorium.

BIDS RECEIVED.

Offers Made for Installing Heating Apparatus in Fire Headquarters.

Last evening there was a meeting of the fire and building committee of the City Council at which time the bids for installing a new heating apparatus at fire headquarters were opened. Five bids were received as follows: Manufacture Supply Company, of Newark, $400; A. M. Griffen, $439.75; A. B. Thorn, $424.56; A. H. Enander, $406; G. J. Tobin, $389. The bids of the Newark concern and that of A. M. Griffen were received without a certified check. Nothing further was done at the meeting, and the committee will now consider the matter and make a report at the next meeting of the Council when it will probably be recommended that the lowest bidder be given the contract.

IN A DRUNKEN FRENZY SAID HE WOULD SHOOT.

Borough Marshal Threatened With a Leaden Welcome.

THEY DIDN'T STOP, THOUGH.

GEORGE HUGHES ARRESTED AFTER MAKING A BIG DISTURBANCE.

Came Home Early This Morning and Started in to Clean Out the House—Finally Captured and Locked Up—His Wife Appeared in Court This Morning and Substantiated Officers' Charges.

"Don't you come in this house or I'll put some lead through you."

These were the words that George Hughes, of Manning avenue, threatened Marshal George Wise and Marshal Frank Winn with about 1:30 o'clock this morning.

It was about 1:30 o'clock when Marshal Wise heard the noise and he soon found out where it came from. It was at the home of George Hughes. He had come home during the evening in an intoxicated condition and at once prepared to clean house. His wife, knowing of her husband's condition, had left the house with her baby and had gone to her brother-in-law's, James Bailey, on the oppose side of the street.

After Mr. Hughes reached home he assumed a destructive nature. He grasped a large iron and demolished the panes of glass in one of the front windows. This sport amused him for a time, but he soon wanted a change, so he went in the parlor and began to play on the piano.

When Marshal Wise arrived he discovered that he would need help and he blew his whistle. Marshal Winn responded and the two officers worked for nearly a half hour before they succeeded in arresting the midnight disturber.

Hughes made all sorts of noises and threatened to do the officers if they came near him. He ran back and forth, turned out the lights in the house and discharged his revolver without hitting anything.

After a while Hughes made his appearance on the sidewalk. Marshal Wise quickly caught hold of Hughes, and with the assistance of Marshal Winn, succeeded in landing the culprit in the borough lockup.

This morning Hughes was arraigned before Recorder Long. He entered a plea of not guilty. Mrs. Hughes was present and sustained the charge made by the officers. She related in detail substantially what had taken place. After hearing the evidence Recorder Long reserved his decision until 2 o'clock this afternoon.

Borough Recorder Long this afternoon fined Hughes $20.

DRANK, FOUGHT AND JAILED.

Sad Experiences of Two Plainfield Men as Told to City Judge.

Two sadly-demoralized specimens of humanity, with bloody faces and black eyes in abundance, were the principal offenders to be haled before City Judge DeMeza this morning. Patrolman McCarty said that they had been drunk and fighting. And they certainly looked it.

They admitted that perhaps a glass or two beyond their limit had passed their lips, and their remembrance of the happenings of last night were hazy, indeed. They thought that, perhaps, they might have been fighting just a little. They gave their names as John Kernon and William Connor.

McCarty told how there was another, more sober than these, who had bolted into the house on Grant avenue, in front of which they had been standing, and barricaded the door against the arm of the law. Thus he escaped. These two were brought down in a dazed condition.

The Judge laid the case over until Saturday to get more evidence.

WOULDN'T GIVE THE FIGURES.

Borough Board of Education Awarded Contracts for New School.

The Borough Board of Education held an adjourned meeting last evening to consider further the bids for the construction of the new schoolhouse. The mason work was awarded to William C. Smith, while William C. Krausse was given the plumbing work. The contracts for the heating and ventilating were laid over for another meeting. The Board refused to give the figures bid by Mr. Smith and Mr. Krausse, stating in explanation that they had decided that it is the place of the successful bidders to give them out if they want them known.

William F. Arnold, cashier of the City National Bank, is in Trenton today on business.

AND MANILA IS OURS

Report from Hong Kong That the City Has Fallen.

AUGUSTIN HAS DEPARTED

A German Steamer Lands at Hong Kong With Augustin and Family from Manila. Steamer Left Friday and American Warsh'ps Were Then Anchored in Front of the Town.

Hong Kong, China, Aug. 15.—The German cruiser Kaiserin Augusta, which arrived here from Manila to-day, brought over Governor General Augustin and his entire family.

General Augustin refused to speak further than to say that he was returning home to Spain.

The Kaiserin Augusta left Manila Friday. The city had not then fallen.

The American warships were then anchored in front of the city proper.

London, Aug. 16.—A dispatch received here from Hong Kong says that it is reported that Manila has fallen.

New York, Aug. 16.—A leading house in Wall street has received a dispatch from its correspondent in Hong Kong saying:

"Manila has fallen and is now in the possession of the Americans."

Report Confirmed at Washington.

Washington, Aug. 15.—The department of state late to-night posted the following:

"The following dispatch was received at the department of state at 11.15 p. m. Aug. 15, from Consul Wildman at Hong Kong:

"'Augustin says Dewey bombarded Manila Saturday. City surrendered unconditionally. Augustin was taken by Germans in launch to Kaiserin Augusta and brought to Hong Kong. I credit report.'"

The fall of Manila occurred on August 13, one day after the peace protocol, agreeing to preliminary terms of peace, was signed in Washington by Secretary Day and M. Cambon, the French ambassador, acting for Spain. This will in no wise affect the legality of the surrender of the city to Admiral Dewey and Gen. Merritt.

It was on July 31 that the American troops under General Greene engaged the Spanish outposts at Manila and drove them in, capturing Malate. This was considered by many the beginning of the end of the Spanish power in Manila. It was known that both Dewey and Merritt were waiting only for the arrival of sufficient American forces before beginning the bombardment of the city.

Troops for Manila Held Back.

Washington, Aug. 16.—The war department will send no more troops to the Philippines until General Merritt asks for them. Orders have been sent to General Merriam, commanding the department of California, directing him to hold the transports Scandia and Arizona at San Francisco until further orders from Washington.

The troops are already on board ship, but the vessels will not be allowed to sail until the department shall have received a message from General Merritt in reply to the inquiry whether more forces are needed in the Philippines.

Protocol Article Relating to Philippines.

Washington, Aug. 16.—Owing to an error in transmission, article iii of the full text of the peace protocol, as cabled from Madrid, was not given with accuracy. The text of this article is as follows, agreeing with Secretary Day's statement on Friday afternoon, after the signing of the protocol.

Article III. The United States will occupy and hold the city, bay and harbor of Manila, pending the conclusion of a treaty of peace which shall determine the control, disposition and government of the Philippines.

Mrs. Miles Criticises Medical Department

Washington, Aug. 16.--Mrs. Miles, the wife of Major General Miles, is one of the critics of the medical department of the army. Since the beginning of the war Mrs. Miles has taken great interest in the sick and wounded soldiers.

Mrs. Miles recently made a personal inspection of the hospital at Fort Meyer, Va., and Fortress Monroe. She found a great lack of system at both these places.

For instance, at Fort Meyer Mrs. Miles discovered that the large supplies of delicacies sent by various patriotic societies had never been distributed. She immediately took measures to have these provisions dealt out to the sick soldiers.

Embarking Spanish Prisoners.

Washington, Aug. 16.--The transportation of Spanish prisoners from Santiago to Spain is now well under way. The following dispatch from General Shafter, received in Washington, shows that about one-tenth of the entire number were embarked on a single ship:

Santiago, Cuba, Aug. 14.

H. C. Corbin, Adjutant General, U. S. A., Washington:

Luzon sailed this afternoon for Spain with 2,056 soldiers, 4 priests, 16 women, 34 children and 137 officers; total, 2,237.

SHAFTER,
Major General.

Morton to Succeed Hay.

New York, Aug. 16.--The Republican leaders of this city believe that President McKinley will appoint either former Governor Levi P. Morton or Dr. Chauncey M. Depew ambassador to England when John Hay has been made secretary of state. The appointmentof either man would be acceptable to the Republican organization of the state, and it is said that the president has the names of both under consideration.

Appointed by the President.

Washington, Aug. 16.--The president has made the following appointments: Alexander Heingarten of Ohio to be consul at Catania, Italy.

SOLDIERS FROM CUBA

They Throng the Army and Navy Building for Pay, Furlough and Transportation

New York, Aug. 16.--Probably at no time since the war began has the Army building in this city presented such a military appearance as it has for two or three days. The corridors are crowded with returning regulars having their papers of honorable discharge and furlough made out and receiving checks for pay or for transportation to their destinations.

Those who visited the Army building for these purposes were mostly from the Third, Ninth and Tenth cavalry and the Twenty-fourth and Twenty-fifth infantry regiments.

There were as many colored as white soldiers in the crowd.

All were arrayed just as they were when they came from the field of battle and made a striking scene. Most of the men wore flannel shirts, worn, rusty trousers and battered military hats.

Colonel Kimball and the officers of the quartermaster's department were busy all day arranging the affairs of the returning soldiers.

"We are working hard to fix the men," said Colonel Kimball, "and on Saturday furloughs of thirty days were issued to eighty men and transportation given them back to their places of enlistment or to their homes. They have been provided with sleeping accommodations and commutation rations for the journey. A commutation ration is placed at $1.50 a day, in lieu of regular army rations. The men are all being treated well. Some of them go as far west as California. Quite a number go to states west of the Mississippi. Yesterday the office was crowded. Now that the war is over, many of the volunteers will be mustered out and sent to their places of enlistment free of charge."

Colonel Wilson, chief paymaster, and his assistant, Major W. H. Comegys, have been busy paying off the men. Many of the men have drawn back pay which has accumulated while they were in the hospitals.

Charles Boughton, member of Troop D, Third cavalry, has received an honorable discharge after a service of 20 years. He is on his way to New Haven and expects to enlist after the expiration of his furlough. Boughton carries a souvenir of the battle of Santiago in the shape of a handsome silver watch, which he picked up on the battlefield, and which he avers belonged to some Spanish officer.

A soldier of Pittsburg paid a tribute to the efficiency of the members of the Red Cross society. He said that he became ill on the trip from Santiago to Tampa. It was not until he received treatment from the members of the Red Cross society that he felt better. He said:

"The half will never be told of what the men endured in Cuba for lack of proper food and attendance," and, looking over himself, added: "But I am feeling well now, though a little weak."

More than a score of soldiers, many of them members of Troop C, Sixth cavalry, were at the sub-treasury receiving cash for their transportation vouchers. There were also several teamsters who have received their discharge papers. Later a group of cavalrymen visited the stock exchange and were uproariously greeted by the brokers on the floor.

The Yellow Fever Not Feared.

Washington, Aug. 16.--Surgeon General Wyman, in charge of the quarantine and marine hospital service, says that he has no fear whatever of the introduction of a yellow fever epidemic into this country as a result of the return of the soldiers from Santiago de Cuba.

At Montauk Point the services of five of the best surgeons are employed in examining the returning soldiers. They are Drs. Magruder, Kinyoum, Brenner, Hastings and Tabb. They have three boats at their command, one of which is a disinfecting barge properly fitted with all modern appliances.

Lord Mayor's Visit Postponed.

London, Aug. 16.--The lord mayor of London, Horatio David Davies, has postponed his projected American tour indefinitely on account of the illness of his wife.

A Funny Addition Sum.

How many apples did Adam and Eve eat?

Some say Eve 8 and Adam 2—a total of 10 only.

Now we figure the thing out far differently. Eve 8 and Adam 8 also—total, 16.

We think the above figures are entirely wrong. If Eve 8 and Adam 82, certainly the total will be 90.

Scientific men, however, on the strength of the theory that the antedeluvians were a race of giants, reason something like this—Eve 81 and Adam 82—total, 163.

Wrong again. What could be clearer than if Eve 81 and Adam 812, the total was 893?

I believe the following to be the true solution: Eve 814 Adam and Adam 8124 Eve—8,938.

Still another calculation is as follows; If Eve 814 Adam, Adam 81242 oblige Eve—total 82,056.

Ski-Running.

In the first place it is called sherunning. In the next it is a Winter sport, vastly superior to skating or tobogganing and also vastly more difficult. Long, narrow sandals are strapped to the feet, and a spiked bamboo pole guides the runners' course more or less.

The sport is practiced on the natural snow-covered hills at an angle of 45 degrees or more. The fun of sliding along twenty yards a second can be imagined.

Real Genius.

He—Do you think you could live on $20 a week?

She—Well, I might try.

He—Hurrah, then, happiness is in store for us. I heard your father say to-day he'd be willing to give that much if some plan could be hit upon to keep me from coming around here any more.—Chicago News.

GEN. LEE WILL RETURN

He Is to Go Back to Havana as Military Commander.

ARMY TO ACCOMPANY HIM

He Talks With Secretary Alger and Gen. Corbin Will Head the Military Commission. Either Wade or Butler Will Serve With Him. Schley or Howell May Be the Naval Member.

Washington, Aug. 16.—General Fitzhugh Lee was the most conspicuous visitor at the war department yesterday. He had a long conference with Secretary Alger, and it is understood that it was practically settled that General Lee is to be designated as commanding general of the military department of Cuba.

The meeting between General Lee and Secretary Alger was of the most cordial nature. General Lee disposed of all the silly stories about his dissatisfaction and threatened resignation by saying that he is prepared to go wherever he may be ordered, and perform to the best of his ability any duty to which he may be assigned.

It is well understood that General Lee will be a member of the joint military and naval commission which is soon to be appointed to sit at Havana, and his summons to Washington was in connection with the appointment.

It is probable that General Lee will head the commission, although there has been some discussion about the proprietary of placing a volunteer officer at the head of the commission. The probability is that either Major General Wade or Major General Butler will be the second man on the commission, and either Admiral Schley or Commodore Howell will be the naval member.

On high authority in the war department it is said that General Lee will be commanding general of the new military department to be created in Cuba, and be at the head of the Havana joint military and naval commission besides.

GEN. FITZHUGH LEE.

He does not attempt to conceal his gratification at the prospect of returning to Cuba as military governor, as he will then have an opportunity to make good the declaration he delivered to the Spaniards as he was leaving the harbor of Havana a few months ago. It will be remembered that he served notice on the Dons that he would soon return with a force of American soldiers, and the administration proposes he shall fulfill that farewell declaration to the letter.

SICK SOLDIERS COMING.

Relief and Olivette Northward Bound. Health of the Armies.

Washington, Aug. 16.—Surgeon General Sternberg has received dispatches from Cuba and Porto Rico relative to the condition of the troops in those islands. Surgeon Torney cables from Ponce that the Relief will sail for Mayaguez to-day and will arrive in New York about Friday morning. She had on board about twenty wounded and fifty convalescents. There were 185 cases of fever, mostly typhoid. Surgeon Greenleaf cables from Ponce that the typhoid cases are decreasing, and that there were no new cases on Saturday. The general health of the command is improving.

Surgeon Havard cables from Santiago that the Olivette sailed yesterday with 200 non-infected patients. She will touch at Fort Monroe for instructions, and probably will be ordered to continue to Montauk Point.

Ambassador Hay's Promotion.

London, Aug. 16.—The afternoon papers without exception express regret at the probable return of Ambassador Hay to the United States to succeed Secretary Day, and the hope that he will see his way clear to decline the appointment to the secretaryship of state, as it would be a "pity to interrupt an ambassadorial career promising great results for the future of the two nations."

The Westminster Gazette says: "While an American before all, none could have worked more effectually to foster the growing Anglo-American settlement. The recall of Colonel Hay, while a gain to his country, would be no slight loss of ours."

The Texas in Trim.

Brooklyn, Aug. 16.--Freshly painted, and looking as trim and neat as if she had only just gone into commission, the United States battleship Texas awaits a favorable tide to be floated out of the dry dock at the navy yard. The needed repairs to her hull, superstructure and machinery have been completed under the watchful supervision of Naval Constructor Bowles, and, if anything, the war vessel is stauncher and even more formidable than ever.

All Cuban Ports Open.

Washington, Aug. 16.--The treasury department has issued an order directing collectors of customs to clear vessels to all ports in Cuba and Porto Rico in the same manner as before the commencement of hostilities between Spain and the United States. The trade between the United States and Porto Rico, however, is restricted to American vessels.

Up-to-date Laundry Work.

We run the laundry and take care of all details, but you "boss" it. We do what you tell us to do. It may give you a new sensation to find that you get a domestic finish when you ask for it, and to discover that your collars are actually ironed in the way that the maker intended them to be ironed.

We are running a laundry with the most improved methods and appliances. We use pure water and good soap. We are using two things that are not commonly used in laundries—care and intelligence. If you have found a laundry that pleases you perfectly, we have nothing to say to you. If you have any reason to be dissatisfied, we would like to give you a practical demonstration of our way of running a laundry.

Tell us where and when to call for your work, when you want it delivered and let us know any particular thing that you would like to have done with it.

We want you to understand that we are running this laundry for YOU, and that your wishes are to be regarded in every particular.

We also have just completed arrangements for doing family washing in a satisfactory manner by the dozen or week. Please call at office for further information.

The Clearing Sale of Shirt Waists.

With the close of July comes the greatest price-cutting—the most attractive values ever offered. The remaining stock is divided into two lots, 49c. and 75c., former prices ranged from 75c to $1.50. There's not 200 waists in the entire assortment, so we advise an early call for the best selection.

Sailor Hats and Untrimmed Hats 49c.

This means that each and every hat, irrespective of former price, will be 49c. Of especial interest should the price be, as none have been less than 75c, and the styles offered are all of this season's production.

Men's Negligee Shirts 59c.

Sounds cbeap, but the hundred or more shirts that go on sale have been selling at 75c., 85c. and $1. The patterns are all new and desirable, the kind that you would like. Clearing time is here, and the new price, 59c., will be the means of their quick disposal.

Men's Summer Underwear 20c.

Nearly 600 pieces gauze underwear to be 20c. This is ordinarily the best 25c underwear sold, but 20c will be the clearing price.

In Chancery of New Jersey.

To Samuel H. Kellogg and Sarah C. Kellogg, his wife, and Caroline M. Coolidge and Henry L. Coolidge, her husband

By virtue of an order of the Court of Chancery of New Jersey, made on the day of date hereof in a cause wherein Phebe M. Sprague is complainant and you and others are defendants, you are required to appear, plead, demur or answer to the bill of said complainant on or before the twenty-seventh day of September next, or that in default thereof such decree will be made against you as the Chancellor shall think equitable and just.

The said bill is filed to foreclose a mortgage given by Samuel Kellogg and Eliza S. Kellogg, his wife, to Gottlieb Fritz, dated October 25, 1876 and recorded in book, No. 40, of mortages for Union County, on page 573, etc., on lands in the city of Plainfield, in Union County, New Jersey, and held under assignment by said complainant, and you, Samuel H. Kellogg and may thereby claim an inchoate right of dower in the portion of said mortgaged lands owned by your said husband.

And you, Henry L. Coolidge, are made defendant because you may claim an interest as tenant by the curtesy in the portion of said mortgaged lands owned by your wife, Caroline M. Coolidge.

OUR WARSHIPS RETURNING.

Sampson's and Schley's Vessels Due Here This Week.

Washington, Aug. 16.—Rear Admiral Sampson, with the four big battleships and two armored cruisers of his fleet, is now on his way North, having sailed at ten o'clock Sunday morning from Santiago de Cuba. Rear Admiral Schley on the cruiser Brooklyn accompanied the fleet.

The naval orders made public yesterday give the Brooklyn as starting on the 11th from Playa del Este on the south coast of Cuba. This, however, was prior to the orders issued on the suspension of hostilities when the Brooklyn was included with other ships ordered north. The naval authorities expect the fleet at Tompkinsville the latter part of the week.

Welcome to Returning Warships.

Washington, Aug. 16.--The arrival of Admiral Sampson at New York with his fleet of four battleships and two cruisers will be attended with a naval demonstration in the North river on Saturday morning. Many requisitions have come to the navy department from New York to authorize the ships to fire a salute as they turn toward Tompkinsville again.

The flagship will be met at Sandy Hook with the dispatches from the navy department conveying this order. It is expected that the fleet will reach Tompkinsville on Friday afternoon.

An evidence of the cessation of hostilities is the action of the navy department in again making public the movements of naval vessels. The bulletin given out yesterday announced that the St. Paul had sailed from Playa del Este, Cuba, to Montauk; the Dixie and Yankee from Playa to the north coast of Cuba; the Brooklyn from Playa to the south coast of Cuba; the Oneida from Key West to Havana; the Topeka from Key West to the Isle of Pines; the Hercules from Port Royal to Norfolk, and the Kanawha from Port Royal to Key West. The Siren has arrived at Key West, the Dolphin at Lambert's Point and the Solace at Playa.

RELIEF FOR CUBANS.

Ships Loaded With Supplies Will Soon Leave Tampa.

Tampa, Fla., Aug. 16.--The opening of the port of Havana is the all important subject to the quartermaster's department of the army stationed here, and the Red Cross representatives. This city, being the nearest base of army supplies to Havana, will be used for some time to come as the port of embarkation for supplies shipped to the Cuban capital.

Three large ships chartered by the government as transports for troops have been ordered to come to Port Tampa from the Mullet Key quarantine station and the loading of provisions for the starving Cubans in and around Havana and Manatzas will begin at once.

Lieutenant Colonel Bellinger, depot quartermaster at this post, still has charge of government supplies here, and the commissary stores originally shipped here for the army may be turned over to the Red Cross society for distribution among the Cubans.

The leading Cubans will carry out their original intention of loading the Wanderer with provisions and clothing for the Cubans in Cuba. The steamship will leave in a day or two. The steamships Allegheny, Saratoga and Knickerbocker are loading supplies for tht United States troops at Santiago. They will sail this week.

Orders have been received for the Fifth cavalry to proceed to Huntsville, Ala., as soon as General Coppinger learns that the camp ground is ready for the troops. The Fifth Maryland, Second Georgia and Fifth regular cavalry also go to Huntsville. The movement begins to-morrow.

New York Will Honor Returning Troops.

New York, Aug. 16.—President Guggenheimer of the municipal council will introduce this resolution to-day in the council:

Whereas, The United States government has directed that the troops of the regular and volunteer army will at once be removed from the seat of war to camps to be laid out in Montauk Point, in this state, and

Whereas, The whole American people are desirous of demonstrating in some fitting way their gratitude for the magnificent achievements of the men who have added lustre to the American name;

Resolved, That his honor the mayor of the coty of New York be and he is hereby requested to invite the people of the United States to assemble in this city on some day to be hereafter determined to receive and tender to these returning soldiers such a welcome as will in a measure give expression to the immense feeling of gratitude which pervades the entire people.

Resolved, That he be requested to select a committee of at least one hundred citizens to arrange for such reception and welcome.

Resolved, That he be requested to apply to the government of the United States for such co-operation as will enable the municipality to make the occasion a national celebration commemorative of the union of all sections of our beloved country in the cause of humanity, a testimony of our appreciation of the services of the armies and navies which have secured such wonderful results in so brief a time, and an approval of the magnanimity which has been accorded to the brave soldiers and sailors of our adversary."

Don Carlos is Not Warlike.

London, Aug. 16.—A special dispatch from Lucerne, Switzerland, says that the following inspired statement has been made there:

"Notwithstanding his disapproval of the course the government at Madrid is taking, Don Carlos maintains his firm intention to discourage any actual risin gin Spain and is using all his influence to quell insurrectionary tendencies and attempted uprisings among and on the part of his too devoted followers."

Gen. Blanco Resigns.

Madrid, Aug. 16.—The government has received from Captain General Blanco a dispatch tendering his resignation.

The reason given by Captain General Blanco for resigning is that he does not wish to superintend the evacuation of Cuba.

ENGLAND'S BOLD STEP

Would Compel the Removal of Li Hung Chang.

HER GROUNDS FOR ACTION

His Anti-British Attitude in the Recent Diplomatic Entanglement Over Chinese Railway Concessions to Be the Ground on Which England Is to Proceed.

London, Aug. 16.--The foreign office, it is reported here, though the report as yet lacks confirmation, intends to demand that the Chinese government dismiss Prince Li Hung Chang from power on the ground that he is responsible for the recent anti-British attitude of the Tsung-li-Yemen.

The foreign office, it is also asserted, has had under special consideration the question of seizing the Taku forts, on the Gulf of Pechin, at the mouth of the Pekin river, and the City of Tien-Tsin, the port of Pekin, in the event of China holding all until compliance is assured, refusing to comply with this demand.

Meanwhile the semi-official journal de St. Petersburg, in to-day's issue, deprecates the tone of the British press and says: "Russia does not contemplate fresh acquisitions in the Far East. Her only object is to preserve the advantages recently gained. The Russian government does not desire to injure the economic interests of Great Britain any mor than those of any other power.

LI HUNG CHANG.

The controversy between England and Russia is over the possession of a new railroad which is being built from New Chwang to Shounia-Kwan. At New Chwang this line connects with the Manchurian railroad, which in turn connects with the Trans-Siberian railroad. At Shonhal-Kwon connection will be made with Tientsin by the railroad now being built.

These various connections make the road the link in the great system which is to unite Siberia with the rich valley which is the main source of China's wealth. The control of this road is therefore of great commercial importance, and would also carry with it a strong strategic advantage.

Since the beginning of the operations looking to the building of the new road Russia and England have been watching each other closely, but in all the diplomatic contests thus far England has been worsted, and M. Pavilof, the Russian minister, has succeeded in having his way. His peremptory demand that English capitalists should not be permitted to control the new road was granted by the Chinese authorities, and it has been understood from the first that Li Hung Chang has exerted his great influence with his government in support of the demands of Russia.

Hay Knows Eastern Question.

Washington, Aug. 16--Ambassador Hay will be appointed Secretary of State about September 1. There is a deeper signifiance in this arrangement than the mere desire to place a competent man in the office. Mr. Hay has interested himself in the two years of his service at the Court of St. James's with a study of the Eastern situation. He is concerned in the proposed partition of China by Germany, Russia and France, and his sympathies are with England in restricting this scheme of spoliation.

The friendly relations of Great Britain with Spain were encouraged and responded to by Ambassador Hay to the fullest extent, and he is thoroughly in mony of interests but not an alliance.

The United States has become a factor in Eastern politics through the victory of Admiral Dewey, and in the State troduce a fund of information that will have an important effect upon our trade and international relations.

Greater War Yet.

There is the probability that the closing of the Spanish-American war will witness the breaking out abroad of another of mightier proportions. In that event the services of a diplomat of Mr. Hay's qualifications will be absolutely indispensable to the president.

Mr. Hay's services will be impressed upon the peace commissioners before they depart on their mission. The administration proposes to proceed with caution, and to give the profoundest consideration to the many points of detail involved in our new relations to the world.

IMMUNES AT SANTIAGO.

Col. Hood's Men to Garrison the City.

Santiago de Cuba, Aug. 15.--The transport Ledua, from Savannah, arrived here this forenoon with two battalions of the Fifth regiment of immunes under Major H. D. Money.

The Fifth regiment goes to Morro Castle for encampment and Colonel Hood's Second regiment of immunes will garrison the city.

The Spanish trans-Atlantic steamship Isla de Luzon sailed for Spain this afternoon with 2,070 Spanish prisoners on board in charge of General Bustamente.

Seven thousand others remain here, of whom one thousand are in the hospital.

Four transports are in the harbor to carry the remainder home, and will sail this week, taking also Generals Linares, Leon and Toral. They will probably leave on Wednesday or Thursday.

ROUGH RIDERS LAND AT MONTAUK.

Gen. Wheeler and Col. Roosevelt Receive a Hearty Welcome.

Camp Wikoff, Aug. 16.--Colonel Theodore Roosevelt and the First volunteer cavalry, that arrived aboard the transport Miami, were landed Monday afternoon and are now in quarters. Colonel Rosevelt and General Joseph Wheeler, who was also aboard, will be sent with the troops to the detention camp, where they will be kept in close quarantine for from three to five days, the time depending upon the condition of all.

Colonel Roosevelt and General Wheeler will not be permitted to speak with anyone from shore save through the guard line. It was announced that they and most of the officers on board were well and strong. The Miami troops were also landed. There were several troops of Colonel Roosevelt's rtgiment aboard. Thirty-eight of the St. Louis's sick were landed at eleven o'clock in the morning, suffering from malarial fever and kindred diseases. They were taken in ambulances to the detention hospital. Somt of them were Seventy-first men, whose names could not be learned. Colonel Downs is on board the St. Louis with the detachment of the Seventy-first and is reported well.

The Miami landed at the lower dock at half past eleven o'clock. After half an hour's work she was made fast to the pier. The men, Rough Riders and Third United States cavalrymen, stood between decks. Flags were flying from the deck house, where Colonel Roosevelt and General Wheeler stood.

When the gang plank was let down, Colonel Roosevelt, followed by General Wheeler, stepped down, and was met by Colonel Hecker, who shook hands with him heartily. The dock had been cleared of spectators. There were several hundred persons gathered back of the picket line and three cheers were given for both the colonel and the general. Colonel Roosevelt looked well and said he felt so. He approached the picket line and spoke a few words to the reporters. When he was asked to say something about his proposed candidacy for the governorship of New York, he laughed heartily. "I will tell you all the story of the regiment later," he said, "but I have nothing to say about politics--nothing at all," and he laughed again. He said the wound he received in action was a slight one and had entirely healed. A second attempt to have Colonel Roosevelt speak on the political situation drew only another laugh from him.

The Rough Riders were marched on shore in regular formation by troops, their colors stained and faded and their regimental band playing. They looked ill; many of them could hardly walk. Troops C and E were the first off. They were given cheer after cheer and acknowledged the ovation gallantly.

The transport St. Paul arrived at 8.45 o'clock yesteeday morning and is lying at anchor threr miles off shore. On board the St. Paul were a part of the Seventy-first regiment and the Second regiment of United States infantry.

WILL USE SPANISH MONEY.

Congress Must Decide What Kind of Coin Will Be Used in Cuba.

Washington, Aug. 16.--"We will be compelled to await the reassembling of Congress," said Secretary Gage yesterday, "before determining anything definitely in regard to the money to be used in Cuba and Porto Rico.

Meanwhile Spanish money will be the current coin until some legislation can be taken by Congress in the matter. Various plans and suggestions have been made to the president and treasury department in regard to this matter, but none of them can be adopted until the law is changed to meet the changed conditions now existing in Cuba and Porto Rico.

A recommendation on the subject will be sent to Congress as speedily as possible, but until some action is taken by that body American money will naturally be at a premium in Porto Rico and Cuba.

Eight Spanish Vessels Sunk at Cardenas.

Key West, Fla., Aug. 16.--Among the vessels which arrived last night from the Cuban coast are the torpedo boats McKee and Cushing, both from Cardenas, having received word that the blockade had been raised.

They report having destroyed eight Spanish vessels at Cardenas last Sunday.

These small boats had been engaged in carrying supplies to the Spaniards between Cardenas and Santa Clara. That traffic is now stopped.

No attempt was made by the shore batteries to protect the vessels from destruction by the torpedo boats.

Several small Spanish gunboats were seen to get up steam within the harbor of Cardenas, but they refused to come out or make a demonstration.

The McKee captured the schooner Flora off Cardenas, but released her, as there was no evidence to shaw that she had broken the blockade.

The Cushing reports that she met the schooner Dellie, which left here in company with the schooner Adonis several days since with supplies for the insurgents. The Dellie had landed her cargo near Key Francis.

Three Counterfeiters Arrested.

Washington, Aug. 16.—Chief Wilkie of the treasury secret service has received news of the arrest on Saturday last of Charles Vanderbrush, Wallace Davenport and Sanford Dunn, who have been passing counterfeit quarters and half dollars in Newark and other parts of northern New Jersey. The chief sent a subordinate into that neighborhood about two weeks ago, who soon located the counterfeiters' secret headquarters in the hills near Sparta, Sussex county, New Jersey. The detective went up into the hills himself and lived there till he had run his game down and captured them. From all appearances their arrest puts an end to the gang in that part of the country.

State to Buy Camp Black.

Hempstead, L. I., Aug. 16.--It is learned here on good authority that the state of New York is making efforts to buy the land now occupied by the camp for use as a state camp.

George Hubbel, who is the agent for the heirs of A. T. Stewart, who own the property, said that he hoped to dispose of the land to the state It is learned that General Tillinghast is in favor of the purchase.

Camping Places for the Troops.

Depend upon it that New Jerseymen are always equal to the occasion in either peace or war. Our State troops and naval reserve men were among the first to respond to the call of the country, and now that the dove of peace once more hovers over the land and the Washington authorities are seeking healthy camping grounds for the soldiers to bivouac until they can recuperate or their services are no longer required, the State offers several desirable sights. Governor Voorhees of New Jersey has informed the Quartermaster's Department, that he would permit the Government to use the New Jersey State camp at Sea Girt, free of cost. The camp at Sea Girt is considered an excellent one. It has a healthful sight and good accommodation for 4,000 men.

The people of Mount Holly have also come to the front with a patriotic offer to help the War Department out of its present embarrassment. They say that the Government can have the use of the large fair grounds in that place for the sick and wounded soldiers coming from Cuba.

The grounds comprise thirty acres of land with excellent water facilities, drainage, shade and splendid buildings, with accommodations for at least 6,000 patients, on one of the highest points of southern New Jersey, commanding a beautiful view of the adjacent country.

The grounds and buildings have not been used for the last two years, and the people of Mount Holly say they would welcome the brave soldier boys to their town.

Sound Criticism of Sewell.

Countless incidents occur in the everyday life of newspaper men to aggravate them, but none more so than the existence of the individual who rails at newspapers as insiduous influences in a community and yet whenever they have a grievance against the public their first thought of a way to vent it is through the public press. It seems that Senator Sewell is one of these men, and The Sunday Call, of Newark, gives this blast to the great Jersey Republican boss:

In a recent interview in a newspaper, Senator Sewell began his statement in a way he almost invariably uses—by condemning all newspapers. Like other political and railroad bosses, the Senator has a cordial hatred for newspapers, and like the rest, too, he sends for a newspaper man every time he wants to make any sort of a public declaration. It would be only fair in the newspaper interviewers to get even with him by refusing to publish his discussions, leaving him to the opportunities which his eloquence in the Senate afford him; but really his interviews are generally interesting, although one may not agree with a word he says. Still he ought not to make faces at the horse that comes to him over the stream.

Jersey Popular With Presidents.

New Jersey seems to be a favorite spot for Presidents of the United States. When Mr. Harrison was in the White House he cast great renown about Cape May by making his summer residence at that place, then Grover Cleveland sought a residential elysium in Princeton and now McKinley comes along to Lake Hopatcong. If the Garden State can't get one of its citizens into the White House it certainly succeeds in getting the White House occupants to New Jersey, all of which is very gratifying.

WHAT THE SHEARS FIND.

Editorial Comment From Other Papers of Interest in Plainfield.

Somebody is quoted in some paper as favoring former Senator William J. Keys for Governor. Democrats had better drop such talk. The Somerset farmer hasn't a ghost of a chance for Governor—but for Congress—well, that's another matter.—Newark Town Talk.

The offer of John Kean, of Elizabeth, to give $250,000 for the right to build and operate a trolley road between Elizabeth and Plainfield, is the first admission of a capitalist, in the history of electric railway operations in this State, of the value of such franchises, and it is to the credit of Mr. Kean that he has made such an offer in the face of the opposition or objection of all trolley road speculators. It is to be hoped that municipal authorities will recognize the new departure and profit by it.—Orange Journal.

Harmony in the Democratic ranks, with good candidates for office, perhaps, would mean the election of a Governor, a Legislature and four Congressmen of their political faith. If party lines were drawn now as they were six or eight years ago, that result would be likely. All depends upon the Democrats themselves as to whether their party is to be returned to power or buried in obscurity, as it has been during the last four or five years in New Jersey.—Plainfield Press.

What reason is there for a change on the part of the Democrats who have been protesting at the polls for the last five years against the corrupt, stupid and reckless "leaders" who led the party straight to disaster and recked not so long as private ends were served? It would be inconsistent, illogical and self-stultifying for those thinking and intelligent voters to surrender their position now and take service under the black flag of the Coal Combine, Race-track and Senate Conspiracy pirates.—Tribune.

After missing eggs day after day, Farmer Job Latham, living two miles north of Trenton, placed a number of china eggs and one of chalk in the nests of his hens. Next morning he discovered a seven-foot long black snake writhing in agony in the hennery with the chalk egg fastened in its jaws and the china substitutes making big lumbs in its interior. He killed the snake.

Under the weight of nearly a hundred summers, Alfred Bonnell, of 23 Manning avenue, still remains hale and active. Last June he celebrated his ninety-third birthday and was able to take an active part in the celebration. If you should happen to pass his home any afternoon you would hear the steady rap of the hammer or the harsh shriek of the saw. Mr. Bonnell is a millwright by trade and, when in his prime, was able to equip a saw mill or grist mill. He has not, however, with his increasing years, forgotten how to use his tools. He now passes a portion of each day in making a road sulkey in a little carpenter shop he has in the rear of his home.

Just why a New York business man who resides in Plainfield should prefer to have his business address remain in cognito among his neighbors is one of the peculiarities of human nature which we have never yet been able to solve. But it is a fact that very few New York business men will allow their New York addresses to be known in Plainfield. No better evidence of that is needed than the experience of the canvassers for the new directory which the Wand Company intend to publish. It was intended to make a special feature of the new directory of the business address of the New York business men. Such a departure would "fill a long-felt want"—if it was a success. But according to the stories told by the canvassers the commuter regards the address of his New York location as a monster secret, and in a great many families it is utterly impossible to get the required information

THEATRICAL.

Current Dramatic Attractions That Plainfielders Can Witness.

One of the most realistic fire scenes ever presented on the stage is witnessed in "When London Sleeps," which will be seen at Stillman Music Hall Wednesday evening, the 17th inst. The heroine, Queenie Carruthers, known as "The White Queen of the Slack Wire," a former circus performer, has taken refuge with a little child in an isolated building. The villain, bent on their destruction, sets fire to the house after securely barring the doors and windows. When almost suffocated the brave girl climbs to an attic window by means of an old wardrobe and high-backed chair. After lifting the child to a place of safety she shatters the glass and makes her escape by walking a telephone wire to an opposite roof on the other side of the stage, carrying the child on her back. This is only one of the sensational scenes in "When London Sleeps."

As long as men have a weakness for widows the entertainment provided by "The Real Widow Brown," A. Q. Scammon's latest theatrical offering, will draw. It will be presented at Stillman Music Hall Friday night, the 19th inst. It possesses all the merits required of a successful farce-comedy. Amusing in plot and situation, it is ably interpreted by a company of artistic comedians and comediennes, who also incidentally provide specialties in the way of singing and dancing, which adds to the hilarity occasioned by the comedy itself. A season's success attests its sterling qualities as a mirth provoker.

"Black Patti," and her fifty troubators will doubtless receive a cordial reception in this city. They are to appear at Music Hall Wednesday of next week. The reputation of this great singer and the capital company which Messrs. Voelckel and Nolan have surrounded her with, cannot fail to arouse public interest for the performance here. The performance is said to be irresistibly attractive, and it is a rare treat to hear such grand operatic ensemble singing as afforded by this magnificent organization.

WESTFIELD.

(Special Correspondence of The Press.)

Westfield, August 16.—William Holz has given the contract for the carpenter work on his new hotel which is to be 45 by 46 feet and three stories high to E. C. Winters. The mason work will be done by C H. French.

The regular monthly meeting of the Westfield Fire Department will be held this evening when it is expected the chief will give an order for three hundred feet of new hose to replace the one that was cut by unknown parties during the excitement some time ago when a fire-bug attempted to burn down the whole town.

At the last meeting of Central Council, Jr. O. U. A. M., it was voted to make a donation to the Red Cross Society and it was also decided to take up the "chain" which had been sent here. After the members of the order have contributed the chain will be sent to the Daughters of Liberty.

Tomorrow evening the Westfield Lodge of Odd Fellows will install several officers, the work being done by P. D. D. Stamets. After the installation there will be refreshments served. All members of the order are invited to be present.

LINCOLN.

(Special Correspondence of The Press.)

Lincoln, August 16—The meeting held last Saturday in Harris' lane schoolhouse, in regard to having the taxpayers donate sufficient land to make the avenue a three-rod driveway, ended in a fizzle. Those who were in favor of the movement had neglected to have a survey made, and consequently were unprepared to state just how much land would be required from each owner. The opposition were prepared with a strong argument for the purchase of the additional land, but the first bomb thrown into the camp made the prime-movers decamp like Spaniards. The meeting then adjourned sine die.

Mayor S. D. Drake has just closed a deal with several companies which have consolidated to erect a large factory here for the manufacture of knives and scissors, and will employ at the beginning about 150 hands. It is expected the plant will be in operation before cold weather sets in.

WOMEN PUBLISHERS.

A REMARKABLE DAILY NEWSPAPER HAS APPEARED IN PARIS.

La Fronde Is Managed and Made by Feminine Brains—Mme. Marguerite Durand the Head of the Project—Celebrated People on Her Staff.

The latest development of "feminisme"—a word having no exact equivalent in English, but which means the assertion in a natural, unaggressive way of feminine independence—takes practical shape in the appearance of a Parisian daily newspaper entitled Lo Fronde, which is edited by women for women. Not a solitary male being is employed on La Fronde in any capacity whatever. The office "boys" and "printer's devils" are active young maidens, smartly attired in simple dresses and coquettish aprons. The "pressmen," machinists, compositors, telegraphers, photographers, lithographers, proofreaders, clerks, advertising agents, delivery and circulation agents, the "foreman" of the pressroom, the "foreman" of the composingroom, reporters, artists, foreign correspondents, dramatic, musical, and literary critics, society writers, medical writers, scientific writers, fashion writers, cookery writers, novelette writers, leader writers, the day editor, the city editor, the financial editor, the night editor, the business manager, and the editor-in-chief are women, one and all of them, and as in Paris all the newspaper stands are kept by women, it may fairly be said that La Fronde is even sold by women.

To realize the importance of the present movement it should be remembered that the women of France have hitherto refrained from joining together in any organized association to attain by steady, systematic perseverance the degree of freedom enjoyed by their English-speaking sisters. There has been plenty of individual energy and disconnected effort—a great deal of guerilla warfare—but this is the first time that feminisme has been marshaled and united under one banner, with one common object in view. This centralization is due to Mme. Marguerite Durand de Valfere, who, at the Women's congress at Brussels, was made a high commissioner, intrusted with the task of collecting and classifying the most urgent needs of modern woman, and bringing them in the most effective manner before the proper authorities.

As can readily be imagined, the step from these duties to the founding of a newspaper was a very natural one. Mme. Marguerite Durand has been selected by her countrywomen as the editor-in-chief and manager of La Fronde. Belonging to no pronounced sect or faction, and having no entangling alliances of a political character, she was able to group about her women of undoubted talent, but whose special fads or fancies might otherwise have kept them apart.

Mme. Marguerite Durand, who has gathered together this brilliant staff of writers, is one of the most charming and intellectual women in Paris. There is nothing about her suggestive of the "blue stocking" or of the popular conception of the "new woman." She is essentially feminine in all her ideas and tastes. When quite a young girl Mlle. Marguerite Durand entered the Paris conservatory, and after three years' hard study was graduated from the dramatic department with a first prize. She received an engagement at the Theatre Francais, where she made a series of debuts in the classic and modern repertoires with marked success, and M. Pailleron selected her for an important role in "Le Monde ou l'on s'ennuie." Mlle. Marguerite Durand was regarded as one of the most promising of the younger artists of the Maison de Moliere. She is remarkably pretty and graceful, and her sylphlike figure, her fair hair, and sparkling, light-blue eyes were greatly admired. Owing to a sudden caprice she abandoned the stage. Although still young enough to resume her theatrical career, she prefers to devote her life to the feministe movement, and it is with intense earnestness that she is now pursuing her duties as founder and editor-in-chief of La Fronde to which she has been called by her colleagues.

In the course of an interesting conversation with the writer Mme. Marguerite Durand said:

"I hope that the present movement will not be misunderstood in America. It is not at all a revolution, as some people seem to suppose, but an evolution, which we are resolved to carry out with untiring perseverance and with that ceaseless vigilance which can be most effectively insured by a daily newspaper. It is by combined action that we shall succeed. French women have now attained an intellectual position far in advance of the degree of independence accorded them by law and custom. Public opinion is already alive to this; but the Legislature in France, as in most other countries is essentially an automatic instrument, and, like an eight-day clock, has to be wound up otherwise it comes to a standstill. This winding up will be done by La Fronde whenever necessary and the Senators and Deputies will not be allowed to forget that the women of France have their eyes upon them and expect them to act. We are, however, not going to be aggressive in any way, but, of course if we are attacked then La Fronde may be implicitly relied to 'talk back,' to use an American expression, and will do so most vigorously."—Cor. New York Tribune.

THE WOMAN'S WORLD

The Cult of Unconventionality.

The careful cult of unconventionality began among the smart set in London some years ago, and it has been taken up and propagated by the smart set here. The most superficial signs of it are the most harmless. To wear bicycle clothes at formal dinner parties, to drive about Newport without a hat, to smoke in a lady's drawing room, to garnish one's speech at all times with blackguard slang, to describe everything, from the weather to a social function, as "rotten"—these are the silly, though none the less reprehensible signs of the truly unconventional person. A far more serious phase of it is seen in the change that has been introduced in the sphere of social intercourse between the sexes.

The finest of all the old conventions was that which imposed upon a man and upon a woman a certain reticence with regard to various themes and various facts of life. This reticence sprang from the respect which every man was supposed to feel for every woman and from the respect which every woman was supposed to cherish for herself. It was a part of the slight but very real barrier which experience had shown to be essential to protect the woman, and to prevent a brutalizing tendency in the man. And it is the undermining of this convention that is to-day a cause for a very serious reprehension.—New York Post.

The German Emperor's Fad.

The kaiser has issued the most amazing sartorial decree to his officers, and despair has seized upon hapless lieutenants with limited incomes. For the fiat has gone forth that all officers are henceforth—or until it shall please the emperor to say otherwise—to wear surcoats of palest gray, lined with satin to match. The coats are beautiful to look upon, but they are ruinously delicate and costly. With their moustaches turned around to their noses, a l'Empereur and in their pigeon-breast colored overcoats, the gay officers look like pretty comic opera soldiers.

Clothes have become quite a fad with the German imperial couple. The emperor dresses gorgeously and adopts the most resplendent uniforms on the slightest occasions, while he has further undertaken the supervision of his consort's wardrobe, she in turn demanding that all her ladies shall be dressed elaborately a la mode. Formerly the German empress took very little heed wherewithal she was clothed. She liked tailor made gowns and rich evening dresses, but paid little attention to details. Now all is changed. The emperor will have his empress in the height of fashion, and, it is said—but rumor is not always reliable in matters concerning the kaiser—that he designs many of her costumes himself.—Philadelphia Ledger.

How to Lacquer Brass.

"If your brass bedstead tarnishes," said a dealer in beds and bedding, "you can send it to a repair shop and have it newly lacquered for anywhere from $2.50 to $5. It will look as well as new and last as long."

He said it in all gravity, but there was a sort of expression in his eye which suggested a hidden meaning and roused curiosity.

"How do they do it?"

"Why should I tell you a trade secret?" he replied. "But, after all, this is hardly a trade secret. It is common to so many trades; all those which use brass fittings, in fact. The gas fitter and the picture frame maker, as well as the furniture man, the dealer in crates, the candle stick maker as well, all make use of it. Nearly all brass work, except that on ship board, is lacquered to prevent corrosion and avoid the labor of frequent polishing. The lacquer is simply gum shellac dissolved in alcohol. This makes a thin varnish, which is applied with a small paint brush. Ten cents' worth of materials will lacquer your brass bedstead, and an ordinary workman will do the job inside of an hour at a total cost of from 35 to 60 cents."

A Novel Employment.

Miss Anna Estell Wilson of New York has found a decidedly novel occupation. She prepares music for invalids. She says that although the healing power of music is as yet dimly perceived, nevertheless physicians acknowledge that its proper use produces high beneficial results. Under the influence of certain kinds of music the nerve cells, if depleted or too relaxed, may be stimulated to more vigorous action. Music of an opposite character will diminish too great nervous activity and tend to produce a condition of peace and restfulness. Several physicians commend Miss Wilson's system. She does not say anything about how many different diseases of the nerves one piano in a flat house is capable of producing in a very short time.—New York Sun.

Form for a Widow's Card.

The question of the proper form for a widows card is one often discussed. Authorities on card etiquette usually concede that a widow may retain her husband's name upon her cards if she desires, though the maiden name is more generally used. If the widow has a married son of the same name she may add senior, after her name, if she uses her husband's. The English custom of designating the widow as "dowager" is one that has manifest advantages.

A WOMAN BOOMER.

SHE ATTRACTS EMIGRANTS AND CAPITAL TO HER STATE.

A Failure at Millinery but a Success in Lecturing for California Railroads—'Tis Said She Can Boom Western Land With More Glibness Than a Book Agent.

California has a novelty in womanhood. She is Mrs. Janet Macdonald, whose business is to go about the country lecturing to attract emigrants and capital to the Pacific coast. It is said that she can boom Western land with more glibness than a book agent can boom a book. Mrs. Macdonald is an excellent speaker, and her lectures describing the natural resources and advantages of California are illustrated with kinetoscope pictures taken directly under her supervision. She owns frankly that she was a failure as a milliner and says she'd rather talk up California than do anything else she ever tried. According to Chicago Tribune, her bread-winning road has not always been so easy to travel as it is since the railroad companies employed her. When asked to talk about her work Mrs. Macdonald said:

"I went to California when I was 12 years old, riding horseback all the way from Council Bluffs with my father, who was captain of the wagon train. We set out on May 1, and arrived in Carson City, where we made our first considerable stop, September 15. Thirty years later I came back, and on a solidly vestibuled train, making the trip entirely across the continent in five days. The railroad follows for a great part of the way the old wagon trail, and as I traveled back I could recognize many landmarks around our old camping spots.

"I began to earn my own living a few months before my twenty-first birthday, a widow with three children to support, and having had the advantage of six months' schooling. When my husband died I realized I must earn my living and raise my children. I knew of but three occupations open to women in my position—sewing, millinery, and keeping a boarding house. I selected millinery. For six months I struggled and made my one failure. I thought then, and I know now, that my friends bought my goods only from sympathy, so of course I did not have heavy sales. I became discouraged, and one day when 'blue' said in the presence of a man friend that I was willing to do anything by which I could earn an honorable living for my children. He said: 'Why don't you canvass for books? You could make money, hands up, for you are just the woman for the place.'

"To make a long story short, I began to canvass for books, and in the first two weeks made $60. So I gave up my millinery store and devoted myself to canvassing. My relatives were horrified, and had I been a leper they could not have avoided me more carefully. That treatment aroused my pride and I worked all the harder. Many a day I have gotten up with the sun, gone out after a light breakfast, and worked until black dark without having time for dinner or lunch. Of course, if I had not possessed an 'iron constitution' I would have died, so I would by all means advise women against such extremes.

"As I traveled about the country it occurred to me that I might make a good thing by writing newspaper letters. So in the morning I would canvass the towns for my books and in the afternoon drive out to different points of interest for my letters. You may imagine how I felt, when, to please my friends, I accepted a position in the mint at $75 a month. After the first month I gave it up and went back to my old profession. How could I live and educate my children on $75 a month after being used to hundreds?

Well, canvassing for books, like many other occupations, became less remunerative as the facilities for travel increased, so in time I got a place to travel in the interest of several of the largest hotels in San Francisco. Then the railroads wanted me, and finally here I am, sent out in the interest of the state itself. Illustrating with kinetoscope pictures is an idea of my own. It impressed me that the best way to make an audience realize the size of our big trees was to show them a team passing through one, or to let them see thirty-six couples dancing on a stump. To make them understand the great amount of work done by a giant harvester the best way was to show its progress from the time it entered the field of growing grain until it left, the grain cut, threshed, sacked, weighed, measured, stamped and piled for shipment.

"It was difficult to get the pictures. The first machine I took out West for the purpose of making the photographs was faulty in some way, and the pictures proved a failure, so I had to come East again and go to the trouble and expense of getting another. You may be sure I had it thoroughly tested before going back. I failed as a milliner, but I am not going to fail as a scientific photographer. I have never, not one single time, worked for smaller wages than a man would have received for the same work. I would never lend my aid to cheapen woman's work."

Recipe for Wretchedness.

If you should wish to be miserable you must think about yourself—about what you want, what you like, what respect people ought to pay to you, and then to you nothing will be pure. You will spoil everything you touch; you will make sin and misery for yourself out of everything which God sends you; you will be as wretched as you choose.—Charles Kingsley.

Lokal-Nachrichten aus der alten Heimath.

Oesterreich.

Wien. Anfangs Mai hat die Generalversammlung der Oesterreichisch-Ungarischen Bank beschlossen, aus Anlaß des Regierungs-Jubiläums des Kaisers wohlthätige Stiftungen zu errichten. Diese wurden nunmehr vom Generalrathe in Vollzug gesetzt. Von dem zu diesem Zwecke gewidmeten Betrag von 500,000 Kronen hat der Generalrath 130,500 Kronen zur Errichtung von Freiplätzen, beziehungsweise Stipendien an Handelsakademien und ähnlichen Lehranstalten bestimmt. Verschiedene Spitäler und Wohlthätigkeitsanstalten erhalten zusammen 369,500 Kronen.

Bozen. Die erste Ersteigung des Ortler in dieser Saison wurde durch ein Wiener Ehepaar Schmidt, welches sich auf der Hochzeitsreise befand, ausgeführt.

Budapest. Gegen die bei dem Komplott gegen das Leben des Kaisers Franz Joseph betheiligten Arbeiter Joseph Muzsik, Ludwig Hartmann und Julius Kovacs wurde die Anklage wegen Hochverraths erhoben. In der Begründung des Beschlusses wird hervorgehoben, daß sich die Angeschuldigten gegen Ende des Jahres 1897 oder im Anfang des Jahres 1898 verbündet hätten zum Zweck der Ermordung des Königs mittelst Dynamits.

Graz. Wegen Duells mit einem bosnischen Offizier war der hiesige Student der Medizin Prem zu drei Monaten Kerker verurtheilt worden. Auf die Berufung des Statsanwalts erhöhte nun das Grazer Obergericht die Strafe auf acht Monate schweren Kerker. Prem, der übrigens bei dem Duell schwer verwundet wurde, ist in die Schweiz geflohen.

Ischl. Hier fand eine Huldigung von Radfahrern für den Kaiser Franz Joseph statt. Einige 100 Radfahrer mit Fackeln und Militärmusik zogen zu der Kaiservilla, wo der Kaiser, der Erzherzog Franz Salvator und die Erzherzogin Marie Valerie sich befanden.

Mürzzuschlag. Auf dem Semmering hat ein Olmützer Liebespaar, der Gerichtssekretär Nedbal und Frau Mathilde Weinstein, Selbstmord begangen.

Salzburg. Bürgerschuldirektor Seidl wurde am Mönchsberg todt aufgefunden. Ob Unglücksfall oder ein Verbrechen vorliegt, ist noch nicht aufgeklärt.

Schweiz.

Bern. Der Chef des Militärdepartements hat im Bundesrath dringend darauf hingewiesen, daß die Schweiz sich werde entschließen müssen, ihre Artillerie vollständig umzugestalten, da diese gegenüber der neuen Schnellfeuerwaffe, mit der umfangreiche Versuche angestellt wurden, an Schußzahl, Tragweite und Trefficherheit weit zurückstehe.—Ein Züricher Tourist ist an einer abschüssigen Stelle des sonst ungefährlichen Gemmenalphorns abgerutscht, fiel 50 Meter tief hinunter, kam aber zum Glück mit unbedeutenden Verletzungen davon.

Glarus. Vor Kurzem wurde die höchste Spitze der Zwölfihörner, das Große Zwölfihorn (2743 Meter), von den Alpinisten K. Frei und P. Wirz erklettert. Es ist dies, so viel im Sernfthal bekannt, die erste Besteigung dieses Felsthurmes gewesen, die durch einen Felsriß über die Südwand ausgeführt wurde. Vereisung und Neuschnee erschwerten die ohnehin schon sehr schwere Kletterei, die wohl nur wenig Nachfolger finden wird.

Basel. Nach offiziellen Nachrichten belief sich die Einwohnerzahl von Basel-Stadt am letzten Juni auf 102,385 Köpfe. Am 1. Januar 1895 zählte die Stadt Basel nur 82,500 Einwohner, hat sich also in 3½ Jahren um fast 20,000 Köpfe vermehrt.

Aargau. Die Sektion Oberaargau des Schweizer Alpenklubs, 150 Mitglieder zählend, hat beschlossen, für die 1879 im Wetterhorngebiet erbaute, 1893 von der Sektion Oberaargau übernommene Dossenhütte, die sehr baufällig geworden ist und den gegenwärtigen Verhältnissen nicht mehr genügt, einen vollständigen Neubau zu erstellen. Die neue Hütte soll solid, wetterfest und praktisch, sowohl für den Aufenthaltsraum mit Kochherd, Wascheinrichtung, Tischen und Bänken, als besonders für die Schlafräume auf's Beste eingerichtet werden. In den Schlafstätten sind für 24 Personen bequeme Einrichtungen getroffen, darunter eine besondere Abtheilung für Damen. Die Erstellungskosten der neuen Hütte belaufen sich auf etwa 5500 Francs.

Neuenburg. Beim Becher-Konkurrenzschießen auf dem eidgenössischen Schützenfest zu Neuenburg siegte glänzend erstmalig die Ordonnanzwaffe über den Stutzen. Der erste Becherschütze schoß mit einem Ordonnanzgewehr in 17 Minuten 10 Sekunden 100 Nummern; es ist dies die höchste bis jetzt erzielte Leistung.

Doan's Kidney Pills are endorsed by Plainfield people.

Read what a citizen says:

Mr. Jos. VanArsdale, Carpenter and Contractor, living at 213 Spooner Ave., says: "For several years I suffered from severe pain in my back, hips and loins, so bad at times that it was almost impossible for me to get about and attend to my work. Any stooping or heavy lifting aggravated it and if I contracted the least cold it always settled in my back and at such times my suffering was something intense. When Doan's Kidney Pills came to my notice I was in pretty bad shape and procuring them from L. W. Randolph's drug store, I had only taken a few doses when I found they were helping me and on completing the treatment I was quite free from pain. I always keep Doan's Kidney Pills on hand so to have a sure remedy close by if the trouble should ever return. I highly recommend Doan's Kidney Pills for aching and lameness in the back and consider them an honest kidney medicine and possessing all the merits claimed for them."

Doan's Kidney Pills are sold for 50c. per box, for sale by all dealers. Mailed on receipt of price by Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, N. Y., sole agents for the U. S.

"I'm going to adopt him," was all the explanation of his presence Donald had given. He was again as unreadable as a mollusk, and Anne could almost believe the scene in the breaker had been of her imagining.

Hours afterward, as she sat in the rainy dusk writing an impassioned account of the day, a faint knock sounded on her door. Donald stood outside, very pale, an unusual eagerness in his manner.

"If you want to see what a mine looks like, Miss Garrick, this will be your only chance. The sheriff and his men have come over with militia, and for the past hour the engines have been going, pumping down air, you know. They think that perhaps Red Evans is hiding there."

"But could he? How could he get down if the cage wasn't working?"

"You see, besides the cage there's an iron bar—a sort of ladder with flat prongs laid upon it, the whole only half a yard wide. This goes down through a separate opening. It's put there as a precaution in case of explosions or injury to the cage, but it's a matter of life and death to use it. A desperate man, however, wouldn't hesitate to take the one chance. The sheriff fancies Red Evans may be clinging to the bar a good way down beyond sight, yet not too far from the air. I don't believe it. It's almost absurd. But they're going down and will take us along.

"All right," said Anne. "But I won't tell Dr. Ericsson. He might be nervous."

Twenty minutes later they were again at the mine. The scene was animated now. Lanterns like the eyes of uncanny animals shot from one point to another in the falling night. A line of soldiers controlled the swell of the mountain, and above the strikers, with their families, sullenly watched. From wooden sheds came the braying of mules. Four men stood near the cage, which resembled a huge brass boiler with a round opening for air at a man's height. The hissing and throbbing of engines and the sound of many voices filled the valley with life.

Anne's fingers were unsteady as she put on the miner's protecting outfit. This was a rubber blouse to her knees and a wide brimmed, glazed hat, a little oil lamp flickering in front just above the brim.

"Ready!" said the sheriff, and the wire rope throbbed.

The cage shot down with tremendous speed. The lamps on the hats flared in the gust through the circular opening in the wall. It was a breathless, anxious descent. Anne closed her eyes and stood like one in a trance until the journey was completed.

When by Donald's side she stepped into the underworld, an overwhelming depression seized her. She had not dreamed how the knowledge of being 1,000 feet beneath the ground she trod so lightly could chill a heart. The rank, moist place smelled of death. She gazed at the jagged ceiling of coal upheld by tremendous tree trunks placed at regular distances and forming a rude aisle, the fungus on props and beams, the sluggish pools in every depression, the empty mule carts and discarded picks. Just where the hat lamps flung their beams there was light, and beyond lay appalling mystery.

"You'd better sit on this knoll." And Donald, circling his lantern over his head, showed her the up hill recesses of a vast worked out chamber. "I'll go with the men down this gangway a bit. We'll not be far away. See, they're looking in the mule carts. I'd like to be on the spot if they get him. I want his face."

"I'll be alone here!" was Anne's inward exclamation. "You won't be long," she said and sat down, apparently calm.

"We're just going down this gangway." And Donald turned away, his fingers tingling to sketch her as she sat there, the light flaring above her eyes.

Ten minutes passed. Anne saw the men entering into the various hewn chambers, plunging their lanterns into clumsy carts, leaping into pits. Her heart seemed to have ceased beating. She found herself waiting for a cry of triumph and fancied the searchers dragging out a struggling, stormy browed figure, the murderer at bay.

Then an unlooked for thing happened. Without warning the moving throng of figures turned a corner, and she was alone in silence save for the dropping of water, in darkness save for the light upon her hat. She seemed to become stone surrounded by an atmosphere of horror.

This paralyzing spell broke, and her blood crept in cold currents around her spine, for up in the black hollow behind her she heard a quick breath, then another, and a piece of coal tinkled down the declivity to her feet. The breathing came closer. It was just behind her now. There was a step, and she knew a horror unnamable stood at her back. She did not turn or move the stiff fingers clasping her knee or flicker an eyelid.

She was roused from the thrall of terror by a sight to haunt her while she lived. A man groveled before her, his supplicating clutch upon her knee. The uncertain flame of her lamp flung blue splashes into the hollows of his face. His red hair was glued to his throat. The red streaked flannel shirt was open to the waist, showing his hairy chest. Mildew and coal black covered him. There was a mortal hunger in his glance. She was gazing at Red Evans and he was praying for his life, but praying was a mild word for the spurting whispers from his gaping mouth as his eyes shot from right to left in fear of the returning hunters.

"Didn't set out for to kill Binkley, as God hears me, miss. No, 'twas fair fight, an he druv me mad. I flung the stone. I didn't believe him dead till he fell back wi' the blood bubblin from him. I been hidin here for two days, starvin on that ladder, 'tween earth an hell, crawled down when the engines begun to work, been lyin on my face up here ever sence. They'll hang me. Don't let 'em. Help me. I've had a hard life eno' 'thout hangin at the end o't. Oh," and the word was a long shudder, "my God, for one chance! I never had noan. One chance—one."

It seemed to Anne as if a great length of time had passed, as if herself and her life were myths, and nothing in all the world was as positive as this man's misery and his claim. She sat motionless with strained, bright eyes.

He had taken another's life, it was clear. She was a newspaper woman, face to face with an important opportunity. If she gave the murderer to his pursuers, The Citizen would have gained a story unshared by its rivals. As a newspaper woman she should make the most of this moment. She hesitated. The man's eyes looked up at her like a famished dog's. As a newspaper woman, yes, but as a woman, no.

She sprang up, fired by the desire to save him. His eyes were terrible as he crouched in the slime at her feet. He had suffered enough.

"Come along," she said, her voice harsh with fear as a man's laugh distantly awakened echoes in the caverns. "They've already searched the mule carts. Climb into this one. They won't look again. Lie down low, so. I'll put my cloak over you. Try to breathe more softly. Hush, they're coming."

Donald hurried toward her first and found her sitting where he had left her.

"Wagner said he'd come back and stay near you," he said hurriedly as he wiped his brow. "I've just found out that he sneaked on, the little beast."

"Did you find any trace of Evans?" she managed to ask.

"No, he's not here. They might have known that. You're shivering. Why, where's your cloak?"

"Say nothing about that," she said in sudden fear, springing up. "Manage to have the others go up first. I'll explain after. They must go up first. Leave me here."

The cage had been very crowded coming down, and when every worked out recess had been searched the men were glad to let the newspaper people wait for a second trip.

"Well, that's settled," Anne heard a man say, his throaty tones inflated with satisfaction. "He ain't in the mine, he ain't on the ladder, and d—n him wherever he is."

The cage leaped beyond her sight. Donald, with the ineffectual light making big shadows leap around him, came down the alley and stood before her. He knew some disclosure was trembling on her lips.

"We're alone now," he said. "You look awful. Take a little."

He held out a flask of whisky, and Anne greedily swallowed a mouthful. It revived her and made her brave again. She listened to the creaking of the wire ropes, but instead of fear her eyes flashed with determination.

"I'm going to trust you, Donald Sefain," she said slowly, rising and touching his arm. "Yes, I'm going to trust you. I believe in your pity and your honor."

His eyes answered her; he held his breath.

"I know where Red Evans is," she said. "He's near us, hidden under my cloak. He begged his life—oh, how he begged it—and I couldn't give him up. He prayed for one chance. I'll give it to him. Will you?"

Anne pressed her hands upon his shoulders, the divinity of a mediator in her eyes.

A flood of feeling trickled over Donald's heart, something never felt before—a pain, an ecstasy, a fire loosening some callous growth and seeming by a miracle to turn it to sunshine within him.

"Yes, yes," he said, the perplexing joy still controlling him. "What can we do?"

"There's only one way Red Evans can escape," she continued feverishly. "I've money with me. I'll give it to him. But that doesn't help matters while he's hidden here. The only way he can leave the mine unquestioned is by putting on your blouse and hat and taking your place when I go up. Once he's freed, I'll return for you. This is my plan—to pretend I lost some money and come back with these things I wear secreted under my own cloak for you, to slip them to you, have you put them on, step out unnoticed and join the searchers for the money. It will be easy enough. All men look alike in these things, and with the collar up and one's face turned away they make a good disguise. But should there be any comment you'd have to insist that you came down with me the second time. Are you willing? Will you risk it? I promise to return for you."

In answer Donald took off the long blouse and hat and saw Anne's eyes darken with gratitude. She pointed to the mule cart.

"He's there, and you'll need to give him some whisky; he's so weak."

After putting out the light upon his hat, which had begun to flicker, Donald stepped across an oozing stream and leaned over the cart.

"Evans! Evans! Look up, man! Here's your chance. This hat and blouse"— He broke off abruptly. "Why doesn't he answer?"

He bent nearer and touched the head and face of the hidden man.

"Oh, if he's fainted how can we save him? There isn't a moment," whispered Anne in a frenzy of fear.

Donald climbed into the mule cart and plunged down.

"He's dead!"

The words rang out. The echoes carried them and played with them in a ghastly way. No need of plans, sacrifice, danger, freedom and the hangman were alike impossible and indifferent to Red Evans now.

Anne saw Donald's face lifted, touched by the awe always following the wake of the great mystery, but only for a few seconds before her lamp went out with a long leap, as if protesting against some new, uncanny presence, and they were in darkness with the dead.

Anne sank down, her folded arms resting against a wet wall. Everything seemed to slip into a mist; she felt numbed, vanquished, when, like a promise of good, Donald's groping hand sought hers and held it firmly. They did not speak. It was a burden even to think of the horrors surrounding them, the masses of coal not far above their heads creaking like a lazy monster settling himself, the whimpering of flying rats and the knowledge that beside them lay a dead man, a look of affright on his face.

After awhile it became evident that something delayed the return of the cage. Hours seemed to crawl by as they sat there, hand in hand, scarcely speaking until it became imperative to talk and let sound trouble the black pall dividing and overhanging them.

Then something happened that seemed to Anne beyond belief. Donald in hesitating tones began speaking of himself. To see the lips of the sphinx melt into a smile could scarcely have been more astounding to her. She listened, understanding how the sights and sounds of that terrible day and the intimate hand clasp in the blackness had aroused the inner self he so consistently silenced.

Her heart smarted for him as she heard the halting story of his childhood. She could see him left orphaned, under an unfriendly roof, no natural love excusing his faults, loneliness eating into him. Loneliness! It was the word on which his life had reared its twisted structure.

In words that burned he sketched the difference between David's place and his in John Temple's house—David, secretly loved by him always and bitterly envied, David the figure in the white light which he might adore, but never follow. He told her how manhood came and the bitter knowledge of all. He was despised, superfluous, and the determination took root to fulfill the promise of his dark origin to sink to the level considered fitting.

A stronger nature would have doggedly risen no doubt. But the other was easy, natural and had not been without joy. The poor, the unhappy like himself had understood and loved him. For the rest he had grown content to tear principles to rags, revel in the mud, live for the moment and go with flags flying to ruin and death.

"Why didn't you try to do well?" Anne asked urgently.

"I was afraid," he said in a lifeless tone. "I thought it wouldn't do for me with the inherited tendencies of which I was so constantly reminded. Besides, no one cared. That was it. It's all well enough to talk of doing right, but when your instinct leads you to the wrong and there's not a soul on earth to care a pin if you're fished out of the river, a boy—at least most boys—would get into an easy stride on the wrong road."

"No, you needn't have gone," she said passionately.

"I'm not trying to excuse myself."

"But you're not hopeless, are you?"

"I don't know," he said slowly. "I ought to be. I have been. But tonight somehow I wish I could begin over again."

He heard a sob. All Anne had felt during the trying day and the pathos of this confidence had touched her beyond endurance. She wept unrestrainedly from a full heart. She could not see Donald's eyes nor how they grew intent and unbelieving. It seemed impossible that he should hear a woman's sobs for him, tears for him. They were terrible and racked him, but they were sweet too.

Before he could fully accept the wonderful occurrence as true and before Anne could control herself to speak the grating of the wire ropes in the shaft cautiously commenced.

A light sprang into Donald's face, and despite the opposing forces tearing him like teeth he pressed her hand and said in a whisper that was slow and difficult:

"If I do make anything of myself, if I ever do, it won't be because it's right nor for society, nor even for shame of what I am, but for you."

When they entered the cage, Anne's tear swollen face needed no explanation. To have been kept in a mine for an hour without a light because part of the machinery had slipped its groove and to have chanced upon Red Evans dead was enough to unnerve any woman.

Only Anne and Donald ever knew the truth of that hour. They stepped into the night and saw the moon filling the place with phosphoric light, making a glory of the drenched earth. More marvelous than this white atmosphere of peace after the stormy day was the friendship which had put forth sudden flower in silence and night.

CHAPTER VIII.

By the middle of December even the most careless in the office of The Citizen had commented upon the change in Donald Sefain. He was no longer the voluntary recluse, a man parading his vices, eager to be judged by them alone. He had learned to believe in his possibilities. His fettered nature, feeding on all that was rotten, had risen like a dazed, hungry thing following an instinct for better food and freedom. Ambition, a rebellious prisoner always, had revived in him after he had striven to crucify it. It called to him in the long nights, in his lonely walks, and its voice was somehow Anne's:

"What have you done with your life?"

The assertion of his best instincts had left their marks upon the outer man. His antagonism and gloom had almost vanished; so had his untidiness and air of general dissoluteness. He carried himself better, his clothes were better, and they were worn as if he respected them and himself.

As his habits mended and his work steadily improved David Temple treated him as a worker whom he prized. A closer degree of intimacy between the two men seemed impossible. They saw each other seldom, save in the office. But Anne was the friend of both.

David visited her less often than in the summer, his engagements were so many, but every hour he could spare was spent in her pretty, out of the way rooms. He let the social mask fall when with her as with no one else. Any one seeing him pacing up and down her room, a privileged cigarette between his fingers, as he indulged in brilliant nonsense, laughing like a boy when he pulled her pet theories to bits as if he blew away loose rose petals, would scarcely have known him.

Anne loved these hours with him, and her happiness went with her, absorbing her thoughts to the detriment of the art so dear to her. The pen lay dry upon the sheets of her novel. She no longer struggled against the passionate effacement of self in another's being. She did not torment her heart by looking for a growing love in David's eyes. She was content to drift. It was evident to all he was very fond of her. He sought her familiarly. She knew nothing of his life beyond the small horizon of her own, and, feeling an anticipative joy which seemed to melt her future with his, she was content.

Dr. Ericsson had much to engross him and keep him away. The wild winter weather had brought the usual illnesses, and the Waverly place house was in chaos, preparing for the arrival of his wife and daughter after an absence of eight years.

Anne had plenty of leisure, and she gave much of it to Donald Sefain. Between them they made some of those winter nights idyls of joy for little Joe Evans. He was very ill. Giving way to rest after inured hardship seemed like giving way to grief, and his weak body collapsed.

He was in Donald's home, a trio of small rooms in a street a short distance from The Citizen. They were cheap apartments, but hopefully clean, presided over by a "lone" woman, Mrs. Mulligan, who lived on the floor beneath.

Anne often went home with Donald in the quick winter dusks, and, stepping from the hall into the firelight, she would feel as if summer had come across the snow and kissed her. The room was always sweet smelling from a bunch of flowers, the kettle always singing, the lamp shaded.

"Ah, Joe, dear, if yez had seen me whin I was young!" she had surprised Mrs. Mulligan saying once as she knitted beside the pillowed chair where Joe reclined, pale from the languor of unhealthy sleep. "There was a sight for ye! The girls of today with their crotched in bodies and white cheeks stuck to the bone—what are they? Ah, avick, girls were different in moy toime! Why, I shtud 14 stone, weighed in me stockings. Me hair shtud out loike eaves on both soides of me head, alanna, 'twas so thick. As fer me cheeks," she added in climactic triumph, "they shtuck out loike apples and were that red ye cud bleed them with a shtraw."

On nights like these Donald's nature seemed to expand and exult. He surprised Anne by his humor, his mocking grace as host, his boyish play with Joe, who adored him. Sometimes when he read aloud after dinner and Mrs. Mulligan sat motionless as a sphinx save for the darting needles, Anne knelt on the floor, her arms around the boy. His feverish mouth would creep close to her ear and he would tell her how he loved Mr. Sefain and how he was never to go back to the mines, never. Anne would assure him of this while holding him to her and kissing him in a little storm of love, and then her eyes would rove over him, his hands with no more substance than claws, dry and hot, his hungry eyes seeming to hold life like a picture before them in an endeavor to see all quickly before the short day ended.

Bending over the decaying fire, he had played for them.

It was Donald who showed Anne some of the singular sides of the city's life.

During this season of pure frost when the electric wires spanning the city were turned into glacial ribbons and the noise of traffic on the frozen ground was like the clamor from brass, she often found herself treading the narrow, uphill streets in the lower quarter of the city to see some marvelous "find" of his.

Once it was an old Russian musician, a political exile. The room they found him in was wretched, but in a corner stood a samovar of copper fit for a prince's table. This and the Amati on the old man's knee were the only visible relics of a sumptuous past. Bending over the decaying fire, he had played for them wild and terrible music, which awoke strange fancies. It seemed to whisper of a spirit haunting a familiar but empty house, where moonlight streamed through the bare windows; it shrieked of shipwreck, mumbled of witches dancing in a haggard dawn, prayed for life while the block and the headsman waited. The unsyllabled desolation of the exile's life, it had haunted her for days.

Although working in the office of a world known newspaper, she had never seen the wonders of the mechanism used in its construction until one midnight Donald took her down to the pressroom. There was a weighty but soundless vibration as she went down the stone stairs, but when the iron door was pushed back the noise was so tremendous it leaped out like a bar and struck her. A gust of air accompanied it which seemed to suck her down the ladderlike stairway against her will until, dazzled and bewildered, she stood on a little bridge overlooking a plateau of steel that leaped and shivered in gigantic sockets. Bare chested men like sweating pygmies stood between the big machines, and above them, a monster of many jaws, the roaring presses snapped up the paper. On the first page there was a portrait of a murderer, and this was repeated all over the gaslit space. On every side the sinister visage with eyes turned obliquely toward her came riding into view, and the glittering clamps seized it, seemed to crush it furiously until, like the stone Sisyphus, rolled, it appeared again, and the task was incessantly continued.

It was Donald who showed her the underground restaurants where the newspaper "backs" plunged in the early morning hours for coffee that was like a fluid blessing. She went with him to all sorts of queer and storied nooks. Once they had tea in a place known only to a few privileged scribblers. This was in a sort of cul de sac, a swinging lamp lighting the way up the long alley. Separated from the noise of the town and waited upon by a genial French host and his wife, they had seemed in Paris, for the secretive niche in the crowded street might have strayed from one of Hugo's stories and settled, out of countenance, in a commercial atmosphere.

Together they went to well known studios where all was harmony and beauty—idols sombrously contemplative, mediæval windows, wood carving from India and rugs from Damascus. She had watched the last touches put to a landscape, had seen a sculptor make lips of clay smile as if he had called life there.

Donald had taken her behind the scenes of a theater, and she had watched the progress of a play from the wings, had gazed with critical eyes and a sense of illusions lost at the mechanism of what had so often enchanted her—exits, entrances, cues and prompter's book.

And they had read much together—the exquisite prose of Huysmans and Mallarme, Kipling's crushing phrases painting the arid glitter of India, "Tess," bare armed and fawn eyed, loving tragically in a setting of clover and dawn mists; the fatalism of the "Rubaiyat" and the wholesome cynicism of Thackeray.

They shared all together as comrades and confidants. The boy in Donald and the piquant schoolgirl only masked in the woman clasped hands and laughed.

A Quick-Witted Waitress.

A woman in a restaurant concluded to try an order of ice cream pudding at 5c. a plate. After it had been served she looked it over carefully, and calling the waitress back, said:

"Do you call this ice cream pudding?"

"Yessum, and it's very nice, too."

"But where is the ice cream?"

"Oh, that's only the name given that peculiar make of pudding.

"It seems to me that you ought to give ice cream with it as long as you call it ice cream pudding."

"We don't give cottages with cottage pudding," quickly replied the witty waitress, which threw the middle-aged woman into a convulsion of laughter, and she ordered a second plate.—Boston Herald.

New Zealand's Women Inspectors.

The New-Zealand Government has drafted a bill for the appointment of "discreet women" as inspectors, with extensive powers to stop and interrogate the girl who is out at a late hour. They are also authorized to escort her home, or, if the late girl is a very hard case, to take her to an establishment specially provided, and leave her in charge of the matron, pending inquiry.

A STREAM OF GOLD.

RUNS YEARLY THROUGH THE CHANNELS OF THE PENSION OFFICE.

The Klondike of Old Soldiers—Huge Proportions of a Business That is Still Growing—One of the Most Efficient Employes is Colored.

The Pension Office at Washington is the biggest brick building of the world, says Frank G. Carpenter, in a letter to the Washington Star. I doubt if there has ever been a building made of brick which surpassed it in size, although the baths of Diocletian, the ruins of which stand by the Via Nazionale, in Rome, were a mile in circumference. This building covers only two acres, but it is three stories high and there is a big attic up under its glass roof. It has a court in its center bigger than any barn yard you have ever seen, and the huge brick pillars which rise from floor to roof each contain enough brick to build three good-sized houses.

Both court and offices are filled with papers. There are hundreds of millions of pages of writing packed away here. There are enough files in the cases of the Pension Bureau court to carpet a county, and the old documents among its records, if they could be pasted together, in a single strip, would be long enough to cover a wagon road reaching clear around the world. The Pension Office deals in big figures. Take the mail, for instance. It was to this division the commissioner, Henry Clay Evans, and I first went. The commissioner receives 20,000 pieces of mail a day, or more than 7,000,000 pieces every year. He gets more than 5,000,000 letters in a year. If you could paste the answers to his mail together in one single strip it would make a ribbon of white letter paper covered with typewriting reaching from New York to Chicago. If he had to pay his postage at the rate of two cents per letter his stamp bill would amount to $100,000 a year, and when you figure up the labor and brains you would have a number of life times embodied in that one item. It takes forty-three clerks to handle this mail. There is one corps of men who do nothing but open letters. Another stamps the date of receipt upon them, and a third reads the letters and sends them to the proper divisions for answer. From four to eight thousand letters are answered every day, and the correspondence increases from year to year.

Every one of these letters has a money end to it. The Pension Office is the Klondike of the old soldier, and not a few men and women who are not old soldiers seek to pan gold out of the sands of its rivers. Last year the amount of money distributed was more than $140,000,000. This was an increase of more than $1,500,000 over the sum paid out in 1896, and the commissioner tells me that there will be more paid out this year than last. The gold miners of the world are now producing more than ever before and still the total output of them all is only about $200,000,000 a year. If the gold mines of all the world were run to their full extent for the next ten years they could not get out as much gold as this office has paid out for pensions on account of the War of the Rebellion. Up to last June the amount was more than $2,000,000,000, showing a steady increase from the close of the war up until 1890, and an enormous increase since then. This sum is beyond conception, and, as I have stated, it is on the increase. It amounts to so much now each year that if every man, woman and child in the United States contributed $2 the aggregate sum would just about pay the pension bills. This is equal to about $10 for every family in our country. Of this, over $500,000 goes abroad. Between 3,000 and 4,000 pensioners live in foreign countries and draw their money from us. The remainder are scattered over the United States from Florida to Maine and from Massachusetts to California, and the streams of money which flow here and are dammed up in the treasury are turned into the great pension irrigating ditches every year and carry this golden flood to all parts of the country.

During our walk through the Pension Office Commissioner Evans and myself spent some time in each of the divisions watching the hundreds of clerks at work. There were old and young men among them, and there were plenty of old and young women. I asked a number of questions as tio the efficiency of th eemployes, and was told that while the most of them were very efficient clerks, some were little good except to tie up papers. One man told e the poorest clerks he had were the old schoolmasters, and another said the girls in his bureau were of less value than the men. One chief of a division said some of his best employes were colored, and hep ointed out a young man with a face as black as a piece of cannel coal, who, he said, could take the heart out of a pension case quicker than any man he had. There are examiners and clerks scattered over the country, so that, all told, Commissioner Evans has about 7,000 men under him—an army more than half as large as that which Xenophen led on his famous march to the sea. In one division I found about seventy-five doctors. These men pass upon the medical testimony, and they can see a misstatement in the evidence if it is not very carefully covered. All of them have studied medicine, and not a few of them have been active practitioners. Another division is largely made up of lawyers, who pass on the legal aspect of cerain cases, and another might be said to be made up of detectives, for it is their business to ferret out frauds.

GOSSIP OF THE DIAMOND.

CURRENT BASEBALL NEWS IN AND AROUND PLAINFIELD.

Bits of Information and Comment Gleaned From the Great National Game —Latest Scores of the League Teams

The Riverdale Field Club came to Plainfield last season and defeated the Crescents by a score of 9 to 7. They were scheduled to play the Crescents this year, but the game was cancelled when the Crescents disbanded.

Plainfield's new baseball players are as gentlemanly a lot of young men as anyone would care to meet. They are bound to be popular. Even in the one game the crowd rooted for them with an enthusiasm that was pleasing to watch and deafening to listen to.

Easton, the left fielder of the Riverdales, is an old Princeton man, who made a great reputation for himself on the baseball team. One year he pitched against Yale and struck out eighteen of the Yale men. Since then, however, he has done nothing at pitching. He is a fine batsman, a fast runner and a sure catch in the outfield.

CYCLING COMMENT.

Entry blanks for Harry K. Lister's road race may be obtained at the store of C. C. Lister & Brother, on North avenue.

Alfred E. Holmes, of East Fifth street, and Ed Petrie, of East Sixth street, returned last week from a bicycle tour which lasted for two weeks. They both declare that touring is an ideal way of spending the summer.

The management of the Riverdale Field Club, which has leased the Crescent Oval, has decided to put the bicycle track in order and hold some races for the local amateurs during the remainder of the season. They have about completed a contract for the repairing of the track and the restoring of it to its former excellent condition. Of course it will take considerable money, but the Field Club is after a good track and is bound to have it.

SWALLOWED A BUTTONHOOK.

A Dangerous Plaything That a Borough Baby Had.

Helen, the five-months old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Nathan R. Lees, of 47 Pearl street, caused a great commotion at their home last evening about 9 o'clock by swallowing a buttonhook about two inches in length.

During the evening Mrs. Lees had given the child the article to play with. It was about 9 o'clock that Mrs. Lees went down stairs to unlock the door for her husband, who had just come home. When she went back to the bedroom where her child was laying down, she was greatly frightened. The baby was coughing violently and was rapidly becoming weak from exhaustion.

It at once flashed through the mind of the mother that the child had swallowed the buttonhook. She placed her finger in the child's mouth and could just feel the end of the hook. Fearing that her daughter would choke to death if not relieved, she managed to push the hook down the throat. Mr. Lees, in the meantime, hastened for Dr. Tomlinson. When the physician arrived the child was resting somewhat easy, although she was perceptibly exhausted from her experience. He gave some medicine and is reasonably confident that no ill effects will result. The hook is still in the child's stomach and today she feels happy and cheerful. If no complications set in it is quite likely that the child will come out of her trouble all right.

DROWNED IN THE CANAL.

Colored Boy Went Beyond His Depth—Body Not Found Yet.

(Special to The Daily Press.)

Bound Brook, August 16.—Eddie Johnson, a colored lad of ten years, was drowned this morning in the "basin" to the Delaware and Raritan canal, just below the paint works in South Bound Brook.

He went in swimming with a small Hungarian boy at 9 o'clock. He speedily went beyond his depth. He could not swim. His comrade ran for help, but before it arrived the lad was drowned. They are still dragging the canal for the body.

Eddie Johnson was spending the summer at the home of Mrs. Annie Hall.

ARTILLERYMEN AT SANDY HOOK.

Two Batteries from the Colorado Volunteers Arrive at Fort Hancock.

Two batteries of artillery from the Colorado Volunteers arrived at Fort Hancock on the Government steam boat Gen. Meigs this morning. They relieved the two companies, D and E, of the New Jersey Volunteers, which left for Pompton Lakes today to join their regiment.

Didn't Take Proper Care of Him.

Thomas J. Lappin, of West Fourth street, is now confined at the home of his brother-in-law, Stephen McIntyre, of Bayonne, threatened with an attack of pneumonia. A few days ago Mr. Lappin went to Bayonne for a visit, and on Sunday last he went in the water for a swim. While he was bathing, he was seized with cramps. Friends assisted him to the shore, but they did not take the necessary precautions, and he is now threatened with a serious illness. The physicians say that he should have been properly treated as soon as taken from the water.

SOME CURIOUS FACTS.

About the Two Most Remarkable Rivers in the World.

From the beginning the Nile was an exceptional river. Its sources were unknown. There were those who thought that the Nile flowed down from heaven; that it welled up from streams that disappeared under the earth on another continent, or, at the very least, that its springs were inaccessible to man.

There was no such mystery about the Euphrates. From the remotest times its sources seem to have been known by hearsay, if not by observation, to the dwellers on the coast.

The Nile was benificent even in its floods. The people learned to let its waters flow over their lands at the time of inundation, and where they raised dikes and sunk canals and basins it was to let in the water, not to keep it out.

The Euphrates also had its floods, but these were destructive. They scarred the soft earth with ravines and swept the fertile soil onward to build new lands along the edge of the Persian Gulf. The people anticipated the overflow with dread, and their most absorbing task was to restrain the river within bounds. They became more intimate with the earth than their Egyptian contemporaries. They learned how to mould the clay and to make their houses and the houses of their kings and their gods out of the material under their feet. The Egyptians learned something about brick manufacture, but they had no need to depend wholly upon that sort of building material. It was easy for them to obtain stone, as their huge piles attest.—Philadelphia Press.

WOMAN BOSS ON A RAILROAD.

The Company Has Never Found Cause to Complain of Her Work.

Mrs. Mary Shannon, a robust young woman, is a section boss on the railroad at Hartford City, Ind.

About two years ago Mrs. Shannon lived with her husband and two small children at Montpelier, in Indiana. Her husband, who held the position she now holds, was killed in a railroad accident. Left alone with two children and a mortgage on her little home, she was thrown upon her own resources. Her father had also been a section hand and her knowledge of this kind of work now came in well. She applied for the position left vacant by the death of her husband and the recommendations that accompanied the application could not be denied, and she secured the place.

She fitted herself out in a neat pair of overalls, resembling bloomers, and a broad brimmed hat. Since the first day she took control of the section the company has never had reason to complain of her work.—New York Journal.

WORLD OF SPORTS.

THE TERRIBLE TURK.

Had One Hundred and Fifteen Victories to His Credit.

Yousouf, "the Terrible Turk," has, it is said, 115 victories to his credit, and has never yet suffered defeat.

The gigantic Turk is said to be a special protege of the Sultan of Turkey, before whom he first appeared at the palace eight years ago. The wrestlers whom he overthrew in the imperial presence at various times were Kara Amet of Philippolis, Kandrarn of Asia Minor, Aliston and Karagos Ali of Bulgaria, Mahont of Teheran, Persia; Osman Memes Hallil and Emir Bri of Constantinople, Konrves and Hassan Ben Ali of Roumania, Stens Ali of Smyrna and Hofla and Hasan of Cairo.

As a slight token of his appreciation the Sultan bestowed upon Yousouf a life pension of $50 per week, which is paid to him with commendable regularity. Among the other mighty wrestlers who succumbed to Yousouf's strength and skill are the famous Paul Pons of Paris, Tom Bull of London, Oscar of Bordeaux, Grambes of Marseilles and Raoni, a gigantic sailor of Havre.

Yousouf also defeated seven of the best men in Russia, four in Austria, and hopes to defeat all the best men in this country before returning home to appear before the Sultan at the annual games at Constantinople the latter part of August.

Considerable curiosity has been manifest concerning his training, which is said to be unlike that of any other athlete. The entire day before a match Yousouf spends securely locked in his room. No one, not excepting his manager, can gain access to him, and it has thus far been impossible to ascertain what he does during his last day of training.

In fact all of his preparation is done behind closed doors, and those who handle him profess to be totally ignorant of his methods. His endurance is remarkable. After over an hour's hard work with an opponent his breathing is said to be little above the normal. Great exertion does not apparently tire him. The wise ones have said that Yousouf is not a Turk, but a native of France. His manager denies this, and asserts that he speaks only the Turkish language.

NOTE.—Since the above was placed in type, Yousof, "the Terrible Turk," has met his death in the sinking of the Transatlantique liner La Burgogne. The narrative, however, loses none of its interest.

Two Records Broken.

W. Newburn, Dublin, champion, cleared a distance of 23ft. 4in. in a running long jump at the games of the Queen's Collegians, Cork, Ireland, thus excelling by two inches the Irish record, made by Patrick Davin in 1888. On the same day and occasion T. F. Kiely, champion, maintained his right to the title by throwing the 16lb hammer a distance of 135 ft. 1in., T. E. Wood second, reaching a distance of but 96ft. 4in.

Alleged Hammer Records.

Tom Carroll, of San Francisco, Cal., professional, broke the world's record for throwing the 16lb hammer, held by himself, making a new one of 165ft. He also broke the world's record with the light hammer, made by himself, of 220ft. He first broke it by a throw of 226ft., and then smashed his former effort by making a throw of 242ft.

The Yousof-Roeber Match.

Although the tendency is to believe the Yousouf-Roeber wrestling match was a "fake," there is good reason to believe that the managers did not look for the climax which sprained Mr. Roeber's neck and incidentally his heart. Two months will be required to nurse neck and heart back to their normal condition. The criticism that there should have been a rope around the platform is offset by the fact that it has never been the custom to use ropes in the boxing ring style.

Eight schools have joined the New England Interscholastic Rowing Association, which is being fostered by the Boston Athletic Association. The boys are now practicing in fours. Later on they will be given the use of the eight-oared shells. Each school has been assessed $20 for the purpose of providing coaches.

His Report Received By War Department.

A CONCISE DESPATCH

AMERICAN FLAG HOISTED BY LIEUT. BRUMBY.

His Report Came in Cipher and Was Immediately Translated—City Surrendered Saturday Afternoon at 5 o'Clock.

(From the Union Associated Press.)

Washington, August 17, 12:55 p. m.—Rear Admiral Dewey's report of the surrender of Manila was received at the War Department early this morning. It was in cipher. It was immediately disciphered and given out for publication. It was as follows:

"Manila, August 13.—Manila surrendered today to the land and naval forces after a combined attack. A division of the squadron shelled the forts and intrenchments at Malate on the south side of the city driving back the enemy. Our army advanced on that side at the same time.

"The city surrendered at about 5 o'clock in the afternoon, the American flag being hoisted by Lieutenant Brumby.

"About seven thousand prisoners of war were taken. The squadron had no casualties. On the seventh, Merritt and I formally demanded the surrender of the city which the Spanish General refused. Signed, Dewey."

MANY SPOILS.

What Was Surrendered to Dewey and Merritt at Manila Saturday.

(From the Union Associated Press.)

Manila, August 13, via Hong Kong, August 17, 1:13 p. m.—The city of Manila surrendered today. Four American warships bombarded the Spanish fortifications at Malate for an hour. They fired a hundred shots, after which the American flag was raised over the Phillippines.

The Spanish surrendered 7,000 men and 12,000 stands of arms, together with an immense amount of ammunition. The Spanish were allowed the honors of war.

JANDENES TO SUFFER.

Spanish Government Will Court-martial Him for Not Making Stronger Defence.

(From the Union Associated Press.)

Madrid, August 17, 1:24 p. m.—It is officially stated that Captain-General Augustin of the Phillippines was recalled by orders of the Government devolving the command of Manila upon General Jandenes.

Jandenes will be tried by court martial on his return to Spain for surrendering the city without making a greater resistance.

ENTERED SAN JUAN.

American Cruiser Went Into Harbor as Far as Possible.

(From the Union Associated Press.)

Ponce, Porto Rico, via. St. Thomas, August 17, 2:30 p. m.—The cruiser New Orleans entered the harbor of San Juan yesterday as far as it was possible to go and Captain Folger went ashore and made an official call upon Capt.-Gen. Macias. The men greeted each other politely, and Macias said that he would return the visit Wednesday. The ship which the Spaniards sank in the harbor after Admiral Sampson's bombardment ef-

HURT ON A BLUE LINER.

GHASTLY WOUND MADE GOING AT A MILE A MINUTE.

S. G. Smith, of Newark, Sat by an Open Window in a Car and Was Struck in Head by Some Hard Substance.

The passengers occupying one of the coaches on the Blue Line express from Washington, which passes this city at 7:30 p. m, were startled last night as the train was running at the rate of a mile a minute between Cranford and Roselle to hear a man occupying a seat on the left side of the car yell in pain and then see a stream of blood spurt from a wound in the forehead.

The injured passenger was S. G. Smith, of 38 Hill street, Newark, who had boarded the train at this city. He was setting close to an open window when some hard missle flew through the window and struck him in the forehead. The blood flowed freey and when the train arrived at Elizabeth Smith got off and was assisted into the telegraph office. While waiting for a doctor he fainted. Dr. Bailey arrived in a few moments and dressed the wound and Smith continued his trip home.

Tom Brown, of this city, was on the train and assisted in stopping the flow of blood from the wound before the train arrived at Elizabeth. H. C. Gorrell, of this city, night operator at the Elizabeth station, also lent the injured man valuable assistance.

A Newark Italian Spied Lead Pipe Which He Also Carted Away.

A week ago an Italian junk dealer, of Newark, came here and visited the shop of William Krausse, of North Plainfield. Krausse is a plumber and had a quantity of junk which he disposed of to the dealer from Newark. The latter packed up the stock purchased and shipped it to his place in Newark by freight.

After it was packed Krausse missed a quantity of lead pipe for which he vainly hunted. Finally, convinced that it had been packed up by the Italian, he appeared before Justice Nash yesterday and secured a search warrant to look for the lead pipe in the junk.

Yesterday Constable Moffett served the warrant and Krausse found the missing pipe which he took possession of without delay. The amount was too small to take the trouble to make any charge against the Italian, and Krausse is satisfied as long as he has his property back again.

Adventist Meetings Closed.

The tent meetings, corner of Somerset street and Linden avenue, have been closed for the present. TROLLEY INTERESTS CLASH IN COUNCIL

Board of Freeholders Say Richmond Street Belongs to County

NEW AND NOVEL CLAIM.

THE COUNCIL WARNED NOT TO GRANT A TROLLEY FRANCHISE.

The County Legislators Give Notice That They Will Fight the Effort to Put Trolley Road on That Street Unless Consented to by Them—Councilmen Do Not Heed Notice of Freeholders.

The first matter considered at the adjourned meeting of the City Council last evening was the books of the assessors. The members spent fifteen minutes in looking over the books, but finally deferred further inspection until a meeting to be held Monday evening, August 29th.

W. R. Codington, attorney for the Union County Board of Freeholders, communicated with the Council regarding the granting of a franchise on Richmond street for a trolley. He stated that that street is a county road, and that the Board will oppose and fight any effort to place a trolley on that street without first obtaining the consent of the Board. The communication was received and filed.

Regarding the matter, Mr. Barrows stated that he thought that the Board of Freeholders were acting too hastily. He said that they had allowed the city to go ahead and repair the street which they now claim as a county road, and he thought that such action as they had taken was unjust. In addition, however, he stated that the Plainfield Street Railway Company has agreed to defend all suits or injunctions that may arise out of their efforts to locate a trolley on the so-called county road.

The conditions under which the trolley company secure the franchise to locate their tracks, include that they must copiously sprinkle the streets through which their tracks run, macadamize streets and pay their share for keeping them in repair.

Mr. Barrows introduced an ordinance granting the trolley franchise to the Plainfield Street Railway Company, and it embodies all the conditions to which the company must agree. It was adopted on its second reading and ordered advertised. Regarding the conditions and the ordinance all the members agreed that the contents were no more than fair. They did not think that any extortionate measures should be exacted, as had been suggested by some residents in the city, in view of the fact that John Kean had bid a high figure for the county trolley franchise.

In accordance with a resolution offered by Mr. Runyon three fire hydrants will be located on West Third street in the vicinity of Grant avenue, and three on West Fourth street, also one on South avenue opposite Leland avenue. He stated that the Plainfield Water Supply Company are about to extend their mains along the two first-mentioned streets.

Mr. Runyon also reported on the matter regarding the installation of a new heating apparatus at fire headquarters, and he offered a resolution that the contract for the work be given to George J. Tobin whose bid, $389, was the lowest. The Mayor and Clerk were then authorized to sign the necessary contract.

At this time Mayor Fisk appointed J. W. Murray, Jr., as first assistant chief of the fire department at a salary of $200, and Andrew H. Jennings as second assistant at a salary of $600. Mr. Runyon moved that the appointments be confirmed, which was so ordered.

Mr. Hetfield did not like the order in which the appointees were named, and could see no reason why Mr. Murray should receive an extra $100, when he does no more work than he always did, and the second assistant is to do all the work.

Mr. Runyon said in behalf of Mr. Murray that he was a very valuable man in the department, that he had been a faithful fireman, and that the city cannot afford to lose him. He said that when James Martin was in the department he did not sleep at fire headquarters, but Mr. Jennings will now do so. He thought the granting of an extra $100 was a tribute to Mr. Murray for his real worth.

Mr. Hetfield stated that there are a large number of firemen in Plainfield who do more duty than Mr. Murray, and they are just as faithful, yet they do not get one dollar for their services. They more than earn $100, but the city has no paid department and cannot pay them for their work. He

AID FOR THE RED CROSS.

SUCCESSFUL LAWN FETE GIVEN BY WOMEN IN CRANFORD.

Grounds of Joseph Purcell Transformed Into a Beautiful Scene—Women Did Themselves Proud—Profits Will be $300.

[Special to The Daily Press.]

Cranford, August 17—The ladies of the Cranford Auxiliary of the Red Cross Society did themselves proud last evening and they did something else, too, for the wounded and sick soldiers will have many dainties bought with the proceeds of the lawn fete which was held yesterday afternoon and evening. The lawn at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Purcell was the scene of the entertainment, and the grounds were a sight long to be remembered by those who were fortunate enough to be there.

The large barn at the side of the lawn was made use of for the entertainments such as gramophone selections, Punch and Judy shows, music and recitations, which were going on throughout the afternoon and evening. Corporal Sulzer, of the Fourth N. J. Regiment, recited "The Old Man and Jim," and Private Reuter, of the same regiment, gave selections on the banjo.

Music was furnished by Allen's band. About 10 o'clock the large barn was thrown open and dancing was indulged in to the music of Wheeler's orchestra.

Among those present were Chaplain Glazebrook, of the Third Regiment, and Alexander M. Mellan, a member of the First U. S. Cav., Troop B, who was shot through the shoulder at Santiago on July 2d and lay in the trenches from 5 o'clock until the next day at 9 o'clock. He was a reminder of the good work for which the ladies were working in giving the entertainment. About seven hundred people visited the lawn during the day and the ladies will clear about $300 for the sick and wounded soldiers, for whose benefit the entertainment was given.

The officers of the Cranford Auxiliary are Mrs. Bourne, president; Mrs. Horton, vice-president; Miss Carrie Purcell, treasurer, and Miss Lakley, secretary, and to these ladies a great deal of credit is due, for they have spared no time or expense to make it the grand success that it was. The society has already given over $200 to the Red Cross Society.

The body was brought to Plainfield this morning and the interment will take place in this city.

DEFEATED BOGEY ON HILLSIDE LINKS.

Supposed Perfect Record of Course Was Excelled.

A REMARKABLE SITUATION.

CARL W. WALZ EQUALLED BOGEY'S SCORE IN MATCH.

Colonel Bogey's Score Was Thought to be the Best Possible for the Links and Was Made With That Intention in View—Now the Players Have Demonstrated That it Wasn't.

Col. Bogey is a character famous in the annals of golfing. Everybody that knows anything of the ancient game of golf has heard of him but there is no record of his appearance to any one. Really, however, Col. Bogey, or Bogey, as he is often called, is a mythical personage who is supposed to play golf in absolutely perfect form and make equally perfect shots. Every golf course has a record, commonly known as Col. Bogey's score. This is supposed to be the score that ought to be made by perfect playing.

Now like every other course, the one used at present by the Hillside Tennis and Golf Club has Col. Bogey's score, so called. It was figured out as the others are by some golfing expert who was supposed to know just what ideal playing would do there.

Just at present there is a remarkable state of affairs on the Hillside links. Bogey's score has been equalled in a match. And further, it has been defeated by two of the crack players of the club in practice.

Now he, who formulated Col. Bogey's record for the course, placed it at 38 strokes. Some time ago Carl W. Walz went around the course in a regular match, completing it in 38 strokes. Later, Lester Glenney covered the nine holes in 37 strokes, one better than Bogey. And last of all, Willard Wadsworth accomplished the course in 36, two better than Bogey.

It is not often that a player has a chance to knock out the record of the reputed Colonel at golf and so the local men are congratulating each other on their wonderful work. While their scores were undoubtedly only accomplished by fine playing yet it is evident that Col. Bogey was not at his best or else those who scored his strokes were not expecting to see such good work on the Hillside course.

FOR THE FRESH AIR CAMP

A PROFITABLE AFFAIR HELD BY YOUTHFUL PHILANTHROPISTS.

Dispensed Drinks and Sweet Things, and Were Assisted by Several Fair Juveniles—"Killing the Spaniards" Was Popular.

A charming little affair, held on the lawn of the residence of George P. Mellick, 224 LaGrande avenue, yesterday afternoon, was the means of netting over $25 for the benefit of the Westfield Fresh Air Camp. Arranged as it was by two small boys, it was remarkably successful. Hartley Mellick and Raymond Miller were the youthful promoters of this charitable affair.

It was called a sale, and ice cream, cake, lemonade, candy and peanuts were to be had. The two young promoters directed the movements at the lemonade booth. Miss Emma Miller had the candy table. The other refreshments were dispensed by charming little waitresses, the Misses Edith Mellick, Antoinette Moodey, Helen Moodey, Grace Miller and Menda Hyde.

Morris Raymond was in charge of an attraction that took mightily with the young folks. "Killing the Spaniards," it was called. This sanguinary sport consisted in throwing tennis balls at small images of the Dons drawn on boxes. Prizes were given for the successful shots bringing down the naughty Spaniards.

The attendance was quite large. Some who could not be present sent small donations for the cause which were added to the net proceeds.

HAD NO AUTHORITY.

Advertising Solicitor Who Pretended to be Working for Franklin Council.

During the past few days some unknown person has been about Plainfield securing advertisements for a programme to be printed under the auspices of Franklin Council, No. 41, Jr. O. U. A. M., for their excursion to Asbury Park tomorrow. He called on several of the merchants and pretended to have their advertisements, but in fact did not.

Yesterday he called on F. A. Long, on Somerset street, and endeavored to secure his advertisement. Mr. Long asked him where he received his authority for doing such work. The man replied that Harvey Thorn, chairman of the excursion committee, had given him the privilege. Investigation proved that this was not true and that the man had not secured any advertisements. Mr. Long gave the man a few sharp pointers and soon afterward he left town. Mr. Thorn desires to notify the public that no one has been authorized to do such work for the Council, and he warns Plainfielders against such persons.

FAVORS CLEVELAND PLAN.

Gov. Voorhees Thinks the Farm School for Boys a Good Idea.

(Special to The Daily Press.)

Trenton, August 17.—Henry Vroom, through whose efforts ex-President Grover Cleveland has presented a tract of land for the establishment of a farm school for boys upon his estate near Princeton, called upon Governor Voorhees yesterday to interest him in the project. Governor Voorhees said he was warmly in favor of any such plan by which humanity might be benefited or elevated, but he was not in a position to pledge the State to support the movement.

He said nothing could be done in this respect until the meeting of the next Legislature, when Mr. Vroom might make an effort to have an appropriation set aside for his farm school.

CYCLE RIDER HELD UP BY THREE ROUGH MEN

Sandford Robinson Had a Hair-raising Experience.

COMING FROM WESTFIELD.

ANOTHER BICYCLIST APPEARED IN THE NICK OF TIME.

The Highwaymen Struck Him With Some Pliable Object That Partially Dazed Him—Grabbed His Arm, But He Broke Loose and Rode Off—Shots Were Fired by the Desperadoes But None Went Near Victim.

Sandford Robinson, junior clerk in the law office of Judge DeMeza, went through a thrilling and hair-raising experience Monday night while returning from Westfield on a bicycle. He was speeding along at a rapid pace when he approached the section of road where it is skirted by woods near Graceland. The moon was out and a short distance down the road he saw the outline of three men. No thought of highwaymen entered his mind, but just before he reached the spot where the men had halted he noticed that they did not spread apart so as to give him a clear road to pass on. He turned a little and slackened his speed as he came near them.

Just as he reached the party he saw the quick movement of the one nearest to him and the next instant he felt a quick, hard blow of some pliable object settle across his face on the upper lip. The blow stunned him and he partially fell and jumped from his bicycle. Robinson recognized the men as uncouth, and one of them grabbed his arm in a gruff manner. Though dazed and confused the young cyclist struggled to free himself from the grasp, and just at that moment he saw another cyclist coming from the direction of Plainfield. He gave a faint yell for help, and as the other rider neared the scene of the holdup the highwaymen released their hold and Robinson sprang forward and mounted his bicycle a few feet away.

The desperadoes run to the side of the road and fired a revolver two or three times, but if they aimed at the fleeing bicyclist their shots went wild.

Robinson was joined by the other bicyclist and they hastily rode back to Westfield, where they stopped at a hotel. The blood was flowing from Robinson's mouth and his lip was swollen to twice its natural size. The injuries were washed and dressed and Robinson took a train for this city.

Except for a slight swelling of his upper lip, and an aversion to undergo a similiar experience again, he is feeling all right.

YUM! YUM! PEACHES!

The Palate Tickled by Mizpah Circle of King's Daughters.

A very successful peach festival was held in the Monroe Avenue M. E. church last evening by the members of the Mizpah Circle of the King's Daughters, an organization connected with the church. There was a large attendance and the evening passed off very successfully.

The church was decorated with golden-rod, hydrangeas and cut flowers, while several booths were arranged about the walls. The Misses Foster, Miss Smith and Miss Ackerman had general charge of the whole affair and assisted in the different departments. Miss Manning and Miss Ackerman presided at the cake table. Miss Whitely and Miss Wenzel were occupied at the cashier's desk. George Parker kindly volunteered to assist in the kitchen, where his services were greatly appreciated.

Possible Extension of the Trolley.

According to the announcement of the officials of the Brunswick Traction Company there is a remote possibility that the trolley line of that company will be extended through to Perth Amboy. This is due to the fact that satisfactory terms cannot be made with the Board of Aldermen of Perth Amboy.

David Kenney, of the borough, has gone to Baltimore on business.

Miss Mary Compton, daughter of Halstead Compton, of West Front street, is stopping at Loon Lake, in the Adirondacks.

Mrs. George Hauser and children, of Duer street, are visiting Mrs. Hauser's mother, Mrs. Alterhein, of Jersey City Heights.

Rev. E. L. Walz, Jr., will return to his charge in South Carolina tomorrow after a short visit at his father's home on LaGrande avenue.

Bradley Smalley, of Belvidere avenue, has secured a position as one of the officials at the Charter Oak races to be held at Hartford, Conn., in September.

THE FALL OF MANILA

A Cablegram Received from Gen. Merritt Announces It.

SPAIN REPORTS THE FACT

Gen. Augustin Was Dismissed. It is Said That He Was Displaced August 5 by Gen. Jandemes, Second in Command. Our Troops Entered the City Last Saturday. To Repair Cable.

Washington, Aug. 17.—Further particulars in regard to the fall of Manila announced yesterday are as follows:

General Merritt has telegraphed that Manila has surrendered and that the American flag flies over the city.

He gives no details.

The cabinet yesterday was informed of Consul Wildman's dispatch to the state department announcing the arrival of General Augustin at Hong Kong and the rumored surrender of Manila.

Later the short dispatch came from General Merritt confirming the news and announcement that the American flag was flying over the city, but no details were given.

There was great satisfaction expressed among the members of the cabinet at the news, and at the fact that Manila had fallen before the peace protocol had been signed or known at Manila.

The capture of Manila as a cabinet officer expressed it, greatly simplifies the work of the peace commission and places the United States in a better position than before to demand the cession of enough territory to enable us to hold the city, if not the whole island.

Spain Hears of Surrender.

Madrid, Aug. 17.—The government has been notified by the Spanish consul at Hong Kong of the surrender of Manila.

It is not yet aware of the manner in which the surrender was effected.

It is now known, from semi-official sources, that the government knew yesterday that Manila had capitulated on Saturday, after General Jandemes had taken over the command from General Augustin and the latter had been authorized to quit his post and to embark on a foreign warship for Hong Kong.

Manila apparently capitulated because of lack of food, the population and garrison having suffered the greatest privations.

The cabinet has decided to order General Blanco and all other Spanish generals in the Antilles to remain at their respective posts until the evacuation is completed.

General Wesley Merritt, it is reported here, took the greatest precautions in order to prevent the insurgents from interfering with the capitulation of Manila or approaching the city.

The Manila press fears that the surrender may affect Spain's position in the negotiations for the future government of the Philippines.

Waiting for the News.

Washington, Aug. 17.—The information contained in Consul Wildman's brief message aroused intense interest, but created no surprise among those officers who received it. For two or three days news of the fall of Manila had been expected. The last dispatches received from Admiral Dewey and General Merritt indicated that it was their purpose to force a surrender of the city as soon as possible.

It was believed that they joined in a note to General Augustin, demanding the surrender of Manila and threatening to make a combined sea and land attack upon the city unless the demand was acceded to.

As soon as the protocol was signed last Friday afternoon dispatches were sent to both Admiral Dewey and General Merritt via Hong Kong. On Saturday the British steamer Australian left Hong Kong for Manila bearing the dispatches from this government.

Augustin Dismissed.

Berlin, Aug. 17.—General Augustin, according to a dispatch from Hong Kong, dated yesterday, was dismissed from his post as captain general of the Philippines on August 5.

General Jaudemes was ordered to take over the command at Manila.

The dispatch adds:

"The Americans notified the authorities at Manila that a bombardment by sea and land would commence at noon on August 9. The city surrendered on the 13th and the American flag was hoisted forthwith.

"The Spanish officers were allowed their freedom on parole. The judiciary and the administrative offices are to remain temporarily in the hands of the Spaniards. The insurgents remain outside the town."

Augustin's Escape.

Hong Kong, Aug. 17.—It was rumored here last night that Manila had surrendered, but no news was obtainable from the Spanish consul.

The officials of the Manila cable are anxiously awaiting permission to repair.

A cable steamer is now at Singapore awaiting instructions.

Governor General Augustin refused to speak. The German consul was called upon and he informed the correspondent that the outskirts of Manila were bombarded by the Americans and that the city surrendered. No damage was done to the city proper, only the outskirts being bombarded. The date of the bombardment was unknown to the German consul, who refused to say more.

General Augustin told a lady that Admiral Dewey demanded the surrender of Manila in an hour. The Spaniards declined to surrender and Dewey began the bombardment and the Spaniards hoisted a white flag.

General Augustin immediately jumped into a German launch, which was in waiting, and went to the Kaiserin Augusta, which sailed before the bombardment was concluded.

The bombardment occurred on the 12th.

SITUATION IN CUBA

Cuban Soldiers Will Abide by Anything the United States Says

New York, Aug. 17.—T. Estrada Palma, president of the Cuban junta, is in Washington, and Mr. H. S. Rubens, counsel to the junta, is also out of town. Few of the members cared to talk on the reported agreement to disband the Cuban army and of the appearance of agitators unfavorable to America in Santiago. One of the members said, however:

"I have not heard of the reported appearance in Santiago of agitators who seek to stir up the Cubans against the United States; but if such have made their appearance I do not think their talk will amount to much. There have always been dissatisfied people who desire to further their own ends or to change existing conditions. The Cuban government has experienced this kind of thing before, and even the present form of government has been opposed by certain agitators. These things are to be expected, for the man or party who attempts to do good for a people or advance the cause of humanity will always be opposed by hoodlums.

"These breathers of sedition may have made their appearance in Santiago now that peace has been declared, but they will neither command respect nor meet with much attention. They are of the same class as the rabid political orator, who sometimes makes his appearance in this country around election time. Our government is pledged to co-operate with the United States in securing a stable government, as they were in defeating the armies of Spain and they will do all in their power to fulfill their pledges, believing that this country will be, as it has ever been, the champion of the oppressed and a lover of justice, and that all its pledges to the people of Cuba will be fulfilled.

"We have said before that Cubans will do all in their power to assist the United States in the settlement of all future Cuban questions, and I repeat that they will still do so. Yet if an inflammatory clique of agitators, who desire to stir up the people at this time, have come on the scene, they will receive neither the attention of the better classes nor the favor of the majority of the masses, and they will meet with severe treatment at the hands of the Cuban government.

"The report that the Cuban army will attack Santiago when the United States garrison is weakened there is absurd. The Cuban army is under brave and faithful officers, who have been fighting for the future prosperity of the island and the independence of the people. They are under orders to assist the American general; they have done so and will continue to co-operate with the Americans. The Cuban government has accepted the armistice, and I know nothing of the reported disbandment of the Cuban army. Mr. Palma is in Washington, but I do not know his mission there."

New Cup Defender.

Bristol, R. I., Aug. 17.—Capt. Nat Herreshoff refuses to discuss the matter of a cup defender to meet the challenge from across the water in a contest for the America's cup, saying nothing has been settled.

A man well known in shipping circles who visited the Herreshoff works on Monday, claims to have seen the plans and model of the boat to be built for the great race. They are for a boat very much after the style of the 1896 defender.

The lines of the new craft are finer than those of the Defender, and show a hull cut away a little more in the forefoot and a little broader of beam.

But she will be a keel boat and of a form very familiar to those acquainted with the last American cup races.

Killed His Wife and Himself

San Francisco, Cal., Aug. 17.—R. J. Corbett, father of James J. Corbett, the heavyweight pugilist, yesterday morning shot and killed his wife and then turned the weapon upon himself with fatal effect. It is believed that the murderer was demented. He had been in extremely poor health for some time. Death was instantaneous in both cases.

The shooting occurred at the residence of the Corbett family, 520 Hayes street.

The last of the 300 educated young Englishmen who founded the town of Rugby, in the mountains of East Tennessee, in 1881, has left that once Arcadian village, established upon a plan arranged by Thomas Hughes, the English author. Rugby still has a population of 300, but the English element has vanished. The young collegians found the beautiful mountains lonesome and the opportunities for an active life few. Tennessee's mountaineers agree that Rugby "improved the breed of hogs," by which they mean nothing more than that the razorback, through the efforts of the English settlers, has been replaced by a far better animal.

Oregon women who last year entered the field, literally speaking, to work up the flax industry in the State have reason to be more than gratified thus far with the success that has attended their endeavor. They have made a name for Oregon flax that takes precedence over the product of any other section of the Union in which flax culture has been tried. With 140 acres of the best flax land in the State under crop, orders in hand for every ounce of fiber that can be produced, a fair degree of knowledge in regard to the cultivation of the plant and the preparation of the fiber for market, and reasonably adequate means at hand for preparing it, the association in charge of the movement certainly enters the season of 1898 well equipped for the work. It has furthermore been fully demonstrated that systematized, intelligent effort is all that is necessary to make fiber flax culture one of the growing and permanently profitable industries of the State.

WHEELER LEAVES CAMP

"Fighting Joe" Is Suddenly Summoned to Washington.

RECEPTION IN NEW YORK

Gen. Wheeler in New York. His Sudden Departure from the Camp at Montauk Caused Much Comment. It is Rumored That He is to Have a Place on the Peace Commission.

New York, Aug. 17.—General Joseph Wheeler came to town yesterday, en route to Washington on a sudden order from the secretary of war. The order was received in Camp Wikoff Monday night, and the general started for this city on the 5.40 o'clock train from Montauk without getting any breakfast. His going caused great anguish among the medical men in camp, whose quarantine regulations were smashed to general wreck by the order from Secretary Alger. It called merely for General Wheeler's immediate presence in Washington. In the camp the rumor spread that General Wheeler was to be one of the peace commissioners not yet appointed, and was hailed with great enthusiasm. If it is so, the appointment will be accepted by the army as a most happy recognition of the service of the brave volunteers, whom the old general with the iron will and unbending spirit well typifies.

The train that carried the general ran off a switch at Amagansett and it took half an hour to get it back again. General Wheeler went out to the trainmen and watched them work, dropping a word of advice where it would be of use. The rest of the way to the city he was the object of much attention, being promptly recognized by the passengers. In the depot at Long Island City and on the ferry boat the workingmen came up, brushed their hands clean on their aprons and asked the privilege of shaking hands with the old hero, which was readily granted. When he got into a Thirty-fourth street car newsboys hung on behind and shouted for "General Joe" and there was an informal levee.

The general went to the Hotel Waldorf to meet his children, to whom he had telegraphed his coming. He left last evening for Washington.

What Adjutant Corbin Says About It.

Washington, D. C., Aug. 17.—When interviewed as to General Wheeler's action in leaving the quarantine detention camp at Montauk Point Adjutant General Corbin replied:

"He has been ordered to report to the secretary of war for military reasons."

Further than this the adjutant general would not talk, declining positively to go into the question of General Wheeler being exempt from quarantine restrictions.

"There is no necessity for making a scandal of this matter," continued the adjutant general of the army. "General Wheeler has simply obeyed orders which called him to Washington."

SUPPLIES FOR CAMP WIKOFF

The Commissary Department Sending Lots of Fresh Meat and Good Bread.

New York, Aug. 17.—In order to expedite the work of completing Camp Wikoff at Montauk Point the quartermaster's department in the Army building sent two boat loads of trucks and teams to the Point.

Officers of the quartermaster's department were out yesterday engaging trucks wherever they could do so. Fifty were finally secured, each with four horses and a driver, and were all sent to Camp Wikoff on a barge and a ferry boat.

Colonel Amos S. Kimball, deputy quartermaster general, said yesterday:

"The ferry boat and barge will be retained at Montauk Point for service there. The trucks will be used in unloading and distributing baggage and stores, and in the work of completing the construction of the camp. So far as this department is concerned everything is progressing rapidly."

Reports from the commissary department at Camp Wikoff are also favorable. Colonel Wells Willard assistant purchasing commissary of subsistence, when seen in the Army building yesterday, said:

"Fresh meat is furnished daily for Camp Wikoff by Nelson Morris & Co., with whom the government has a contract. The meat is furnished according to telegraphic statements of the needs of the camp. Major John S. Duval, chief commissary at the camp, attends to this work.

"It takes from 15 to 20 cents per man per day to feed the troops. This sum includes everything in the army rations. The fresh bread furnished is as good as I eat myself. It is taken up every day from Brooklyn. Monday 3,000 loaves were sent and yesterday between 6,000 and 8,000 loaves were sent.

"The delicacies at the camp are included in the commissary department and are sold to the soldiers at cost.

"All the storehouses have not been put up. They should have been finished last Saturday, and they ought to be finished this Saturday."

"Has the commissary department decided to give the men cold tea?" was asked.

"We furnish tea," said Colonel Willard, "and if the soldiers want to cool it they can do it themselves. We can't go around cooling tea.

"The food given the troops at Camp Wikoff is better than that enjoyed by the average laborer, and is better by far than the rations furnished any army in the world."

Allison Not to Serve.

Washington, Aug. 17.—The authoritative announcement was made yesterday that Senator Allison of Iowa will not be a member of the peace commission.

In a long interview a membership on the commission was urged upon him by the president. Senator Allison, however, was no table to accept on account of other important duties.

Up-to-date Laundry Work.

We run the laundry and take care of all details, but you "boss" it. We do what you tell us to do. It may give you a new sensation to find that you get a domestic finish when you ask for it, and to discover that your collars are actually ironed in the way that the maker intended them to be ironed.

We are running a laundry with the most improved methods and appliances. We use pure water and good soap. We are using two things that are not commonly used in laundries—care and intelligence. If you have found a laundry that pleases you perfectly, we have nothing to say to you. If you have any reason to be dissatisfied, we would like to give you a practical demonstration of our way of running a laundry.

Tell us where and when to call for your work, when you want it delivered and let us know any particular thing that you would like to have done with it.

We want you to understand that we are running this laundry for you, and that your wishes are to be regarded in every particular.

We also have just completed arrangements for doing family washing in a satisfactory manner by the dozen or week. Please call at office for further information.

The Clearing Sale of Shirt Waists.

With the close of July comes the greatest price-cutting—the most attractive values ever offered. The remaining stock is divided into two lots, 49c. and 75c., former prices ranged from 75c to $1.50. There's not 200 waists in the entire assortment, so we advise an early call for the best selection.

Sailor Hats and Untrimmed Hats 49c.

This means that each and every hat, irrespective of former price, will be 49c. Of especial interest should the price be, as none have been less than 75c, and the styles offered are all of this season's production.

Men's Negligee Shirts 59c.

Sounds cheap, but the hundred or more shirts that go on sale have been selling at 75c., 85c. and $1. The patterns are all new and desirable, the kind that you would like. Clearing time is here, and the new price, 59c., will be the means of their quick disposal.

Men's Summer Underwear 20c.

Nearly 600 pieces gauze underwear to be 20c. This is ordinarily the best 25c underwear sold, but 20c will be the clearing price.

It's quite necessary, because while Uncle Sam is settling scores with the Spaniards you're bound to have a little brush at home at the same time, and there's nothing like being ready for emergencies. ALLEGED CUBAN SCHEME

Plan to Occupy Santiago Jointly With the Americans.

Santiago de Cuba, Aug. 17.—General Wood, through the vigilance of the secret service men, learned yesterday that he Cubans had planned to make an attempt later in the month to occupy the city jointly with the Americans, in pursuance of their desire to share the civil administration of the town with the American officers and place their flags on the public buildings.

The plan of the Cubans, Gen. Wood learns, is not to resort to any violence, but to attempt to march into the town peaceably.

The details of the scheme, however, are not yet known to the Americans, but the Spanish and Cuban residents of the town who know of the plan are very much opposed to it.

They have petitioned the American officers to remain and preserve order, and nothing is more certain than that the Cubans will not be allowed to enter the city.

The Morro road, by which the Cubans had planned to come to Santiago, is guarded by the Fifth regiment of immunes, commanded by Colonel Sargent, whose orders are to let no bodies of armed men pass.

Every one has been disarmed in the town under the terms of the proclamation issued by General Shafter after the news of the signing of the peace protocol arrived.

Hundreds of machetes have been taken possession of and stored in the public arsenals. Garcia's army is now on a twenty-eight day furlough, and most of his men are at their homes.

The health of the town under the improved sanitary conditions is becoming better. No new cases of yellow fever have been reported. The sickness among the Spanish prisoners, however, is increasing, 3,146 cases of illness having been reported to General Wood yesterday.

The principal complaints are malignant malaria and acute dysentery. The malaria is of an exceedingly deadly type. The men loaded on board the transports to be sent back to Spain are in a wretched condition.

The transport ship Leone will sail for Montauk Point to-day with the Ennis Light Battery and parts of different infantry regiments.

SPAIN STIRRED UP

Anglo Russian Conflict Arouses Dread.

Madrid, Aug. 17.—El Liberal, discussing the possibility of a conflict between Great Britain and Russia, thinks it a cause of fresh peril to Spain, and urges that special preparations be made for the defence of the Balearic islands and the coast towns of Andalusia. It says:

"For three years we have sought to defend our honor and Spanish sovereignty in the colonies. To-day we are threatened with another danger. We have to defend our homes."

According to El Tempo, the organ of the Dissident Conservatives, Senor Silvela, the leader of that party, intends to block the government's policy.

The queen regent has personally thanked the French government for its good offices in obtaining peace, and has charged Senor Leon y Castillo, the Spanish ambassador at Paris, to inform M. Delcasse, the French minister of foreign affairs, that her majesty has conferred upon him the grand cross of the Order of Carlos III.

A similar distinction is bestowed upon M. Patenotre, the French ambassador at Madrid.

El Imparcial publishes a letter from Havana, whose writer asserts that Gen. Blanco "had succeeded in hoodwinking the Americans as to Admiral Cervera's whereabouts," but that the Madrid government "frustrated his plans by announcing the arrival of the squadron at Santiago de Cuba."

Senor Sagasta, on leaving the palace yesterday afternoon denied that General Blanco and other generals were opposing the government's policy, as had been alleged.

Hobson's Birthday.

New York, Aug. 17.—This is the 28th birthday of Constructor Richmond Pearson Hobson, and he is spending it in this city.

At the Army and Navy Club, where he makes his headquarters, some demonstration in honor of the day may be made.

The lieutenant has carefully refrained from referring to his birthday, as he wished to spend it quietly, but admiring friends have kept "tab" on the day.

Mrs. Hobson, his mother, is not with him, as she left for Salisbury, N. C., yesterday.

For the past few weeks she has been visiting friends on East Seventeenth and West Thirty-fifth streets.

Lieutenant Hobson's sister came to New York from Morristown yesterday, and several photographs of the three were taken.

Lieutenant Hobson was at Tompkinsville, S. I., testing the air bags yesterday which are to raise the Spanish warships sunk off Santiago.

Rejoicing Over Peace.

Piqua, Aug. 16.—The return of peace was celebrated here last night, when 10,000 persons participated. In response to a telegram sent by Colonel J. G. Battelle, President McKinley wired as follows:

Telegram concerning celebration received. I rejoice with you and with all the people upon the return of peace. All honor to the army and navy, whose brilliant victories have given added lustre to the American name.

WILLIAM McKINLEY.

The message was read and received with a tremendous ovation.

Warships to Go to Guantanamo.

St. Croix, Aug. 17.—Nearly all the warships on duty in Porto Rican waters have received orders to go to Guantanamo bay, presumably to wait there until the peace negotiations are settled.

The cruiser Columbia has been ordered to New York, and will leave this morning. The other ships will start for Guantanamo bay in a day or two.

Off for Greenland.

Copenhagen Aug. 17.—The expedition to explore the east coast of Greenland under Lieutenant Amdrup, sailed yesterday morning on board the steamer Godt-Haab.

COMMISSIONERS NAMED

Those for Porto Rico and Cuba Chosen by the President.

ARMY AND NAVY OFFICERS

Gens. Wade and Brooke and Admirals Sampson and Schley Among the Officers to Adjust the Details of Evacuation. All Are Well Known. The Commissioners Give General Satisfaction.

Washington, Aug. 17.—The president has appointed the two commissioners to adjust the details of the evacuation of Cuba and Porto Rico under the terms of the peace protocol. They are as follows:

For Cuba: Major General James F. Wade, Rear Admiral William T. Sampson, Major General Matthew C. Butler.

For Porto Rico: Major General John R. Brooke, Rear Admiral Winfield S. Schley, Brigadier General William W. Gordon.

This list is in line with the latest of the premature guesses at its composition. With the exception of the name of General William Washington Gordon, the other commissioners have been so much in the public eye of late that little needs to be said about them. General Gordon is, however, probably the president's personal choice, and his career has many points of interest. He is a native of Savannah, Ga., and a graduate of Yale, where he was a classmate of Judge Henry E. Howland of New York and of Stewart L. Woodford. On receiving his degree he returned home and entered business as a cotton merchant. He entered the Confederate army May 1, 1861, and served till the close of the war, first as a lieutenant in Stewart's cavalry in Virginia, then as captain and inspector of Mercer's infantry brigade on the coast of Georgia, then as a captain and adjutant in Wheeler's cavalry in the Carolina campaign. In October, 1865, he resumed his old business in Savannah. In the interval since then he has served six years in the Georgia legislature and been senior officer of the state militia, in that capacity commanding his troops four separate times in the suppression of mob disorders. As he had yellow fever in November, 1854, he was considered an immune, and, in a measure, certainly proved it by remaining in Savannah through the fearful epidemic of 1876, nursing the sufferers. He is a prominent member of the Savannah Benevolent Association, is vice president of the Merchants' National Bank, and ex-president of the Cotton Exchange of Savannah and was a delegate to the Indianapolis sound money convention.

At the outbreak of the present war, when the best military appointments were going to civilians here and there, the Georgia delegation in Congress decided to invest their share of the patronage in another man. The president, however, regardless of this action, appointed Gordon a brigadier general on the strength of his personal record. The general declined the honors of commanding a division preparing for service in one of the northern camps, in order to be sure to see service at the front. He then expected to go with General Coppinger to Porto Rico by the end of June or the first of July at the latest. This is the sort of spirit which always has pleased the president, and it is not surprising that he has now taken pains to make up to General Gordon in belated honors for the disappointment of some of his ambitions earlier in the war.

MUSTERING OUT TROOPS

List of the Regiments Before the Cabinet

Washington, Aug. 17.—The war department officers have prepared a list of volunteer regiments which will be mustered out of the United States service immediately.

The list, as completed, was sent to the White House for consideration by the cabinet.

The organizations included in the list comprise about 40,000 men.

The muster out will probably include the 201st, 202d and 203rd New York regiments, now stationed at Hempstead, L. I. The list includes all the infantry regiments that were organized under the second call.

Russia's Congratulations.

Washington, Aug. 17.—The state department has posted the following bulletin:

"Besides the congratulatory note of the Italian ambassador felicitating the government of the United States on the signature of the preliminaries of peace with Spain, the secretary of state received on the night of the 13th instant a telegram from the ambassador of Russia, Count Cassini, who is now sojourning at Narragansett pier, by which he tendered his congratulations upon the conclusion of the protocol which assures a peace alike glorious to this country and honorable to our adversaries of yesterday."

New Danger for Spain.

Madrid, Aug. 17.—El Liberal, in an article discussing the possibility of a conflict between Russia and Great Britain, says that such an occurrence would cause fresh perils for Spain, who should at once prepare a special defence of the Balearic Isles and the coast towns of Andalusia.

"For the last three years," the paper says, "we have sought to defend our honor and our sovereignty over the colonies. To-day we are threatened with another danger and will have to defend our house and our life."

All Quiet at Havana.

Key West, Fla., Aug. 17.—There is apparently no foundation for the report that there have been special disturbances in Havana within the last day or two.

According to the latest advices from reliable sources the city is very tranquil.

Cervera in New York.

New York, Aug. 17.—Admiral Cervera and his friends left Portsmouth, N. H., for Annapolis at 3 o'clock yesterday on the steamboat Priscilla for New York. They arrived here about seven o'clock this morning.

PEACE COMMISSION TALK

Senator Allison Discusses the Personnel of the Board With the President.

Washington, Aug. 17.—Senator Allison of Iowa reached Washington Monday, and yesterday, prior to the meeting of the cabinet, had an interview with President McKinley.

The senat rosaid afterward that he had discussed the personnel of the peace commission with the president, but aside from stating that he did not expect to be a member himself, declined to go into details.

Senator Spooner's presence in the city has given rise to the most persistent reports that he is to be a member of the peace commission. He said that his visit to Washington and his talk with Senator Allison had no reference to the question of the membership of the peace commission.

Mr. Spooner was one of the most pronounced opponents of Hawaiian annexation and is an anti-expansionist. It is not likely, therefore, that he will be selected, although he is a warm personal and political friend of the president.

A place on the American-Canadian committee, which meets in Quebec next Tuesday, was offered to the senator, but he declined owing to the pressure of business engagements.

Senator Allison has declined to serve on the commission becalse of important impending work on the appropriations and finance committees, he being the actual chairman of the first and acting chairman of the second.

A Republican senator who talked with the president yesterday morning, said that Senator Davis of Minnesota had also declined to serve, both because he had a fight for re-election on his hands and because he wanted to be untrammeled in his position as chairman of the foreign relations committee when the peace treaty was submitted to the Senate.

It is possible that Bourke Cochran may be a member of the commission, and it is understood that prominent Catholics, including Archbishop Ireland, are actively at work in his behalf.

TROOPS WERE DISORDERLY

And Gen. Shafter Was Obliged to Order Them Into Camp

Santiago de Cuba, Aug. 16.—General Shafter to-day ordered the Second volunteer regiment of immunes to leave the city and go into camp outside. The regiment had been placed here as a garrison to preserve order and protect property.

There has been firing of arms inside the town by members of this regiment without orders, so far as known; some of the men have indulged in liquor until they verged upon acts of license and disorder; the inhabitants in some quarters have alleged loss of property by force or intimidation, and there has grown up a feeling of uneasiness if not alarm.

General Shafter has therefore, ordered this regiment to the hills, where discipline can be made more severely rigid.

Food for Our Troops in Manila

Washington, Aug. 17.—A contract for a half million dollars' worth of fresh beef and fresh vegetables has been awarded to a firm in Australia by our consul at Melbourne at the instance of the war department.

The supplies are intended for the troops at Manila, where the beef will be delivered frozen, and the vegetables sufficiently chilled to preserve them. The contract calls for 2,500 tons of meat, and the acceptance of both articles will be by inspection on delivery. It is estimated that the supplies will last the 20,000 troops under Merritt for three months, at the end of which period the local sources of supply may be available.

St. Louis Returns

Washington, Aug. 17.—The arrival of the auxiliary cruiser St. Louis at Montauk Point with troops from General Shafter's army, was reported to the navy department yesterday. This is probably the last trip the vessel will make as a warship. As soon as the troops are landed she will proceed to the Cramps' shipyards. There her guns will be taken off and she will be restored to her original condition and returned to the American line, from which she was chartered. She will be the first of the auxiliary cruisers to go.

Porto Rico Department

Washington, Aug. 17.—Arrangements are being made at the war department for the establishment of a new military department on the island of Porto Rico, similar to that recently established in the province of Santiago de Cuba and in the Philippines.

It will be known as the 'department of Porto Rico," and will be commanded by Major General John R. Brooke, now with the army of occupation in that territory.

Perry Belmont Resigns.

Washington, Aug. 17.—Major Perry Belmont has tendered his resignation as major and inspector general of the United States volunteers. It will take effect on the 20th inst., and was caused by a rush of other business.

Col. John Hay Accepts

Big Orders for Cartridges

New Brunswick Appeals to Plainfield.

With all the wry faces which the newspapers of New Brunswick have made in a jealous mood at Plainfield, it must certainly have been humiliating to The Times of that city to print a communication, which occupied a half-column of its space Tuesday, that had for its feature the superior advantage of Plainfield, and a plaintive plea for a scheme to be arranged so that New Brunswick might share some of this city's good fortune.

For two years New Brunswick has been without a theatre, and now the citizens of that place are just aching for anything in the histrionic line, but their hope of seeing either the tragic actor or the peroxide soubrette is barren. One who signs himself "Theatre Patron" suggests a novel scheme, in which the trolley is to play a star part. The correspondent rehearses the fact that with the extension of the trolley line from New Brunswick to Plainfield it is possible that local theatre-lovers will be able to get some relief from the hum-drum life in New Brunswick by attending the amusements presented in Plainfield. The correspondent thus argues for his proposition:

Cannot Supt. Radel inaugurate the theatre car when the Plainfield branch is opened? The car could then take many people from here to the productions given in Stillman Music Hall there. Most of them are first-class and quite a few have already been enjoyed by bicyclists from this city, who have willingly made the trip in order that they might enjoy such entertainment.

The time required to make the trip from this city directly to the theatre doors by way of Bound Brook and Dunellen would probably not consume more than an hour and a quarter or an hour and a half. It is possible that much less time would be required for the trip. The establishment of such a car service would surely be a great accommodation and would be an evidence of Supt. Radel's constant aim to meet the desires of the people. I am sure as a return that the public would patronize the car in a liberal manner. Let us have a chance to be amused.

The New Brunswick correspondent has certainly struck a novel scheme for lifting his town out of the slough of despond into which it has fallen by the calamity that befell their own Music Hall. But in its Plainfield namesake they may find the tragic, the dramatic and the comedy they thirst for. By all means let Supt. Radel accept the suggestion and offer Plainfield as the solace for those of New Brunswick who delight in witnessing theatrical performances. Music Hall is big enough, Manager Edwards glad enough and Plainfield liberal enough to help poor old New Brunswick out of the hole into which it has fallen.

An Unexpected Clash.

It is certainly news to the majority of Plainfielders to know that Richmond street is a county road, as the notice given to the Common Council last night by the Board of Freeholders sets forth. This sudden regard of the county legislators for the thoroughfare is in strange contrast to the care and thought which they have shown towards it in the past, which has been absolutely nothing. The Freeholders must look at Richmond street in the light of a poor relation which has never been worth the claiming until its value was suddenly developed in what proposes to be the biggest fight between trolley interests this section of the country has ever seen.

Judging by the sentiments expressed in the Council after the reception of notice from the Freeholders, and the further progress of the ordinance granting the Plainfield Street Railway Company a franchise over this street, the city solons are not in a mood to bow to the edict of the Freeholders. A clash between the Common Council of this city and the Board of Freeholders over the county trolley plan was about the last thing that could be expected, but now that it has come the result will be watched with more than ordinary interest.

The Freeholders obtain their right to claim Richmond street as a county road by virtue of the Squire law. In exercising that claim they are probably induced to act in the spirit that having secured from Kean an offer of $250,000 for the county trolley franchise they are duty bound to use all the advantages of the law to give the buyer his moneys worth.

THE CITY OF SAN JUAN.

The city of San Juan, Porto Rico, is situated on a small island that is separated from the main island by a narrow strip of water that is bridged. The city has a population of 30,000. The principal fortification is Morro Castle. In the plaza del Armas is a handsome statue of Christopher Columbus.

Consents are Now the Thing.

"Mr. Kean will begin at once to secure the consents of property owners," is a statement that probably lost a great deal of importance to many citizens in reading the account of the acceptance of the offer of $250,000 for the county trolley franchise by the Board of Freeholders. The fact that Mr. Kean has got to get the consents of the majority of property owners along the line of the proposed widened boulevard means that he has the hardest part of the job yet to do. It must be remembered that there is a clause in the Squire law which makes the boulevard and county trolley an impossibility unless the municipalities through which it passes give their consent. Already Cranford and Westfield are in the line of opposition, and though a quarter of a million dollars and the approval of the Board of Freeholders may sound imperious and conclusive as compared with the opponents' authority and financial backing, it does not necessarily mean that they cannot cope with the influences in favor of the county trolley.

Essex May Cause Republican Woe.

The Republicans are not scared by any means, says a Trenton correspondent. With Voorhees as their Gubernatorial candidate as against Donnelly or any other Democrat they expect to achieve a victory just as great as marked the election of John W. Griggs three years ago. Even should Voorhees not be their candidate they feel confident that they could carry the State with either Murphy or Pitney as their standard-bearer. Major Carl Lentz says Mr. Murphy is not out of the race by any means, and when the time comes for active work Essex county will prove its loyalty to its favorite son. That may all be true as far as the Major's prescience may lead him, but, still, it is well known that nearly all the other Republican leaders predict Voorhees' nomination.

It would be an interesting campaign, indeed, with Voorhees on one side and Donnelly on the other. There would be no mud-slinging. The best of feeling would prevail, while National, war and State issues would receive a full discussion, at least at the hands of the Republicans.

WHAT THE SHEARS FIND.

Editorial Comment From Other Papers of Interest in Plainfield.

Perth Amboy stands on its rights in the matter of street railway franchises. Two electric railway companies have had applications for franchises before the Board of Aldermen for more than a year, and have finally withdrawn them as hopeless. They claim that the terms demanded by the Aldermen are too high, "suicidal," as they express it, and no further attempts will be made to secure the needed right of way through the streets. The terms are thus summarized: "The city demands that after operating its lines in Perth Amboy for five years each company shall pay to the city treasury two per cent. of its gross receipts. At the end of each five years after that there is to be a raise of one per cent. until at the end of twenty-five years, the city will receive twenty-five per cent. of the gross earnings of the companies." These terms, which are regarded as "suicidal" in Perth Amboy, would, in twenty-five years, be precisely the same as those under which the trolley lines are operated in Newark.—Newark News.

THEATRICAL.

Current Dramatic Attractions That Plainfielders Can Witness.

One of last season's conspicuous successes, "When London Sleeps," comes to Stillman Music Hall tonight. The incidents on which the play is founded is the sudden acquisition of a large fortune by a circus performer—a wire walker—known as the queen of the air, who is engaged to another performer in the same show, who is an athlete. Hilda Corrode, an adventuress, so the story goes, makes an avowel of love to the athlete, who repulses her approaches, signifying his preference for Queenie Carruthers, the queen of the slack wire. A Captain Haynes and a Mr. Fuller announce that Queenie is heir to a vast fortune. The captain and Hilda Corrode enter into a compact, one to secure Queenie and the other David. The first act takes place in a circus tent. The second act shows Burlington Hall, London, where Queenie and Carrie Jones are living, and the captain is pressing his suit. He informs her that David is lying ill at a house, and follows her with evil intentions. He sets fire to the house, and she escapes by walking a telegraph wire. The captain enters the India Exhibition as a native. It is here that Queenie is entrapped and cast upon an altar to burn, but escapes by the cracking of the Idol Somnath. The wire-walking scene and the Hindoo Temple are sensational introductions into the drama.

* * * * *

Friday night "The Real Widow Brown" Company will be seen at Stillman Music Hall. The comedy is replete with fun, fast and furious, and is greeted with bursts of applause and merriment everywhere. The mistakes of the young man who is doing his best to personate the real charming widow, are most ludicrous. He is assisted by two jolly fellows and a couple of bright, pretty girls. The comedy is full of complicated situations, the unraveling of which causes unbounded merriment. The company is under the management of A. Q. Scammon, who has many other successful comedies on the road, including "The American Girl," "The Burglar" and "Side Tracked." He has given special attention to the selection of artists for this company, which includes many well-known favorites. The costumes are new and handsome. The plot of the play is humorous in the extreme and "The Real Widow Brown" has justly come to the front as one of the greatest successes of the day.

WOMEN'S REALM

WHAT TO WEAR AND HOW TO MAKE IT

May Manton's Hints Regarding Seasonable Toilettes.

In this season of startling combinations, black and white stands out conspicuously as always chaste and very rarely unbecoming.

The waist here shown is of black peau-de-soie that matches the skirt, its soft glimmer showing well against the yoke, collar and epaulettes of white satin veiled with embroidered chiffon applique. Narrow ruching of black chiffon edges the waist, epaulettes, collar and wrists.

The arrangement is simply made over glove fitted linings that close in center front.

The yoke plastron is laid on and permanently secured under the edges of the blouse fronts on the right, the left edges being finished separately and provided with hooks to close on the shoulder, arm's-eye, and under the edges of the left front.

The seamless back has the yoke applied in pointed outline, gathers at the waist giving a becoming fulness in the center. The standing collar that finishes the neck is joined to the plastron in front and closes at the left side. The two seamed sleeves are provided with fitted linings, the greatly modified fulness being arranged in gathers at the top, while the wrists are shaped in pointed outline.

The epaulettes are shaped in points at front and back, the notch at the top giving a double pointed effect that is very graceful.

Waists in this style may be of silk, wool or cotton fabrics, all in one material or coloring, or a combination of two or more as may be desired.

A fancy belt can be worn at the waist in place of the knotted sash ribbon here illustrated.

To make this waist for a lady of medium size, 1 3-4 yards of material 44 inches wide will be required.

Interesting Paragraphs.

Now that low shoes are the order of the day, the summer girl wages her old battle of trying to keep them tied. The patent fasteners that she used to clamp on her shoes played havoc with her laced-trimmed skirts and the ruffles inside her gown and never did their duty at that. They were always coming off, as the many odd clasps in her possession testify. If the bow is tied properly, there is no need of clasps. Tie once, and proceed as if to make an ordinary double bow knot. Just before the loops are pulled tight, wrap the left-hand loop under the knot and then pull the loops. This is an improvement on the old way of tying the loops, which, if done effectively, often caused the nails to become broken in the effort to undo the work. This bow can be undone by pulling the string, just as if it were tied ordinarily.

For an elderly lady an excellent traveling mantle is princess shaped, tight at the waist, the back forming puckered plaits below the waist. Heart-shaped shoulder slope, with velvet facings, joined to a round turndown collar, the whole edged with a stitched slope; sleeves open and turned down, mounted in hollow plaits, the open part of the front is trimmed with velvet facings, edged by a stitched slope.

For the present sunbonnets in all their quaintness, made from organdie or fine lawn, are the novelties most sought after and make the head covering most prized by the girls and women whose enthusiasm falls short of reckless exposure and defiance to the sun.

The new shirt waists are of butcher's blue. This shade is very bright, and does not fade easily. As the heavy, duck-like material in which the shade comes is apt to draw up very much when laundered, it should be shrunk before it is made.

When buying hosiery to match tan shoes, do not be too particular about the match. If the hose are darker it is better, since the shoes wear dark very quickly, and stockings lighter than the shoes are very undesirable.

What is called the "summer glove" is of the thinnest possible kid. These are not to be recommended to women whose hands perspire. Such a woman wants her gloves thicker than ever in the summer.

There seems to be a wild desire to reduce the seams of skirts. Now the new skirts have only one seam. These are difficult to hang, and should not be attempted except by an experienced dressmaker.

JULIA WARD HOWE.

CONSIDERED BY EUROPEANS AS THE FOREMOST WOMAN IN AMERICA.

Home From a Winter in Rome She Hastens to a Club Meeting as Soon as She Gets On Shore—Her Standard for Americans Still the Highest and Best.

Mrs. Julia Ward Howe, after her winter in Rome, passed a few days in Boston before going to her Newport country palaces. The season abroad had not lessened her devotion to the club idea, for hardly had she set her foot on shore when she found herself at a club gathering, in this case the annual meeting of the New England Women's club, of which she has been president for so many years. This in itself—this hastening to a club meeting immediately after a tedious ocean voyage—would be possible to few women in their eightieth year. Yet if she could have her own way, Mrs. Howe would not have hesitated to follow her ocean voyage with a journey to Denver.

After six months abroad, Mrs. Howe seemed in the best of health and spirits, and was ready to talk about the women's clubs in which she had been interested while at Rome. It was not, however, as some have thought, a regularly organized club with a cut and dried constitution, but an informal coterie with aims somewhat less definite than those of most clubs. It was Mrs. Maud Howe Elliot who first proposed to her mother, saying, laughingly: "I know that you will miss your clubs over here, and we must see what kind of literary gathering can be arranged to take their place."

What had been suggested half in fun soon became an accomplished fact, and a group of a score or more of ladies met eight or nine times during the winter to listen in true American fashion to papers on various subjects. Although ladies of several nationalities were in the coterie, all were able to speak or understand English, and, therefore, most of the papers were given in that language. The two given by Mrs. Howe herself were on "Optimism and Pessimism as Efficient Social Factors," and "A Plea for Humor." Paul Loyson, son of the famous Pere Hyacinthe, spoke to the coterie on "The Religion of Ancient Rome Traced Back to Its Latin Beginning." Signor Segele spoke in Italian one day on the difficult problems of dealing with the abandoned children, of whom there are so many in Italy, and another Italian gentleman spoke one afternoon on "The Origin of Modern Musical Notation." Philip Sinclair Hedderley, a talented Englishman, on another occasion gave a paper on "Pope Urban VIII." In the course of one of these afternoons Mrs. Howe was asked to recite "The Battle Hymn of the Republic," and she tells me with a laugh at her own expense, that when she had finished, young Loyson inquired, innocently, of Mrs. Howe, who wrote "The Battle Hymn of the Republic."

It is perhaps superfluous to say that Mrs. Howe returns to America as good an American as ever, for the pleasure she has had and the courtesies that she has received in foreign countries. The American standard is still to her the highest and best, both in matters of thought and matters of life. "If our own people," she says, "wish to have an idea of what the French may become they must keep their faith in all that America finds precious and valuable—in free institutions, in popular education, and, above all, in the hearts of the people. Let Americans who go to Paris remember that they should there represent republican virtue and intelligence."

Mrs. Howe is very eloquent on this subject, adding that there would be little chance of misunderstanding with France if American tourists, instead of devoting themselves to shopping and amusements in Paris, would try to make friends with the best people there. "Better than the full trunk and empty purse, which usually mark a return from Paris, will be a full heart and a hand clasping across the water another hand, pure and resolute as itself, the hand of order, the hand of brotherly progress and charity."

It may not be generally known that Mrs. Howe has written a number of patriotic lyrics hardly second in beauty to "The Battle Hymn of the Republic." The volume in which many of them appear was published in the exciting year following the war, when the nation was hardly in a condition to give the fullest appreciation to poetry. The edition of "Later Lyrics" was soon exhausted, however, and in a volume of poems to be brought out the present season will be included several of these earlier patriotic poems.

As an active worker in the American Peace Society, whose doctrines she has promulgated in public addresses, both in this country and in England and France, Mrs. Howe would naturally prefer arbitration to war, but if a wrong can be righted only by the sword there is no more earnest patriot than the author of the "Battle Hymn" in supporting the policy of her country.

THE BACHELOR GIRL.

A Matron's Lecture on the Most Independent Woman.

Woman is by nature dependent. Indeed, there is no such thing as an all-around independent woman. Few men are wholly independent. Many young women calling themselves girl bachelors think that they have sought and found real independence. These there are the aggressive spinsters who are firmly convinced that they alone of all womanhood are truly independent. They join in with the girl bachelors and pity their married sisters for being tied to a man. The married women do not answer them, for they are satisfied with their lot as a rule. And well they may be, for the most independent woman in the world is the woman who is not only married but also mated. Some people say that a woman poorly married is happier than the woman not married at all. A matron gave two girl bachelors some points along this line not long ago. They spoke to her in a rather patronizing way about her not being able to join in one of their larks because she was married; it was like touching a match to kerosene.

"Such talk shows your ignorance," she exclaimed in a tone that carried conviction. "You girls and your boasted independence afford me no end of amusement as well as food for serious thought. You see, I can read you like books because before my marriage I was an independent bachelor maid myself. I thought I wouldn't exchange my sweet liberty for the best husband and the finest home in the land, or, at least, I tried awfully hard to make myself believe that I believed just as you two girls and your kind are trying to do."

"Why, what do you mean?" asked one of the girl bachelors.

"Sour grapes," said the other, with a gesture of contempt.

"Merely this," answered the matron, "that it is against nature for woman to be wholly independent, and when we go against nature she squelches us in one way or another. Now you claim to be two girl bachelors, don't you? And you represent the two types of so-called independent women. One of you is independent by choice, the other through necessity. Fan has a very generous allowance, and she has elected to leave her home and spend her life in study and also to do absolutely as she pleases. Nell has been forced to leave her home and earn her own living, and she, too, has set her head to think, speak and act as she sees fit. There you are, and you are two out of thousands. You are both attractive to men and have had and now have no end of beaux, and you say that you can't fall in love with any of them, that you are proof against such nonsense, but I warn you you aren't. You are merely bent on shuttng love or anything like it out of your heart. Some day a man will come along who will drive such notions out of your head in a hurry."

"Bosh!" exclaimed the one called Fan. "You don't know what you are talking about. I lead a life of absolute independence, and the man doesn't walk the earth who could make me give it up."

"And so do I," chimed in Nell. "Them's my sentiments, too."

"It would be preposterous to say that the average bachelor girl is not independent in a way," answered the matron, serenely. "There are lots of meanings to the word independent, you know. I'll grant you that the bachelor girl is a creature of independent mind, of independent means, of independent manner, but she is not, never has been, and never will be independent when it comes to her heart, her affections. Man can do without love in this life, but woman can't. Not every man is subject to control by other people or things, but every woman is. The more a woman talks about her independence and brags of it and plumes herself on it, the more firmly am I convinced that at that very moment is this woman dependent for happiness on the affection of someone. Usually it is a man. Berate me all you have a mind to for speaking this way, but I am having the satisfaction of knowing that I am striking home. You see I was once a bachelor girl myself, and all of my friends said that I was a fool to give up my career and marry."

"Have you regretted it?" asked both girls.

"Well, I should say not," answered the matron. "There is only one truly independent life for a woman and that is a life with the man she loves. Love is the only thing that can set a woman free. An all-wise universal Father has made this so to preserve the race. I never knew what independence was until after I was married. Single women are apt to mistake license for independence. I know every trend of thought that the so-called bachelor girl, the so-called independent woman, has. She gets up early in the morning thoroughly in love with the lot she has chosen and starts out on her day's work. She meets rebuffs, gets discouraged, grows physically so weary that she longs to fly to some one who loves her better than all others, and have a good cry.

"It is simply because her woman's nature is revolting against a life of independent loneliness or lonely independence, just as you please to look at it. All that is best in her is stretching out after a home of her own, after family ties. When she made herself independent in mind, manners and finances, she enslaved her affections, chained them up, rendered them inert. No woman can be really independent until she unchains her affections and opens her heart to receive the love of some true man.

Dieser Tage brach im Dachstuhl des Schlesischen Bahnhofs ein Brand aus, der anfänglich große Dimensionen anzunehmen schien, aber doch bald von der eigenen Feuerwehr des Bahnhofes gelöscht wurde.—In der Jungfernhaide fand zwischen zwei Ausländern ein Pistolenduell statt, wobei der eine der Duellanten, ein Dr. Bajen aus Livland, einen Schuß in den Unterleib erhielt, in Folge dessen er bald darauf starb. Sein Gegner stellte sich dem Gericht.—Der Sitzungssaal des alten Reichstagshauses, in welchem so manche Redeschlacht ausgekämpft und so manches große gesetzgeberische Werk seine endgiltige Form erhalten hat, wird jetzt im Wege des Zeitungsinserates zum Verkauf angeboten. Es heißt darin, daß der 22:28 Meter große Saal „zum Wiederaufbau passend" sei. Wer weiß also, zu was für schönen Dingen er noch bestimmt ist.

Charlottenburg. Die fortgeschriebene Einwohnerzahl der Stadt betrug Anfangs Juni 168,258.

Mögelin. Hier erschlug der Blitz den Müller Zehle und das Dienstmädchen Schumacher.

Spandau. Bei dem hier abgehaltenen 13. brandenburgischen Provinzialbundesschießen errang Rentier Baer von Schöneberg, der schon auf dem dortigen Schützenfeste als Sieger hervorgegangen war, die Würde des Bundesschützenkönigs.

Provinz Hannover.

Hannover. Bei einem Schwimmfest in Schröders Badeanstalt an der Ihme stürzte neulich Abends eine Zuschauertribüne mit 50 Personen zusammen; 39 Personen, meist Frauen und Kinder, stürzten in den hochgeschwollenen Fluß und konnten nur mit Mühe gerettet werden.

Döhren. Auf dem Heimweg von fröhlichem Gelage gerieth der Arbeiter Weber von hier mit seinem Kollegen Voß in Streit und tödtete ihn durch zwei Stiche in's Herz. Der Thäter wurde, als man zu seiner Verhaftung schritt, in seiner Wohnung ruhig schlafend vorgefunden.

Provinz Hessen-Nassau.

Kassel. Eine hochherzige Stiftung hat Frau Kommerzienrath Henschel aus Anlaß der Vermählung ihres Sohnes den Beamten und Arbeitern der Henschel'schen Maschinenfabrik hier gemacht, indem sie 100,000 Mark zur Gründung einer Wittwenkasse für die Beamten und 100,000 Mark der Invaliden- und Wittwenkasse der Arbeiter überwies.

Fulda. In hiesiger Gegend findet sich die Kreuzotter in diesem Jahre häufiger vor und hat schon ein Opfer gefordert. Mehrere Kinder waren gemeinschaftlich in den Wald gegangen, um Heidelbeeren zu pflücken, als ein 12jähriger Knabe plötzlich von einer Kreuzotter in die Pulsader gebissen wurde und sofort in Ohnmacht fiel. Ein Kind eilte nach Hause und holte die Mutter, doch bei ihrem Eintreffen war der Knabe schon eine Leiche.

Provinz Pommern.

Stettin. Die im Bau begriffene, fast fertiggestellte Brücke über den Westendsee ist eingestürzt. Die neue Brücke war von der Firma Boswau u. Knauer-Berlin aus Cement und Eisendraht im Monier-System errichtet worden. Sie hatte eine Breite von 8.50 Metern und eine Bogenspannung von 36 bis 40 Metern. Glücklicher Weise wurde kein Mensch verletzt, denn sämmtliche Arbeiter hatten sich bereits von der Baustelle entfernt. Der durch den Einsturz entstandene Schaden beträgt etwa 50,000 Mark. Das Gewicht des Bogens beträgt etwa 16,000 Centner.

Dramburg. Auf der Chaussee zwischen hier und Callies sind Nachts die beiden Lehrer Münchow-Bramstädt und Zemcke-Jacobsdorf mit ihren Fahrrädern zusammengestoßen, wobei der Lehrer Münchow Ober- und Unterschenkelbrüche erlitt, während Zemcke an den Folgen des Sturzes, einer Gehirnerschütterung, am nächsten Tage starb.

Provinz Posen.

Posen. Der heurige polnische Aerzte-Kongreß ist endgiltig aufgegeben worden. Der nächste Kongreß wird 1900 in Krakau tagen und mit dem Universitätsjubiläum verbunden werden.

Gostyn. Mit den russischen Arbeitern machen die Arbeitgeber schlechte Erfahrungen. So sind von den auf dem im diesseitigen Kreise gelegenen Vorwerk Sikorzyn beschäftigten russischen Arbeitern drei von den im Kiesschacht Dominium Gola 14 heimlich entwichen.

Krone. Der Gefreite Kratzardt vom Jagdkommando des 129. Infanterie-Regiments ist beim Durchschwimmen der Brahe ertrunken.

A CIRCLE IN THE SAND

BY KATE JORDAN

AUTHOR OF "THE KISS OF GOLD" AND "THE OTHER HOUSE" ETC.

COPYRIGHT 1898 BY THE AUTHOR.

CHAPTER IX.

One morning late in January Anne opened the sheets of The Citizen and saw this item among the shipping news:

"Among the passengers on the Teutonic, which arrived in port last night, were Mrs. Lansius Ericsson and Miss Olga Ericsson. The latter is the latest of our young countrywomen to return to America with a London reputation for beauty."

Five days later Anne stepped from the raw afternoon into Dr. Ericsson's house. Her aunt had been in charge but a little while, yet the old house under her reign possessed what Anne felt it never could have had without her. A maid who was inoffensive of voice and light of step took up her card, an open fire invited her, the aromatic odor of green things growing in a winter room filled the air, the light was toned to a pale yellow, as if a sunset had happened prematurely. It was evident Mrs. Ericsson had a genius for selecting the salient requisites of an inviting home.

"Anne Garrick," said a languid voice behind her, "how d'you do?"

She turned to face the aunt she but faintly remembered, a small, nervous woman, pale haired, anxious eyed, so restless she seemed like one half pausing in a hurry before continuing the pursuit of something.

She gave Anne her pale cheek to kiss and exclaimed:

"How like your father. You're a Garrick. You are not a Gerard."

The inflection was disapproving. Anne felt guilty for not looking like her mother. She commenced an apology for not having called before, but with amazing irrelevancy Mrs. Ericsson darted for the door.

"Olga is up stairs. Come up. We've been waiting lunch for you for 15 minutes. It's all right, only with us every moment is of such importance. All the morning Olga has been trying on hats."

She turned at the top of the stairs, looking like a distracted sparrow.

"She won't have a hat without a brim. Did you ever hear anything like it? Felice came all the way from Madison avenue with ten hats, all close fitting, and we begged her to try one. She wouldn't, not if I went on my knees. Olga can be so set. Try and talk her over to a toque. It's simply madness to insist on a brim when nobody is wearing one."

Again Anne felt like a culprit. The felt and feather creation on her head had a brim. Useless to expect to find favor in her aunt's eyes, since, looking like her father, she came wearing a big hat.

"Here's Anne Garrick at last." And Mrs. Ericsson entered a big bay windowed room as inviting as fluted swiss curtains and pale green appointments could make it.

A young woman was beside a window, a manicure set spread out on a small table before her, and she was examining a pink nail, much as a jeweler does the springs of a watch.

"You dear thing! How are you?" she said, going to meet Anne, and they kissed each other.

"Let me look at you, Olga," said Anne, turning her to the light. "I've heard you are beautiful. Mr. Tinkle, our society editor, saw you at the opera last night and has talked about you all the morning."

Olga lifted her head lazily in a challenging way and with a purring laugh.

"Upon my word, fancy," she said with an English accent as Anne looked at her. "What do you think? Am I?"

"Yes, you are."

Few women could have welcomed criticism in that green toned setting and raw light. The two emphatic qualities of Olga's beauty, etherealness and delicacy, did not suffer. She was extraordinarily white. The skin on supple throat and quiet cheek was of almost silvery pallor. Moonlight seemed bathing her pale blond hair. Her greenish gray eyes were dreamy, the pupils large; her upper lip very short, full and coral pink. "A moonlight maid," the artists in Paris had called her. There was not a heavy note in her coloring. The blond brilliancy of some Swedish ancestor lived again in her, some "flower of northern snows," and with it the delicate American features of her mother. She was of average height, and though slight her body had a delicate robustness. She wore a white flannel robe loosely belted, and her hair hung in a plait to her waist.

"You don't mind my going to the table this way? I am lazy, but we are en famille," she said, strolling into the hall. "Mamma hates me to do it, but I simply cannot dress for lunch. I'm as stiff as a German cavalryman all the afternoon and night. I must have a little freedom."

In the dining room they found Dr. Ericsson. He drew Anne to him and gave her a bearlike hug.

"Is this your debut as a family man?" she asked.

"No, my second appearance. I'm getting used to the limelight. I met David Temple coming up town last night and prevailed on him to dine with us."

"What a charming man he is," exclaimed Mrs. Ericsson, and from the commencement of the meal, with short intervals of rest, Anne was put through a catechism by her aunt about David Temple. Her tongue played between her lips restlessly, while David's position, money, character and possible attachments were inquired after minutely and with an appraiser's air. When the cross examination was finished, Anne had a feeling that David had been ticketed and put away with other ticketed matrimonial possibilities.

The pauses in this research were filled in by a recital of Olga's past and coming triumphs, what she must and must not do, who was worth her knowing and who was not.

Anne was glad to get back to the green and white room, the door closed, and only Olga there, looking at her with amused eyes.

"Look here, Anne, isn't she harrowing? Do you wonder how I stand it? There ought to be a law for the suppression of uncongenial relations. Mamma is really impossible."

She flung herself into a rocker and took one foot into the embrace of her hand. Suddenly she burst out laughing.

"Anne Garrick, you've a very expressive face. You don't envy me, although I'm a beauty and the only daughter of an adoring mother."

She took a thin cigarette from a silver box on the table.

"Have one? You don't smoke? You don't know what a comfort it is."

"But doesn't your mother object?" asked Anne, making herself comfortable among a heap of cushions.

"Of course. What doesn't she object to? She doesn't want me to eat potatoes lest they make me fat nor to take cold baths, because they make me blue. She rubs my nose hard every night, because one little pink vein—see it—shows. She almost cries when I do my hair high and takes to her bed if I insist on more than one cup of coffee. I am not allowed to spend a penny as I please nor to have an original idea about a gown or hat. In fact, I'm my mother's stock in hand, which she is always polishing, preserving, eying. It's very trying. Shall I tell you how I manage to endure this continual censorship mixed with servile worship—for mamma does adore me? A pioneer never regarded a finished cabin, every stick of which had been laid by his own hands, with more satisfaction than she does me. She does not seem to give papa any share in my being at all."

"I think I know what your tactics are," said Anne, scrutinizing her good humoredly. "You're very soft and white. You seem to move in an atmosphere of amiability, but I have not forgotten your early propensity for sticking pins nor the educated way your little nails could scratch. You could scratch still, Olga, if that were necessary, but you have found a surer way of gaining your way."

"You've hit it. What's the use of continual dispute? Why worry this one little life out of yourself? You want your own way—take it. Be attentive to all the rules laid down for your conduct, then ignore them and smile. When you're found out and reproaches are showered on you, think of something else or go to sleep."

She lit another cigarette with a ruminative expression and clasped her hands behind her head. The look in her eyes was like that of a mild baby trying to diagnose a sunbeam.

"Really, you know, if mamma would only rest her tired little body and head and leave me to myself she'd be very wise. She has nothing to fear from me. I know what's expected of me. We're poor; worse, we're in debt. She lives in perpetual dread of my marrying a poor man. Could anything be more absurd? Nothing in the world will ever be as dear to me as my personal comfort. For a girl to go into business life as you have done, making her own way, working, struggling, is beyond my understanding. Some one must always support me, Anne, and support me well."

"I wonder you came back to America without a title or at least a fortune."

"I could have married money several times, and a lot of it," said Olga, "but unfortunately I distinctly disliked the men. It wouldn't do to marry a man you couldn't for the life of you be civil to. Would it?"

"Oh, I don't know! Aren't you oversensitive?"

The laughter in Anne's tone did not disturb Olga. She pursed out her lips and nodded.

"I almost caught a title too. This is the way I missed it. For one thing, mamma's eagerness frightened him. I'm sure he could see her shake as soon as he appeared. I'm sure he saw her nudge me. But that wouldn't have seriously mattered if he hadn't found me out."

Her lips curled in a one sided smile.

"I can laugh now, but really it was provoking at the time. Val—dear thing he was—hated the least touch of unconventionality in a woman, and smoking he considered only a little better than swearing. By the way, I'm telling you the truth about myself, Anne. It's such a relief to tell it. I never do except to relatives. With men it's impossible not to pose; they expect so much. Well, my dear, I posed for Val for six long, weary months. I played the little lamb, always with a bit of needlework, practicing the Madonna gaze, taking only one glass of champagne at dinners and declining cigarettes with a shy, reproachful glance. He used to tell me I was his ideal, that it seemed profane to love me, that nature knew what she was about when she fashioned me like an angel, etc. One day he walked into Moriey's, where I was having my portrait done, and found me with Mrs. Sutton Vane, a little monkey of a woman with a fast manner, and whom he particularly detested. We had a bet on as to which could blow the roundest rings of smoke. I, his Madonna, his angel, his snow flower, won, while he, unseen by me, watched. Sudden business called him away next day, business so absorbing he never came back. Mamma has sat up nights with her finger to her forehead wondering why. I am all blank amazement when the subject is broached. And here endeth the romance of Lord Valentine Dunwearthy. It went up in smoke."

"You weren't a bit in love with him?"

"In love? No. I never loved anything but this. Listen!"

She went to the mirror and looked into it steadily for a moment, then turned to Anne, her whole expression changed. The laziness of glance vanished. She flung up her head and laughed joyously. To Anne's amaze the lines from "The Merchant of Venice" where Portia decides to masquerade as a man left her lips, at first tenderly, with half hidden laughter, as a schoolgirl confides a secret, then with assurance, a pretty swagger, delighted anticipation.

Anne listened in wonder. The room seemed to fade, the clatter from the street became unreal, and it was not Olga who stood before her. It was Portia glittering in queenliness and coquetry, the perfume of an Italian garden coming in with the sunset, a minstrel lounging near her, swords distantly clanking as waiting gallants moved. Her voice had power and sweetness. Her awakened face sparkled changefully. She seemed possessed of a soul with wings struggling to be free.

When the last word was spoken, she sank down by Anne's side and seized her hand.

"You liked it. I see you did."

"Oh, where have you had the chance"—

"Didn't you know they went wild in London society over my Constance in 'The Love Chase?' I played it at a dozen houses for various charities. Oh, the stage! That would make poverty endurable. The life calls me, Anne. I know its disadvantages, no one better, but it's a rare lot when you feel your fitness for it. I'll never do more than dabble with it for amusement, but if I could — if I'd been free to do as I pleased, the world would have heard of me. Here's mamma," she broke off, the light leaving her face. "She's coming with hot milk to give me a face bath. By the way, she loathes acting, even my amateur work, but I've already made arrangements with Mrs. Oswald Morse to do Kate Hardcastle at Tuxedo for the Working Girls' library fund. She'd have palpitation of the heart if she knew it. I'll tell her the day before."

Anne left her in her mother's hands over a basin of steaming milk. The meeting had left a unique and emphatic impression on Anne.

"A woman with a thistle down conscience, a woman to pick the plums from life with soft, businesslike fingers and an indifferent air, 5 feet 5 of radiant selfishness—that's my cousin Olga," she thought as she went down the street, "but I like her."

CHAPTER X.

Olga appeared as Kate Hardcastle at Tuxedo, and the town, or that part of it circling in carefully barred orbit, talked of her. The papers seized on her as something new and printed pictures of her as a beauty, libelous things in which she looked dropsical or murderous or only harmlessly mad. Mrs. Ericsson kept the reporters well informed, fumed over the newspaper abortions of her darling, went with her everywhere, to noon breakfasts, to dances ending at dawn, and in asides took pills to stay her heart.

Every one knew that Smedley Joyce, who had met Olga in London, had been her sponsor in the best society. In his sister's box at the opera she had made her first appearance in New York. He had got invitations for her, given a luncheon in her honor, and at his rooms on Fifth avenue, at a tea where a rajah in a marvelous turban winked his brilliant eyes, David Temple saw her again.

There are some men one cannot disassociate from the names upon their visiting cards. Smedley Joyce was one of these. Smedley, even to his intimates, seemed an impertinence and Mr. Joyce commonplace. He was his full name, from the glittering apex of his bald crown to the toe of his equally glittering boot. If he could, he would have been lighter, younger and with the lungs of a football half back, but just as he was people deferred to him. Hopelessly devoted to a single life, his cult, however, was feminine beauty, and the woman he admired became the fashion. The personality of Smedley Joyce pervaded New York. He was a permanent fad; his vogue was unquestioned, like the Thanksgiving turkey and the horse show.

In the fragrance and dusk of his beautiful rooms he seized David's hand in greeting and gave it the fashionable upward jerk.

"Ah, you did get up to see us, you dreadfully busy man! You'd make us forget you if that were possible." And David found himself passed on to make room for the next comer.

He declined tea from the matrons receiving and kept near the door. He had come in only for a few moments to see the rajah and talk with him. As he stood there, his big shoulders and keen face showing clearly above those surrounding him, he looked across the whispering, constantly changing crowd for the famous Hindoo.

Close by the big, yawning leaves of palms screening the zither players he saw him. The lean brown profile with the huge crimson turban above was bending over some one. It was Olga. When the crowd parted, David saw her plainly.

She was on a low seat beside a pink lamp, her mother, now chatting at a little distance, having early seen the advantage of the rosy light. She was in velvet and furs, her lips under a delicate veil lazily smiling. A hat with a brim, and a big one, shadowed her eyes and gave them deeper mystery. Her pose was regal, gentle. The upward glances given to the rajah were lazy, provoking. Her delicate lips were humid with a childish sensuousness.

No wonder David and a dozen other men who watched her came to the same decision—she was beautiful, loving, gentle, true. She seemed the sort of woman men so frequently choose as a wife and never as a comrade; a helpless, fascinating, fastidious creature whose eyes express the words: "Tell me, dear, just what to do. You know so much better than I;" not a woman of original opinions on anything under the sun; as conventional in thought as in the way she wore her hair; not tailor made, independent or athletic; one whose gowns were always marvels to men's eyes, fragrant mysteries of lace and ribbons; a woman to love ease and cushions and never remember an address, to coo to a baby, crave needlework and dabble in charity, altogether a seductive contrast to the restless spirit of a man's business life.

Her physical radiance came upon David for the second time with the power of a summons. He had frequently thought of her since the previous meeting. No one who once saw Olga ever quite forgot her. Side by side with the fancy of what Elaine might have been her lovely face, rare in type, took its place.

He made his way to her and she gave him her hand, sinking back in a lazy attitude. The rajah was forgotten by him, and they talked of many things, of trifles mostly, but Olga had a way of making light talk entrancing. Her speech was pretty and her laziness wrapped a listener with a sense of magnetic quiet.

Growing more serious, she questioned David about The Citizen, of Anne's position in the office and spoke in an attractively feminine way of the mystery attending the making of a newspaper.

"How can Anne do it?" she said, smoothing her muff, her trustful eyes lifted to his. "Oh, I suppose I'm stupid, helpless, but I shouldn't like such a life of tension and rush; always among the wheels—that's how it seems to me. I'm afraid I'd be like a silly butterfly caught in a machine."

"Anne's desires are different from yours," said David, and the perfume of the violets under her chin lightened his heart as if the shade of spring had passed him. He looked at her almost tenderly. "Yours are better."

"Think so?"

"Better for a woman," he said softly. "I think so, but perhaps I'm intolerant, perhaps I'm old fashioned. I admire Anne, and I like her more than I can say. I like many women who hold her ambitious views, but they seem to me to gain brilliancy and self reliance at the sacrifice of a quality that is beautiful and indefinable, like a mist or a perfume."

"And you don't despise a woman who likes needlework?" asked Olga, as if confessing to one of her pet diversions, "who doesn't belong to a woman's club, who cries over a novel and maybe not one of the best?"

"God forbid!" said David vehemently. "Soon she'll be found only among obsolete classifications. I, for one, intend to extol her before she quite disappears."

"Dear me!" she said, with low laughter. "I almost feel the pin through me now, as I repose in a glass case labeled in black and white, 'Rare specimen of woman belonging to the remote era, when she did nothing but try to be happy and was glad of it.'"

She gave him her hand.

She leaned toward David as she spoke, and some one brushing past her to greet a friend forced her closer, so for a second her shoulder pressed his, her lips were an inch away, her warm, startled breath swept his throat. It was but a second's nearness, yet his heart gave a throb of almost savage joy. In a flash her beauty became a temptation, a passionate happiness filled him, a breeze seemed to sweep along his nerves, and he knew why an unexplained joy had come to him with the first sight of this woman's face.

With her arrival his senses had struggled to awaken as at a call. Now there was no resisting the feeling. It was a quick, complete fascination. Conscious of it, he grew silent and looked at Olga with new vision.

He felt how apart from all others is the moment when a man first faces the question placed before him by his own consciousness, "Is this the woman I am to love?" It may be he awakens to the truth slowly after she has passed through the changes from stranger to nearest friend. Or one look into an unfamiliar face may blur all save the pursuing newness of that one truth. The moment is the same—oversweet, painful, intimately dear, never to be forgotten.

There was no chance for further talk between them. Smedley Joyce bore down on Olga with a monocled stranger in tow. A moment afterward a famous singer was announced. Every one knew it was Smedley Joyce's law that the music for which he paid so much should be respected, and silence save for an occasional whisper and rustle settled upon the crowd as the singer appeared.

She was pale, with heavy lidded, sad eyes. A white gown draped her thin form. Roses flamed in her girdle. Her contralto voice was strange, unearthly, as she sang in a whisper of the heart wrung damosel who watched from heaven. She sang of love with death closely following. Her fingers moved slowly; she seemed talking to the keys:

"I wish that he were come to me—
For he will come," she said.
"Have I not prayed in heaven? On earth,
Lord, Lord, has he not prayed?
Are not two prayers a perfect strength,
And shall I be afraid?

"There will I ask of Christ the Lord
This much for him and me—
Only to live as once on earth,
With love; only to be,
As then awhile, forever now
Together, I and he."

Music had never moved David Temple like that strange song. It saddened his heart, while his brain was ravished with a sense of its beauty. It gave to the new passion thrilling him an ideality which it did not possess.

He looked at Olga, hoping for one glance, but she was sitting with her head turned away, her eyes on the singer, waiting for the next song. David wanted to hear no more. He wished to keep the memory of that cry of human need, holding an echo as if caught in the far spaces of heaven, to knit it with the revelation of the hour.

Outside he found the dusk and the icy air. There was a medley of cold colors in the sky, the solemn night was near, the avenue veiled in gray. He hurried on, feeling a new happiness tempered by the pain of uncertainty. Questions troubled him. Was this really love? Was his hand upon the string from which so many marvelous strains and pitiful discords had been struck?

He had always calmly and remotely contemplated the rounding of his life with a great love, but something in him had heretofore disdained sentiment. At its best it had seemed a majestic weakness, commonly only a ridiculous thing. He had known perfect friendship, but the love he had seen make fools of the wise, turn the flow of a life completely out of its course, had seemed as removed from him as insanity until tonight.

He still felt the touch of Olga's body, the violet's perfume no sweeter than her breath.

Only to live as once on earth
With love * * *

"As once on earth!" There was rapturous memory of a joy he had never known in those words. Their burden of passionate melody went with him like the voice of conscience. He saw only Olga's inviting eyes.

SARGENT'S PORTRAIT OF DUSE.

When Eleanor Duse first went to act in London one of the men who admired her talents most was John Sargent, the American artist. He saw her in all the roles she acted, and determined if it were possible to paint a portrait of her. It required some diplomacy to make the Italian actress pose for her portrait. Finally this was accomplished, and one day Mr. Sargent had the satisfaction of seeing Duse in his studio. But her attitude was not encouraging even then. She dropped into a chair with an air of fatigue. There was not the least pretence of pose in her attitude. She sat as any woman might have done who was weary and ill. "Now paint me," was the enthusiastic phrase in which she submitted herself to the distinguished artist's brush.

Duse sat for more than an hour. Then she left without any particular understanding as to the time when she would return. Before she left London, Mr. Sargent received a note in which she said that she was very sorry, but that it would be impossible for her to go to his studio again. She was tired, she said, and overworked, and would have to give up the idea of the portrait. In a few days she returned to Italy.

When she consented to pose for him, Duse had very little idea of Mr. Sargent's eminence. Her contact with the world outside of her own country had, indeed, been slight until the time she came to the United States.

But after a while she came to know more about the celebrated people of other countries and she learned of Mr. Sargent's reputation. So when she got to Italy again he received a note from her. In it she wrote that if he could ever come to Venice sometime when she was not acting, she would be happy to pose for him until he finished the portrait. She said that she would have plenty of leisure then and that he could have as many sittings as he wanted.

He Convinced the Duke.

During his visit to the United States the late Duke of Marlborough was making a tour of inspection over one of the Chicago cable lines, and came across a cable-car driver, who was a typical Yankee, born and bred in the State of Connecticut.

"Can you stop the car quickly?" asked His Grace.

"I jist reckon ye kin bet yer life I can, Mister Duke."

"How soon?"

"In 'bout two yards," replied the Yankee.

"Nonsense!" sharply exclaimed His Grace. The next moment the Duke was busy picking himself out of a small sandbank by the side of the track, into which the abrupt stoppage of the car had thrown him. As he quietly brushed himself, the Yankee smiled and remarked: "I hope yer ain't hurt, Mr. Duke! Gee [illegible] think I kin stop her suddint [illegible] yer?"

MILLIONS TO BURN.

HOW UNCLE SAM DISPOSES OF SOILED AND MUTILATED BILLS.

Every Day Different Banks Throughout the Country Send Packages to the U. S. Treasury for Redemption—Two-fifths of a Note Can Be Redeemed.

A million dollars a day. This is the amount that Uncle Sam makes away with. Every piece of money which becomes too dirty or too dilapidated for use may be presented to the United States Treasury for redemption. Each day there is sent from the different banks throughout the country, fully a million dollars' worth of this soiled or torn paper. Every bundle of money received is turned over to an expert, who, after carefully counting and inspecting the notes to see that no counterfeits are among them, places them together in small packages, and marks on the wrapper the amount contained in each bundle. They are then passed under a machine which punches a hole in each corner of every package; and cut into halves, lengthwise, one-half is sent to one division and the remaining half to another, to be recounted by two other people. All counts must tally with each other before the bills are ready for destruction.

The next move is to transport the money to the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, where it is reduced to pulp by what is called maceration. Into an immense revolving cylinder containing several disintegrating chemicals, the bills are thrown. The pulp thus produced is pressed into sheets, which strongly resemble white cardboard. This substance, which is used for various purposes, such as newspapers, writing paper, and souvenirs, is sold by the Government for about $40 a ton, the money received paying the entire expenses of maceration.

The only kind of money not destroyed at the Bureau of Engraving and Printing is that issued by National Banks. These notes are not taken charge of by those having the care of bank currency. Every afternoon these bills, representing from a hundred thousand to half a million dollars, are destroyed in the basement of the Treasury Building. The door of the maceration room is secured by huge padlocks, and can be opened only by the three officials who hold the keys.

Nothing less than two-fifths of a note will be redeemed. To the holder of this fraction of a bill, the Government will allow half of the original face value. For three-fifths of a note, full value will be given.

It occasionally happens that scraps of bills which have been almost entirely destroyed by fire, or otherwise, are presented for redemption. So expert are some of the Treasury clerks in determing to what special note, or kind of note a scrap of money belongs, that the owner of the damaged bills usually receive some considerable part of their face value. A majority of the Government clerks are women, who are said to be more honest and trustworthy than men, besides having in a more marked degree the delicacy of touch required for the detection of bad money.

Some of these women are the most expert and accurate counters and detectors in the world. Their sense of touch is so highly educated that the instant they pass a bill through their fingers they know whether it is a genuine or a bogus note.—J. C. Henderson, in Success.

Feeding Plants Artificially.

A French horticulturist, M. George Truiffent, gives artificial food to plants in the following manner: "After an analysis of the ash of the living plant, the necessary salts for a given time, such as six months, are weighed out and inclosed in a metal cover to form what is called a 'pill,' which is presumably inserted in the pot, diffusion of the salts taking place through the folds of the metal, and the thicker the metal the slower the diffusion. As the salts dissolve and disappear they are replaced by a core which expands until it completely fills the 'pill' The salts have no action on the metal cover, which remains firm and hard. It is stated that the solubility of the salts can be so regulated that a 'pill' may be made to last three or six months, as may be desired. By this method of feeding, large well-colored plants are grown in pots of less than half the usual size."—New York Journal.

Jean Ingelow as a Child.

Miss Jean Ingelow came of a clever family, and when she and her brothers and sisters were children they got up a little magazine of their own, the type being set by school-fellows of her brothers at the house of their clergyman-schoolmaster, who owned a small printing machine. As a child she used also to write poems on the inside of the shutters of her bedroom window, of all odd places, and after they were one day accidentally discovered by her mother some of them found their way into print. A peculiar feature about Miss Ingelow's life was that she never entered a theatre, and an equally remarkable one about herself was that she could remember events in her life from the time she was 17 months old.

Not Afraid of Lightning.

Smith—I was reading in the paper this morning about a Texas man who was struck by lightning while he was swearing. Remarkable occurrence, wasn't it?

Brown—Oh, I don't know. If lightning was to strike a Texas man when he wasn't swearing it would be much more remarkable.—Chicago News.

CYCLING COMMENT.

Harry F. Cuming and Albert Schomp, of this city, will ride their wheels to Asbury Park tomorrow, where they will remain for a short time.

PASSING COMMENT

Things that Are Not Exactly News but Just as Interesting.

One of the indignities that a boarder is obliged to put up with at the city jail, when locked up in a cell, is a swarm of fleas that have their abiding place on dogs kept by Warden Martin. It is said that City Judge DeMeza instructed Martin that he must keep his canines out of the cells at all times and especially when they are empty. Martin is a great lover of dogs and keeps a number of them. It is quite enough to ask a prisoner to stop temporarily with bugs, but when he is subjected to a flee pest, it is almost too much to inflict on any one. It is said that Martin allows his dogs to roam about the jail and sleep in the cells at will. This practice is rather dangerous in very warm weather and complaints have already been made concerning the nuisance.

thought it was a wrong thing to increase Mr. Murray's salary.

Mr. Buckle also took exception to the raise of $100 in Mr. Murray's salary, and stated that there are others who deserve honors as well as Mr. Murray. He said that he could not vote in the affirmative on the subject unless he knew something more definite about the matter.

This ventilation of the subject resulted in the matter being laid over until the next meeting. Mr. Jennings was confirmed as second assistant at a salary of $600 a year, while Mr. Murray was made first assistant and for the present his salary was left as it is.

Andrew J. Gavett, as a member of the Board of Health, tendered his resignation on account of increased duties as street commissioner, and the same was accepted.

In conclusion, Mr. Hetfield offered a resolution that it be the sense of the Council that Messrs. Tier and Hubbard, the two local members of the Board of Freeholders, do not concur with the other members of the Board in opposing the granting of the trolley franchise on Richmond street as proposed by the Council. This resolution was adopted and copies were ordered sent to the two members. The meeting then adjourned to Monday evening, August 29th.

The streets in this city claimed as county roads by the Union County Board of Freeholders include North avenue, Richmond street and East Third street. These are the streets against which the Board has filed a remonstrance regarding the construction of a trolley road by parties not sanctioned by the Board of Freeholders. The Board claim the streets under the county road act adopted last winter at Trenton.

—At the Christian church on Grove street, near Front, tonight, Elder S. B. Horton will preach on the subject, "The Foundation of the Church," and Thursday evening the subject will be "Original Christianity and the Counterfeit." GRAND HOTEL MURDER.

Dr. Kennedy Held for the Crime—Police Haven't Solved the Mystery.

(Special to the Daily Press.)

New York, August 17.—Dr. Samuel J. Kennedy, the dentist of New Dorp, S. I., who was arrested last night on suspicion of having caused the death of Emeline C. Reynolds, who was murdered yesterday in the Grand Hotel, was arraigned in the West Side Court this morning, on an affidavit sworn to by Capt. Price, charging him with homicide.

When brought before Magistrate Simms, Dr. Kennedy said he had nothing to say, and was held without bail for examination Friday morning at half-past nine o'clock. He was then taken to police headquarters.

Assistant District Attorney O'Reilly accompanied the prisoner to headquarters, and, after a short stay in the Detective Bureau, came out and said there was no necessity for making a chemical examination of Dr. Kennedy's clothing.

In his opinion the case against the prisoner was perfectly clear, and he was going to take the case before the Grand Jury at once.

It is said by the police that a letter was found among Kennedy's effects showing that he had an appointment with the murdered woman, and that she was to register at the Grand Hotel as "E. Maxwell and wife," which she did.

He has told several stories as to his whereabouts Monday night, but was fully identified last night by several persons as the man who was at the Grand Hotel with Miss Reynolds.

WHAT WOMEN CAN DO.

They Evidently Carry Much Influence in the Political Circle.

Presidents have not been fortunate in nominating members of their Cabinets to the United States Suprême bench. Twice since the war the Senate has refused to confirm the nomination of an Attorney-General to be a Justice. One nomination of a Cabinet officer to the bench led to a grievous scandal, which is part of the history of Washington official life. The nomination was no sooner made than there began to circulate anonymous letters intended to effect the rejection. These letters were sent to Senators and to members of the Supreme Court. They did not impugn the character of the Cabinet officer who had been nominated. They assailed his wife. They contained charges such as if true must array the other Justices and their families against the proposed member. The Supreme Court circle is as much a part of Washington society as the Supreme Court is of Washington official life. A nominee for the bench fares badly at the hands of the Senate if he or his wife is persona non grata to the court or the court circle. Senators listen to the judgment of the Justices upon the qualifications of the man who is about to join them if confirmed. These anonymous letters were as vile and vengeful as only a woman could make them. They were traced by a third woman, who prided herself on her detective powers, to the socially jealous wife of another member of the Cabinet. To this day no one can tell how far those letters exercised influence in the rejection which followed.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

An Angel Child.

A boy three and one-half years old, of very poor parents, so poor that each child (no matter how small) had certain work to do, was required to bring in the kindling wood each day, relates Harper's Bazar. One Sunday he did not seem inclined to do his work. At last his mother spoke to him and said: "Graham, why don't you bring in your wood? All the others will have their work done before you start." The boy sat still. His mother added: "Graham, why don't you obey? Go at once!"

Then the real reason came out.

"To-day is Sunday," the lad replied, "and I won't work. I am going to heaven, if the rest of the family don't."

KNEW HIM BY COLOR OF HIS EYES.

The Young Man Proved That Steel Gray Ones Could be Relied Upon.

Colonel Ford generally judged of a man's military qualities by his eye. A young man who had graduated from Oberlin College, actuated by a spirit of adventure, drifted to Brownsville and found himself stranded. In the latter condition he walked to Colonel Ford's camp, about six miles south of the city, and, addressing himself to the commander, said:

"Colonel, I have nothing to do, and want to join the Rangers."

"I like the color of your eyes, and will give you an opportunity to distingush yourself," the colonel replied, after gazng carefully into the eyes of the young man, which were steel gray.

The next day the young ranger was sent to Brownsville with dispatches. Returning he captured a noted Mexican desperado, who had slain several Americans and for a long time had eluded the Rangers. The Oberlin boy brought the desperado to the Colonel, who said:

"I don't care to see him."

"Come along," said the ranger, addressing his prisoner, whom he forced to go in front of him until they entered a small patch of chapparral in which they disappeared. A moment later a shot was heard. It was the death knell of the Mexican criminal. The classical young ranger returned to the Colonel's camp and reported:

"Escaped."

"'Tis well," was the Colonel's reply.

In those days, when the road to civilization had to be blazed with the six-shooter or carved with the sword, the trial of desperados was deemed impracticable, unwise and without good results.—Dallas News.

ALTOGETHER TOO POLITE.

Person in Charge Was Not Accustomed to Such Accomplishments.

A respectable married couple who had come down in the world obtained work in a Lancashire factory, and, in order that their little boy might not be neglected during their absence, placed him under the care of a professional 'minder," who had upward of thirty other children to look after. At the end of the first day, however, the temporary mother declared that she could mind the child no longer, and asked the newcomers to take him away.

"What for, Mrs. C?" inquired the astonished father. "Has he been very troublesome?"

"Oh, no, it ain't that," answered the female. "He ain't been a bad 'un—he's too much t'other way. He's too bloomin' polite."

"But, surely, you don't object to that?"

"Yes, I do," was the firm response. "I can stand a kid axin questions when he wants to know sommat; but when he says 'Beg parding' every time he treads on t' cat's tail and tells ye he's very much obleeged for every little thing at's done for him, I draws the line. I can't stomach it—it sounds too unearthly for me."

And in spite of all persuasions the "minder" refused to undertake the further custody of a child who showed such abnormal elegance.—Weekly Telegraph.

Barnacles on Metal Ships

In the old days of wooden ships the boring insects which live in wood were their chief foes. Teakwood acquired its reputation as a shipbuilding material because of its supposed immunity from these vermin.

Steel ships suffer from barnacles, which foul their bottoms much more rapidly than they do wooden ones. These strange marine growths are sometimes as big as one's fist and adhere to the metal plates with tremendous force, and besides impeding the ship themselves they catch sea grass and other rubbish and drag it through the water.

When a dry dock is not available metal ships have to have their bottoms cleaned by divers. When the battleship Massachusetts was recently cleaned barnacles and grass covered her hull to such an extent that she could not have made more than ten and one-half knots an hour.—Chicago Times-Herald.

A New Definition of Mercy.

A short time ago an old darkey who had been a frequenter of the Hustings Court for years, was before that court as a prisoner. His face was as serious as if he knew that the sentence of death was to be pronounced upon him. When the evidence was given in the Judge questioned him as follows:

"Old man, have you a lawyer?"

With a look of abject pity on his face and a silent plea for mercy depicted in his countenance, he said:

"No, suh, I ain't got no lawyer, cause I didn't had no money for to git a lawyer wid."

"Well, what have you got to say for yourself?" asked the Judge.

"I ain't got nothin' to say, suh, cep'n to jes throw myself on the ig'nunce o' de cote."—Nashville American.

A Thoughtful Little Girl.

All Boston children are thoughtful, it was a dear, thoughtful little Boston girl who, when told by her mother of the death of a grandmother she greatly loved, sat silent a while, and then, looking up, said: "Mamma, what time did grandma die?"

"At 4 o'clock in the afternoon," was the answer.

Again the little girl lapsed into mournful silence, until, as though a ray of sunshine had broken through the gloomy cloud, she devoutly exclaimed: "Then I'm so thankful she had dinner first!"—Buffalo Commercial.

CITY AND COUNTY TROLLEY

The Common Council Think They Have The Best of The Contention.

HAVE POWER TO REFUSE THE RIGHT OF WAY.

Councilmen Say That The Squire Law Protects the Interests of the City Against County Aggression—Freeholders Position May Mean a Long-Drawn-Out Fight.

In this, the dull season of the year, Plainfield is suddenly confronted with a situation that promises to be of great interest to every citizen of Plainfield. A conflict seems imminent between the Common Council of the city and the Board of Chosen Freeholders of Union county. The Board claims certain streets in Plainfield as part of the county road system and holds that the Common Council has no right to give any trolley company permission to lay tracks on those thoroughfares. The Council, in turn, holds the balance of power in regard to the proposed county trolley scheme for, according to law, the permission of the governing Council must first be obtained. Objection by the Freeholders may result in retaliation by the Common Council and a dead-lock may be the ultimate finish.

Now everybody who is at all posted on the present status of trolley affairs in this section knows that the Bergen county trolley scheme are not exactly hand and glove with the capitalists who comprise the Elizabeth and Westfield Street Railway Company and the Plainfield Street Railway Company. In fact there has been constant skirmishing by both sides who were always on the lookout to slap their opponents by some well-timed move. Much of the opposition to the county boulevard and trolley line, it is said, came from these trolley corporations and their friends along the line. While, on the face of it, that has nothing to do with the present state of affairs, yet it virtually becomes a contest between the county trolley line and the private corporation's proposed route.

While the present situation burst so unexpectedly in the faces of the Councilmen, the circumstances that led up to it are, many of them, of long standing. At a recent meeting of the Legislature, it will be remembered, the State legislators gave to the chosen freeholders of the different counties the power to designate certain roads in their county as county roads, giving them the same power over them as the county roads regularly constructed by the county authorities.

A short time ago, when the county boulevard and trolley line was being agitated, an act was introduced and finally passed, giving the chosen freeholder power to widen, change the course and grade of all county roads and also to grant to some corporation, for such compensation as they might see fit, the franchise for the trolley line.

This franchise, as has already been told in The Daily Press, was sold to John Kean for $250,000 by the Board of Freeholders at a meeting last Monday afternoon.

Now part of the course of this county trolley was through the city of Plainfield, entering on North avenue and following that thoroughfare through to Richmond street and thence to East Third street, ending at the North avenue station. At a meeting of the Board, these portions of the streets named were designated as county roads according to the county road act already mentioned. This, in fact, was done several months ago.

Now there never was much publicity about it and the city went on caring for those so-called "county roads," the county authorities making no effort to take charge of them. Plainfield people, with a few exceptions, were ignorant of any change.

It is over a year since the Elizabeth and Westfield Street Railway Company tried to get a line through from Scotch Plains to Plainfield. They accomplished their part of it, getting the necessary permission as far as the city line. Since then the Plainfield Street Railway Company has been endeavoring to connect its present line with the Scotch Plains branch.

After various attempts at different routes, the Company and the Council, together with a sufficient number of the property owners, seemed to favor a line starting from the city line on East Second street and coming west to Richmond street and thence to East Fifth street, connecting with the present line of the Street Railway Company. The ordinance was introduced and came up for second reading at the meeting of the Common Council Tuesday night.

There are a large majority of the citizens of Plainfield who favor the idea of the county trolley. That is, they like the general scheme. Nobody expected, however, to see any trouble between the Common Council and the Board of Freeholders.

The communication from the Board of Freeholders, made through their attorney, former Assemblyman W. R. Codington, Tuesday evening, was brief and rather suggestive. To the surprised Councilmen it sounded ominous. It stated that Richmond street, between North avenue and East Third street, is a county road, having been designated so by the Board according to the county road act. It also stated that the Board would oppose and fight any effort to place a trolley on that part of the street without first obtaining the consent of the Board.

Now the communication did not say whether that suggested permission would be granted. Most of the Councilmen are inclined to think that it meant that it would not, else why the notice. One of them placed the burden of the note as saying to the Council "That's our road, keep off."

It is needless to say that there was a decided interest shown in the matter by the Councilmen. Councilman Barrows, chairman of the street committee, who has thus been personally identified with the negotiations with the trolley company, feels very strongly on the subject. He does not think that the county officials have the constitutional right to thus dictate to the city authorities just what they may and may not do on certain of the city's streets.

The only formal vote on the subject, showing the opinion of the Councilmen, was that on the resolution offered by Mr. Hetfield that it was the sense of the Council that Messrs. Tier and Hubbard, the local members of the Board of Freeholders, do not concur with the other members of the Board in opposing the granting of the trolley franchise on Richmond street as proposed by the Council. That resolution was unanimously passed, and showed very plainly just how the members of the Council stood.

Now, while there has been no action on the subject, there seemed to be an undercurrent of opinion among the Councilmen that the city should not give up what they consider one of her rights, the right to say whether or not a trolley company shall lay tracks in her streets, without a fight.

According to the agreement with the Plainfield Street Railway, that corporation agrees to fight any lawsuit that may be the result of the laying of its tracks. In that case, the corporation and the city would range side by side in the fight with the county governing body.

If the city goes ahead and grants the franchise, then legal complications are certain. Under such circumstances, the city will appeal to the Supreme Court claiming that the law is unconstitutional and grants the county board excessive powers in city affairs that they are not entitled to. From the Supreme Court, it would probably be appealed to the Court of Errors and Appeals where the question of the constitutionality of the act would be finally decided.

The only inference to be drawn from the action of the Board of Chosen Freeholders is that they wish to keep that portion of Richmond street in question for the use of the county trolley line. But before they can put that line through they will meet an unexpected barrier.

According to the county boulevard and trolley act, fathered by Frank Bergen, it is necessary to obtain the assent by ordinance of the Council or governing body in every municipality through which the line passes. Under ordinary circumstances, the Plainfield Council would undoubtedly pass such an ordinance, but at present, such permission is likely to be refused. And it will not be a long time, possibly a question of a few weeks, before the Board will have to ask the Plainfield

PROPOSED COUNTY BOULEVARD.

The above is a plan of the proposed widened boulevard and county trolley road between Plainfield and Elizabeth, the consummation of which has caused a clash between the Board of Freeholders of Union county and the Common Council of Plainfield. The Board of Freeholders have accepted an offer of $250,000 for the right to operate the trolley road along the proposed boulevard.

GOVERNOR DIDN'T COME.

THERE WERE OTHERS AT THE PICNIC.

Horny-Handed Tillers of the Soil Assembled at the Great Picnic at Flemington.

(Special to The Daily Press.)

Flemington, August 18.—More than fifteen thousand people attended the opening day of the seventh annual Hunterdon county farmers' picnic yesterday.

The tillers of the soil came in large numbers from all parts of Hunterdon, Somerset, Warren and other nearby counties to shake hands with the politicians of the Fourth Congress District, listen to political speeches and discuss farm topics.

An unusually attractive political card was announced including Governor Voorhees, Senator Daly and some others. Much disappointment was manifest when it became apparent that neither Voorhees nor Daly would attend yesterday. Mr. Daly is booked for today but Governor Voorhees will be unable to appear at all. This was a sore disappointment to the Governor's friends, who are numerous in Hunterdon county, which is his birthplace.

Senator John R. Foster, president of the association, opend the fair. T. B. Wakeman, of New York, was the first speaker. He spoke on "Bimetallism." H. V. Reed, of Chicago, followed with a speech on "Patriotism Relative to the Present Conditions."

Erastus E. Potter, of Port Oram, discussed the silver question, and Samuel Wilson, of Jersey City, defended the gold standard. The debate which followed between these two orators was listened to attentively.

Today will be politicians' day, and most of the politicians of the IVth Congress District will be in attendance.

Church to be Closed Sunday.

Rev. Carlos Martyn, D. D., who was engaged to preach during August in Trinity Reformed church has discovered in looking over his list of engagements for the month, that he is booked to speak next Saturday afternoon at 3:30 at Cautauqua, N. Y., and that it will therefore be impossible for him to fulfill his engagement to preach in the church Sunday. The supply committee has endeavored to secure a preacher that would be acceptable to the congregation, but without success, and it has been deemed best to close the church next Sunday. The session of the Sunday-school in the morning will also be omitted. The following Sunday, Aug. 28th, Dr. Martyn will preach both morning and evening, and Dr. Schenck is expected to be home and preach the succeeding Sunday, September 4th.

Miss Mildred Tyrrell, of Manning avenue, leaves tomorrow for Dover and Lake Hopatcong to remain the rest of the summer.

COMPANY TO BUILD BRIDGE.

MUCH DISPUTED QUESTION SETTLED.

Middlesex Freeholders Provide a Way For Trolley Road to Cross Greenbrook.

(Special to the Daily Press.)

New Brunswick, August 18.—The question as to who shall build a bridge across Greenbrook at Bound Brook, in connection with the Somerset County Board of Freeholders and the Brunswick and New York and Philadelphia traction companies, was considered by the Middlesex County Board of Freeholders yesterday. The Board refused to agree to the proposition made by the Somerset Board for each Board to pay one-fourth of the costs and have the traction companies pay the other half. The Board then passed a resolution giving the Brunswick Traction Company permission to erect an additional bridge at its own expense adjoining the bridge at Greenbrook, the bridge to be ten feet wide, with a sidewalk of five feet. This will leave free a thirty foot roadway.

Edward H. Radel, secretary of the Brunswick Traction Company, was present at the meeting, and said he favored such a resolution, as the inability of the counties to agree would seriously retard his plans.

SUFFERS FROM HICCOUGHS.

Rev. Mr. Schnelldruessler Has Had a Violent Attack for Over a Week.

Rev. Herman F. F. Schnelldruessler, of 1257 Milton place, is confined at his home with an attack of hiccoughs which have been more or less violent for over a week. He was taken ill with gastric troubles recently and later developed into hiccoughs which are almost incessant. Dr. D. C. Adams is in attendance and he hopes to bring his patient around all right, although his condition at present is quite serious.

This makes the third severe case of hiccoughs in this city. A long time ago Dr. Clark, of East Front street, was similarly attacked and the next case was that of B. A. Hegeman, Sr., of Washington Park.

A Perilous Job.

All the morning Henry Ackerman, in the employ of Marsh, Ayres & Co., has been enjoying life in an altitude a hundred feet above the rest of the city. He has been working on the big flag staff in the yard of the Plainfield High School, painting it. The job is a perilous one and requires an expert to do it.

At the Camp Meeting.

Tonight there will be held a gospel temperance meeting at the camp ground at Netherwood. Many eminent speakers will be present. Bishop H. M. Turner, D. D., L. L. D., of Atlanta, Ga., is expected.

Five Thousand Colored Brethren Met at Boynton Beach.—Enjoyed themselves Hugely.

(Special to The Daily Press.)

Boynton Beach, N. J., Aug. 18.—The darkey ruled supreme at Boynton Beach yesterday and the watermelon was in the ascendant. About 5,000 brethren were assembled. They came by train, by steamer and in wagon loads. They began to arrive early in the morning and didn't go till the shades of night fell down.

A bright example of enthusiasm was furnished by Rev. W. S. Smith, of Princeton, who, with his fife and drum corps, prevaded the occasion like spice in gingerbread. This pastor, without funds and without a following, had nevertheless determined at the eleventh hour to go to the picnic, and to make the occasion pay. Accordingly he got together the boys and paraded the town with patriotic music until he got together a sufficient number. They came 100 strong on the Minneola via New Brunswick, and were the life and soul of the occasion.

For once poor white trash were at a discount. Several parties of Aryan extraction were refused admittance to the ground. Conspicuous among the rejected were a barge load of something like 1,000 children.

Boynton Beach has been determined on as the regular meeting place for the Colored Salt Water Day. The objective point was formally Asbury Park.

Funeral of David Bowman.

The funeral services of the late David A. Bowman were held yesterday afternoon from the house on East Sixth street at 4 o'clock. Rev. Mr. Chambers, of this city officiated, and spoke words of comfort and consolation to the bereaved ones. The floral tributes were expressive and very beautiful, and included a pillow from the members of Plainfield Council, No. 711, Royal Arcanum. Another pillow was given by the employes of the U. S. Express Company, of this city. Interment was this morning at Hillside Cemetery. The pall-bearers were B. T. Barnes, Wyatt Barnes, Malcomb Barnes and Frank Bowman.

Four New Members.

Watchung Lodge, I. O. F., held a regular meeting last evening and elected four members. The new order is now in good working condition and the attendance last evening was fair. At the next meeting to be held in two weeks the charter will be closed.

Mrs. Maze Edwards, of West Front street, left this morning on the Lehigh Valley Railroad, for Caseville, on Lake Huron, Michigan, where she will visit for a month or two her sister, Mrs. Houston.

PULLED OUT HANDFUL OF FRITZ'S WHISKERS.

A Desperate Encounter Between Landlord and Tenant.

PITCHFORKS USED, TOO.

COMPTON RETREATED TO THE BARN FOR SAFETY.

Bad Blood Between the Men for Some Time and This Morning Compton Accused Fritz of Making Noise and Disturbing a Sick Boy—Hostilities Were Immediately Commenced—No Arrests.

Adam Fritz, the horse-dealer, is around town this morning genial as ever. A portion of his side-whiskers are missing and there is a big cut in his scalp, but he does not care.

Fritz lives on Somerset street, where he has made his home for many years. Along side runs a lane, on which is a row of houses owned by Mr. Fritz. In one of these lives Morris Compton and his family. Of late there has grown trouble between them.

This morning, Fritz, assisted by William Uhrhahn, was unloading earth from a wagon. Compton came out of his house and, it is said, ordered them not to make so much noise as his boy was very ill. Fritz replied that no one was making any noise. One word followed another. Then, it is alleged, Compton made a dash around the wagon for the veteran horse-trader.

Fritz's fistic artillery was evidently successful, as his tenant retreated with a damaged face. He disappeared in the barn and then came out again, armed with a pitchfork.

When Compton advanced, Fritz became possessed of an idea that the fork ought to change hands. He awaited the attack with his fists closed like big battering-rams. Then the fork was swung and Fritz made a leap at the wielder. The pitchfork came down. Fritz raised his hand and partially broke the force of the blow with his hand. Then the shoulder of the fork struck him on the head and the red blood began to flow. Quite a cut was opened up on his scalp, but it never phased the big horseman. He grabbed the fork with both hands.

Fritz had both hands on the handle of the fork and Compton but one. Compton's unoccupied hand was soon twined in Fritz's side whiskers. Great handfuls he pulled forth and distributed about the scene.

With a mighty effort, Fritz shook Compton loose from the fork and stood ready to continue the battle. Then the tenant retreated to the fastness of the barn, blocking the door so Fritz could not get in. Neighbors came and tried to sooth the wrath of Fritz, and Compton departed, one of the neighbors leading away his horse and buggy.

TOOK A BIT TOO MUCH.

A Half Blind German Found Lying Drunk on the Street.

"Come, move on." As he said it, Acting Roundsman Totten leaned down and lifted the man partially to his feet. A few indistinguishable sounds escaped him, then he sank back again.

"Where do you belong?" queried the officer. Another muttering sound. Further questioning proved as fruitless. Then the policeman tried to set the man on his feet again but he collapsed in the arms of the officer. Totten says there was a distinct odor of strong drink about him. Then he picked up the stranger and lugged him over to the lock-up where he remained all night.

That happened yesterday afternoon on Somerset street, near Front street. This morning the prisoner was arraigned. He gave his name as M. F. Kepstine and explained that he was a poor German, almost blind, who was trying to secure enough money to go to Austria for treatment. He had visited all the clinics east but without success. He was told that the only chance of saving his eyesight was by going to Austria. He had been ill and was very weak. He had partaken a little yesterday but did not think he was drunk.

Several local Germans testified to his good character and that he was trying to earn money by securing subscriptions for a German paper. The Judge suspended sentence.

Heavy Wind Uprooted Trees.

The heavy wind yesterday afternoon did a little damage in this vicinity. At the home of W. J. Roome, in Washington Park, a large tree was uprooted, and at the home of Senator Reed the wind blew out a window, completely demolishing the glass. Mr. Reed's neighbor, B. A. Hegeman, Jr., telephoned to the Senator this morning, and he came from Belmar to look after his house.

MERRITT REPORTS.

The Army Lost About Fifty Men at Manila.

STILL ANOTHER ACCOUNT.

PART TAKEN BY ARMY IN CAPTURE OF MANILA.

The Official Report of Gen. Merrit Has Been Received at the War Department—It Tells of Early Negotiations.

(From the Union Associated Press.)

Washington, August 18, 12:59 p. m. General Merritt's official report of the surrender of the city of Manila and the events leading up to it was received at the War Department this morning. It was as follows:

"Manila, Augustt 13.

"On the seventh instant, Admiral Dewey joined me in a forty-eight-hour notification to the Spanish Commander to remove non-combatants from the city.

"On the same date a reply was received from him stating that the Spanish were without places of refuge for non-conbatants outside of the city.

"On the 9th inst., we sent a joint note inviting attention to the sufferings in store for the sick and non-combatants in Manila in case it became our duty to reduce the defenses, also setting forth the helpless condition of the Spanish forces, surrounded on all sides, the fleet in front, with no prospects of reinforcements.

"We demanded the surrender of the city as due to the consideration for humanity.

"The same date we received a reply admitting the situation but stating that they could make a defence and that the request to surrender could not be granted.

"But he offered to consult his government on the question if time was granted. A joint note was sent in reply declining.

"On the thirteenth I joined with the navy in making an attack with the following results.

"After about half an hour's accurate shelling of the enemy's lines, McArthur's brigade on the right and Green's on the left, under Gen. Anderson, made a vigorous attack carrying the Spanish works.

"The loss is not accurately known, but is about fifty. The total will be heavy. The troops had excellent co-operation on the part of the navy, which was most valuable.

"The troops advanced upon the walled city upon which a white flag was shown. The town then capitulated.

"The troops now occupy Malate, Binando the walled city and San Miguel. All the important centres are protected. The insurgents are kept out and there is no disorder or pillage. "Signed Merritt."

Third Regiment to Be Mustered Out.

(Special to The Daily Press.)

Pompton Lake, August 18—There is no doubt now about the Third Regiment, New Jersey Volunteers, being mustered out within a few weeks, although the men still have hopes of being retained for garrison duty. Companies C and K, now stationed at Fort Wadsworth, are expected to arrive here within the next ten days.

Rev. W. E. Honeyman and wife, of Lincoln place, will return this week from a sojourn in the Adirondack Mountains.

—The Christian Endeavor Society consecration service at the First Baptist church next Friday evening will be conducted by Miss Julia Shinn, and the subject will be "Practical Uses of the Bible.

NEWS FROM DEWEY

Despatches from Manila Confirm Previous Reports.

PRISONERS NUMBER 7000

The Squadron Suffered No Losses, Casualties in Gen. Merritt's Force Not Known There Was a Combined Attack of Land and Naval Forces. Reported Attack of Insurgents on Our Troops.

Washington, Aug. 18.—The following dispatch was received at the navy department yesterday:

Manila, Aug. 13.

To the Secretary of the Navy, Washington:

Manila surrendered to-day to our land and naval forces after a combined attack. A division of the squadron shelled the forts and intrenchments at Malate, on the south side of the city, driving back the enemy, our army advancing on that side at the same time. City surrendered about 5 p. m., the American flag being hoisted by Lieutenant Brumby.

About seven thousand prisoners of war were taken.

The squadron has no casualties; no vessels injured.

On August 7 General Merritt and I formally demanded the surrender of the city, which the Spanish governor general refused.

DEWEY.

Lieutenant Brumby is Admiral Dewey's flag lieutenant.

The war department is still waiting for advices from General Merritt giving the military side of the story of Manila's downfall.

The admiral's dispatch, however, give the assurance that the army's approach was skilfully conducted, although it does not especially state that there were no casualties among the land forces. All departments of the administration are rejoicing over the success of the American arms. Although unknown to the military and naval commanders at Manila, the assault on the city was unnecessary. Long before this time the news of the armistice proclamation has reached Admiral Dewey and General Merritt, and the orders from the Washington government preclude the possibility of further operations in the Philippines. There is a chance, however, that some fighting occurred subsequent to the fall of the city and before the knowledge of the armistice was received at Manila.

Within a day or two the war department will probably receive information from General Merritt in answer to its question as to whether more troops are needed.

One important matter in regard to the fall of Manila has yet to be explained. If Admiral Dewey sent any information to the navy department in regard to the reported action of the Germans in taking the Spanish captain general on board one of their warships, the fact is suppressed by the authorities.

This question is an important one to the government, for the opinion is general among administration officers that such action by the German naval commander must be regarded as a serious international offense.

Manila, Aug. 13, via Hong Kong, Aug. 16.—The city of Manila surrendered to-day. Four American warships bombarded Malate for an hour. They fired a hundred shots, when our flag was raised over the Philippines. The Spanish surrendered about 6,500 men and 12,000 stand of arms, together with an immense amount of ammunition. The Spaniards were allowed the honors of war.

Madrid, Aug. 17.—Captain Gen. Augustin, it is stated here, obeyed the instructions of the government in devolving the command at Manila upon General Jaudenes, and the latter will be tried by court martial for surrendering without making greater resistance.

A German Explanation.

Berlan, Aug. 18.—The Norddeutsche Allgemeine Zeitung explains that the Kaiserin Augusta, which brought away General Augustin from Manila left the harbor after the surrender of the city, and asserts that the Spanish officers were allowed to go free, so that Captain General Augustin was able to go whither he pleased.

"When Admiral von Diedrichs permitted him to go to Hong Kong on board the Kaiserin Augusta," says this paper, "it was by agreement with the American commander-in-chief, if indeed, the German admiral considered such an agreement still necessary. Moreover, it is also to be observed that the Spanish troops at Manila may, by mutual consent, proceed to Spain or Hong Kong."

London, Aug. 18.—The Pall Mall Gazette comments on the "extraordinary action of the Germans in assisting the flight of Gen. Augustin from Manila."

In terms similar to those used by the Times this morning, it sharply criticises the proceeding, drawing attention to its similarity to the German action during the British bombardment of Zanzibar, when the usurping sultan sought refuge at the German consulate. The paper adds: "This Manila incident is uncommonly nigh a flagrant breach of neutrality, and is certain to be regarded as an international discourtesy, if nothing worse."

Shafter's Army to Parade.

Washington, Aug. 18.—President McKinley has informed General Wheeler that he would review the troops which participated in the Santiago campaign as soon as they are in condition.

The parade will precede the mustering out of the volunteer forces now at Montauk Point and will probably take place in New York city.

The date has not yet been fixed, and will depend upon the rapidity with which the soldiers recover their former state of health.

THE DOMINION WINS.

The Canadian Yacht Defeats Challenger.

Beaconsfield, Que., Aug. 18.—Interest centered yesterday, at Lake St. Louis, on the race between the small boats for the fourth day's sail.

A severe storm set in at early morning, but at noon it had cleared and the indications were favorable for little or no wind and smooth water for the test of the Dominion and Challenger for the Seawanhaka cup.

The race was over the triangular course, three times around, a total distance of twelve miles.

The start was made at 12.52. The Challenger had much the better of the start, getting the windward position, and continuing to gain. The wind was very light.

At 1.10 p. m. the Challenger was running away from the Dominion and if the wind proved sufficient to carry them over the course within the time limit of four hours, the Chillenger seemed likely to win.

Challenger rounded the first buoy at 1.11.25, Dominion at 1.13, in slight breeze and running smarely.

Challenger rounded second buoy at 1.22.11, Dominion at 1.22.45. Both had spinnakers set. This leg was a free run, and with the freshening wind the Challenger was increasing her lead rapidly.

Dominion won the race and series, retaining the Seawanhaka cup.

SHOT ANDREA'S PIGEON.

Reported That Bird Bearing Polar Explorer's Signature Was Killed.

Seattle, Wash., Aug. 18.—Details have reached here by steamer from St. Michaels, Alaska, of a rumor that one of the carrier pigeons of Andree, the explorer, was shot last January by the captain of the Thistle, a vessel of the imprisoned whaling fleet, near Mackenzie River Inlet, on the Arctic ocean.

The news reached St. Michael in a roundabout way, through two American prospectors, F. W. Beasley of Montana and Louis Spichit of San Francisco, who heard it in March from men who had been informed by couriers from the fleet.

The bird is said to have alighted on the yardarm of the Thistle, and, after being shot, an oilskin capsule was found attached to it by two rings, one of which bore a stamp of Andree's name. In the capsule was Andree's signature, with date, longitude and latitude.

The whaling fleet is due at San Francisco about a month hence, when the story may be verified and details learned.

Aguinaldo Fought Us.

San Francisco, Aug. 18.—Advices from Manila of August 14, via Hong Kong, say:

Our troops met with much resistance in the attack on Manila, eight being killed and thirty-four wounded. The insurgents, who are shut out of the city threaten to cause trouble.

Malate only was bombarded. All the ships escaped injury. Rear Admiral Dewey has raised the blockade, the shops have reopened and there is a great feeling of relief among the people of the city.

It is stated that after the surrender of Manila Aguinaldo's followers turned upon the Americans and attacked them, but they were easily defeated after a brief conflict.

The United States monitor Monadnock, Captain Whiting, which left San Francisco about six weeks ago, has reached Manila safely.

Resignations Rejected.

Madrid, Aug. 18.—The government has rejected the resignations of the governors general of Cuba, Porto Rico and the Philippines.

The Cortes, it is asserted, will reassemble on September 15.

"El Tiempo, the organ of Senor Silvela, leader of the dissident Conservatives, continues its demands for a convocation of the Cortes, alleging that while the Cortes could not change the terms of the protocol, it might be able to influence the course of the negotiations regarding the Philippines.

The word "control" in article 3 of the protocol is translated by El Tiempo as signifying "intervention similar to Great Britain's occupation of Egypt.

THE LAST NAVAL FIGHT

Mangrove's Engagement a Fitting Close to a Triumphant War.

SHE FIGHTS TWO GUNBOATS

The Plucky Americans Had but Two Six Pound Guns but They Were Used Effectively. No Lives Lost on Board. The Cessation of Hostilities Was Announced and the Firing Stopped.

Key West, Fla., Aug. 18.—Further details have been received here as to the bombardment of the port of Caibarien, on the north coast of the province of Santa Clara, Cuba, last Sunday, by the armed tug Mangrove, which began her bellicose career by capturing the big Spanish liner Panama and now is the likeliest candidate for the honor of having fought the last naval battle of the war.

The Mangrove left here last week to protect the landing of an expedition under Colonel Boise, which had gone on ahead in the schooners Adam and Dellie. When the Mangrove reached Santa Maria Key, near Caibarien, she found the Cuban party had safely disembarked but feared to advance because of the presence of the Spanish gunboat H. Cortez and another gunboat.

On Saturday afternoon the Mangrove anchored at Key Francis, just outside Caibarien, and as she lay there the Herman Cortez came out and ran around the key to get a peep at her, scurrying back into the harbor as soon as she saw she was discovered. The Mangrove followed as far as shoal water would permit, but could only get about half way into the harbor.

The next morning Captain Stuart, the commander of the Mangrove, decided to have a shot at the gunboats. He was alone and the odds against him were heavy, but he did a bold thing. Feeling her way in, the Mangrove crept along the channel drawing eight feet of water in a naverage depth of eight and a half, and about nine o'clock she sighted both Spanish gunboats.

The H. Cortez was anchored near the shore, about 1,000 yards to the right of the town, with her broadside to the sea. The small gunboat lay at the wharf.

The Spaniards evidently were anticipating a battle. The shore was crowded with Spaniards, citizens and soldiers, while the roof of every building that commanded a view of the harbor was literally covered with people anxious to see the fight. The Herman Cortez carried two 4.7 inch guns and four one-pounders, while her smaller companion was armed with three one-pounders and a Hotchkiss rapid fire gun. The crews of both, numbering in all between 75 and 100 men, could be seen on the decks.

Ashore were several one-pound field pieces, while the Spanish troops were armed with Mauser rifles. The Mangrove, whose entire battery consists of only two six-pounders, worked into a range of three thousand yards.

The channel was so narrow that only one gun could be fired at a time. At 10.45 a. m. she let go her port gun at the Cortez. The shot fell short. Instantly the whole shore line burst into flame, both gunboats and the field pieces pouring in a heavy fire upon the American vessel.

Every shot of this volley struck the water ahead of the Mangrove, which continued pumping away at her port six-pounder. She concentrated her fire on the Hernan Cortez and the next five or six shots fell on the Spaniards' deck between her bow gun and amidships, scattering a body of men. Some of the latter must have been killed, although the Spaniards later denied that they had suffered any loss.

Soon the Spanish got the Mangrove's range and a veritable avalanche of shot and shell was hurled at her. It was nothing less than a miracle that her loss of life was not heavy.

Shells from the big guns on the Hernan Cortez dropped within twenty feet of the tug, several bursting and the fragments chipping bits off her hull. Others went whizzing through her shrouds and Mauser bullets peppered the surrounding waters like a summer shower.

In the very midst of this, and while the Mangrove was sailing cautiously around to bring her starboard gun into play, the watch shouted "Flag of truce!" And sure enough, not only one, but three white flags could be seen, one flying from the small gunboat and two from the government houses on shore.

The Mangrove acknowledged the signal and presently a small boat came out with a Spanish officer, who clambered aboard the Mangrove and in exceedingly nervous tones announced: "Peace is proclaimed and I have instructions for your commanding officer from the military commander of this district."

He added that during the engagement the Spanish authorities in Caibarien had wired the military commanders of the district that the American ships were bombarding the port and that immediate response had been received, informing them that peace had been restored and the shooting should cease.

The Spanish crew of the small boat which brought the officer to the Mangrove, said the Spaniards had not lost a man, but the officer himself made no allusion to the fight which had lasted an hour and ten minutes.

The Clearing Sale of Shirt Waists.

With the close of July comes the greatest price-cutting—the most attractive values ever offered. The remaining stock is divided into two lots, 49c. and 75c., former prices ranged from 75c to $1.50. There's not 200 waists in the entire assortment, so we advise an early call for the best selection.

Sailor Hats and Untrimmed Hats 49c.

This means that each and every hat, irrespective of former price, will be 49c. Of especial interest should the price be, as none have been less than 75c, and the styles offered are all of this season's production.

Men's Negligee Shirts 59c.

Sounds cheap, but the hundred or more shirts that go on sale have been selling at 75c., 85c. and $1. The patterns are all new and desirable, the kind that you would like. Clearing time is here, and the new price, 59c., will be the means of their quick disposal.

Men's Summer Underwear 20c.

Nearly 600 pieces gauze underwear to be 20c. This is ordinarily the best 25c underwear sold, but 20c will be the clearing price.

The floor beams shall be not less than two (2) inches in thickness and ten (10) inches in depth, or of equal supporting capacity, except thick story or attic beams which may be two (2) inches in thickness and eight (8) inches in depth, well bridged.

Section 7. That the ninth paragraph of Section 11 of said ordinance be and the same is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

Section 8. That the following paragraph be and the same is hereby added to Section 12 of said ordinance.

Whenever any store building within the fire limits is divided by stud partition walls, such walls are to be filled in with brick or such other fire proof material as the Inspector of Buildings may direct.

Section 9. That the first and second paragraphs of Section 18 of said ordinance be and the same are hereby amended so as to read as follows:

All outside walls of dwelling houses within the City limits shall be not less than eight (8) inches thick, if under and not more than twenty-five (25) feet above foundation.

Section 10. That the first and second paragraphs of Section 20 of said ordinance be and the same are hereby amended so as to read as follows:

All the walls of dwellings not more than twenty-two (22) feet wide, forty-five (45) feet deep, and not more than thirty (30) feet or two stories in height, may be built not less than eight (8) inches thick above foundation.

One story structures not over twenty-two (22) feet in height, may be built with all the walls not less than eight (8) inches in thickness.

Section 14. That the second paragraph of Section 30 of said ordinance be and the same is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

All header and trimmer beams, unless to be supported by partitions, shall be double or one inch thicker than the beams, and where more than six feet long shall be hung in stirrup irons.

Section 15. That the third paragraph of Section 31 of said ordinance be and the same is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

The interior of all elevator, dumb-waiter or light shafts to be lined with metal or covered with metal lathing and plaster, the doors at each story to be covered with metal on the inside, and the walls thereof to be carried to under side of roof.

Section 16. That the fifth paragraph of Section 32 of said ordinance be and the same is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

The roofs of all buildings within the fire limits shall have a scuttle or bulkhead, covered with approved fire-proof material, and fixed ladders or stairs of iron or wood leading thereto. No scuttle is to be less than two by three feet in size, and the frames of all bulkheads are to be filled with brick or fire-proof block.

Section 17. That the fifth paragraph of Section 33 of said ordinance be and the same is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

A BIG DEMONSTRATION

Mayor Van Wyck Appoints Special Committee for Saturday's Event.

New York, Aug. 18.—Mayor Van Wyck has signed the resolution of the Municipal Assembly calling for the appointment of a committee to arrange for the reception of Admiral Sampson's warships on Saturday. The mayor then appointed a committee of 100 representative citizens, prefacing the appointments with this notice.

City of New York,
Office of the Mayor.

Pursuant to a resolution of the municipal assembly, providing for the appointment of a special committee to arrange for the home coming of the victorious American fleet, which is due in New York harbor on Saturday, August 20, I, Robert A. Van Wyck, mayor of the city of New York, do hereby appoint such committee and request their presence, without further notice, at a meeting of said committee to be held in the aldermanic chamber in the city hall on Thursday, August 18, at 12 o'clock noon.

The mayor also notified the police and dock departments to have all their boats ready for service on Saturday morning, and stand ready to aid the demonstration in any way possible. All heads of city departments are also made ex-officio members of the special committee, and the mayor says that every department of the government will do all that can be done to make the reception a success.

Then follows the list, which contains the names of many men prominent in the state and nation.

MUSTERING OUT THE TROOPS

All the Regiments That Can Be Spared Will Be Discharged.

Washington Aug. 18.—The order for the muster out of troops is being prepared as rapidly as possible in the office of the adjutant general, and Secretary Alger said yesterday that he thought it would be issued to-day.

There had been, he said, no pressure from the officers or residents of any state to bring about the discharge of any particular regiment. The only pressure, he said, came from the men themselves.

They wrote that they had enlisted for the war, and the war being over they wanted to go back home and resume the duties of civil life.

It was in response to these requests that the order to muster out all the troops that could be spared had been decided upon.

Admiral Cervera Released.

Washington, Aug. 18.—Admiral Cervera no longer is a prisoner of war. He has been released and leaves Annapolis to-day to return to Spain. With the admiral will go Captain Emylio Diaz Moreu, formerly of the Cristobal Colon, the order for whose release also was issued yesterday. The two officers will proceed home by the first steamer.

All the Spanish officers at Annapolis expect to be released in a few days, but not all of them expect to return to Spain immediately. One of them intends to remain in this country permanently, and others will visit Baltimore, Washington and other places of interest before returning to their own country.

A Trust Against Tramps.

Nutley, N. J., Aug. 18.—The women of this place and Franklin have organized the Ladies' Home Protective Association, and will carry on a vigorous crusade against tramps. A circular has been issued in which attention is called to the large number of idle men who are to be seen in the township. The circular says that while the men are apparently in quest of food and clothing, their real object is to steal whatever they can.

In order to discourage the strangers the members of the society have agreed not to feed or give clothing of any kind or allow it to be given at their doors, unless the applicant is recommended by some responsible person living in Essex county.

Wheeler Defends Cubans.

Washington, Aug. 18.—General Joseph Wheeler had a three-quarters of an hour conference with the president yesterday.

As to the possibility of a rupture with the Cuban insurgents, General Wheeler's statements were very reassuring.

"All the friction," he said, "between the Americans and Cubans will soon pass away, and there will be harmony and the best of feeling among them."

General Wheeler believed the Cubans, when freed from oppression and given a stable and humane government, would become law abiding and useful people.

Klondike Played Out.

Seattle, Wash., Aug. 18.—The majority of the passengers which arrived on the steam schooner Grace Dollar went into Alaska early in the spring and became disgusted with the country. Captain Fosen says he heard of no gold discoveries in the Kotzebu district, where rich strikes have been recently reported. There were about 500 prospectors there, he says.

Two river steamers and several launches are plying the Kubuk, but are unable to go up more than twenty-five miles on account of low water.

Coming to Camp Black.

Hempstead, L. I., Aug. 18.—Colonel Schuyler, post commandant, has received a telegram from the war department asking if Camp Black could accommodate the entire volunteer force from New York state, estimated to number 20,000 men. Colonel Schuyler replied that the camp's facilities were ample for the purpose mentioned.

Wheat in the Northwest.

Minneapolis, Minn., Aug. 18.—H. V. Jones, commercial editor of the Journal, has made a careful compilation of wheat crop figures from Minnesota and the Dakotas, the principal wheat growing states. He estimates the yield this year for the three states at 190,000,000 bushels, as against 130,000,000 bushels in 1897.

LIFE AT CAMP WIKOFF

A Lack of Accommodations for Sick Soldiers.

WHEELER IS TO COMMAND

Seven Well Defined Yellow Fever Cases. Denial of a State and Federal Clash Over Quarantine Matters. Red Cross Work. Distributing Supplies. Removal of Patients to New Haven Hospitals.

Montauk Point, L. I., Aug. 18.—The report of impending conflict between the state and federal authorities over the quarantine question at Camp Wikoff is proved to have been unfounded. General Young said that the question had arisen only in a casual way, and that there was no intention to dispose of it immediately.

"I have had no direct communication with Governor Black," he said to a reporter, "but I have heard at third hand that he thought the camp should be quarantined. I have spoken with General Sternberg about it, but in so casual a fashion that I do not recollect whether or not he expressed an opinion. My own opinion as I told it to him was that we should quarantine against the state rather than the state against us. When peace is declared the state authorities will supersede the federal, but even so, no difference of opinion is in prospect. There is time enough to talk about it when there is.

There are seven well developed cases in the yellow fever hospital. Colonel Forwood said he had not been informed of the number of suspects in camp, and could not estimate. The best approximation to be made was sixty-one. Until the hospital arrangements are more complete accurate statistics will be hard to get. It could not be learned whether or not the condition of these men was improving. Reports are not made with regularity to Colonel Forwood. The typhoid fever patients in the general hospital and as many as possible of the malaria cases were removed to the New Haven hospitals yesterday.

The removal was not made because of the fear of an epidemic (General Young and Colonel Forwood both stated positively that no epidemic was feared), but because of the threatened congestion in the general hospital. It is believed that the transports now due to arrive will have many sick aboard. Indeed, Colonel Forwood has information to this effect. There were more than 400 patients—the exact number was not known—in the general hospital this morning, and there are but 100 spare cots. In the detention hospital there are only 50 spare beds. Beyond question, it was said, there would not be room enough at the end of the week unless 200 of the patients were removed.

The difficulties of transportation still continue, though an energetic effort is being made by the First regiment of volunteer engineers to put the road in a passable condition, and by the quartermaster's department to get more mules, more wagons and more men. Thus it is impossible to make quick progress in the work of enlarging the hospital. The newly arrived men in the hospitals are faring badly, a man connected with the Red Cross said to-day. Government red tape, he continued, keeps supplies from them for several days, and in consequence weak as they are, they suffer a good deal. The Red Cross received six tons of food and eight hundred pairs of blankets yesterday, and distributed much of it to-day with three wagons which have been placed at their service. The men of the Seventy-first were in great need of blankets and good food, and were carefully looked after, but not to the neglect of any other troops. Red Cross nurses are expected to arrive and will take up their work at once. Quarters are being hurriedly prepared for them.

The First regular cavalry and Battery, Fourth light artillery, were landed from the Matteawan yesterday in comparatively good condition. They marched strongly and appeared in every way to be in better form than the troops previously landed. A number of transports are now due, but none is expected to arrive before Friday. Heavy weather is reported, and will, it is said, hold them back. The delay will give the chiefs of departments needed opportunity to prepare for their arrival.

Gen. Wheeler to Command.

Washington, Aug. 18.—General Joseph Wheeler was at the war department yesterday and had an interview with the secretary. He received orders to assume command at Camp Wikoff until the arrival of General Shafter, and was told by the secretary of war to purchase everything that was necessary for the comfort of the men, and to spare nothing that would alleviate the sufferings of the sick and wounded. General Wheeler left last night for New York and will go thence to Montauk Point.

Army Orders.

Washington, Aug. 18.—Among the army orders issued yesterday were the following:

Acting Assistant Surgeon William F. Skinner will proceed from St. Thomas, Pennsylvania, to Montauk Point and report for assignment to duty.

Lieutenant Paul B. Malone, Thirteenth infantry, now on sick leave, Fort Porter, Buffalo, N. Y., will proceed to Montauk Point and report for temporary duty pending the arrival there of his regiment.

The order to Colonel Thomas McGregor, Ninth cavalry, to join his regiment is amended to direct him to proceed to Montauk Point and report for duty with his regiment upon its arrival at that place.

The Strike for Chinese Trade.

London, Aug. 18.—There is reason to believe, from information obtained in good quarters, that the Anglo-Russian Chinese question is becoming less acute as negotiations respecting fresh capital for railways are said to be proceeding between this country and Russia in a satisfactory manner.

THE PEACE COMMISSION.

Senator Davis of Minnesota Accepts Appointment.

Washington, Aug. 18.—Whatever doubt may have existed hitherto as to Senator Davis's willingness to serve on the peace commission was dispelled by the information which has reached a leading member of the cabinet. Mr. Davis, it was feared, might hesitate to accept a commissionership which would carry him so faraway from home at a time when Minnesota politics were in an upheaved condition and his own re-election was trembling in the balance, but it appears that he has completed his arrangements for the campaign at home and now believes that he has insured his re-election come what may.

Another reason urged for disbelieving in Senator Davis's reported acceptance was that he has no care for playing a second part to anyone else, and that Secretary Day's presidency of the commission would make Davis loath to accept an appointment to its rank and file, but this consideration does not appear to have had any serious weight with him. He evidently recognizes the eminent fitness of the choice of Judge Day, and will be content to stand at the head of whatever group of senators may figure on the commission.

Senator Spooner's name is pretty prominently mentioned for a commissionership. He is a conservative man, of calm, sound judgment, for whose character and ability the president has great respect.

OVER 40,000 IN REVIEW.

Camp Thomas Had a Brilliant Pageant.

Chickamauga, Aug. 18.—The review at Camp Thomas yesterday was one of the most striking pageants of recent years. It was especially interesting because it was the final review of the last big army of the war.

Over forty thousand men, marching in perfect order, with bands playing and colors flying, made the occasion inspiring. A crowd of nearly fifty thousand were enthusiastic witnesses of the scene.

In all the regimental camps the men were up early. Immediately after the morning meal inspections were held, and the regiments took their places in the line of formation.

At 8.30 a signal gun was fired and the long column moved to and past the tower on Snodgrass Hill, where General Breckinridge and his guests were seated in the reviewing stand.

The cavalry came first, the artillery next and the infantry last. Although the column only passed the stand once, the review occupied nearly five hours.

The first field day will be observed next Saturday. An elaborate programme of athletic events has been arranged.

THE MILITARY COMMISSIONS.

Cuban Board to Start for Havana About September 10.

Washington, Aug. 18.—The military commission appointed to arrange for the evacuation of Cuba will meet on Monday and arrange for the sessions of the commission. The members expect to start for Cuba about the tenth of September, as they are not authorized to sit until the twelfth.

The Porto Rico commission will also meet next week and make arrangements for their departure for that island.

Admiral Sampson and Admiral Schley will come on from New York, so as to be in Washington on Monday.

Mr. Robert P. Porter, who was appointed to examine the finances of the islands of Cuba and Porto Rico, had a conference with the president yesterday morning and it was decided that he should go to Cuba with the military commission and make his investigation at the same time the commission sits. Mr. Porter says that he will complete his investigations in Cuba before going to Porto Rico.

MONEY FOR PORTO RICO.

Paymasters to Go There from Santiago Despite Gen. Miles's Protest.

Washington, Aug. 18.—Orders were issued yesterday directing that the paymasters who have been at Santiago with $1,500,000 shall proceed at once to Porto Rico to pay the troops.

General Miles did not want these paymasters and the money to be sent to Porto Rico from Santiago for fear they might bring yellow fever.

The surgeon general's office does not believe there is any danger of infection.

A paymaster has been detailed to go with the troops which are to be sent to Alaska. The paymaster may not remain with these troops, but will arrange for their payment while they are located there.

The Good Offices of France.

Paris, Aug. 18.—At the cabinet council yesterday morning the minister of foreign affairs, M. Delcasse, read dispatches from President McKinley and the queen regent of Spain thanking the president and government of the French republic for their good offices in promoting peace negotiations. He added that the governments at Washington and Madrid, desiring to give France a proof of their high esteem and confidence, had selected Paris as the scene of the negotiations for the final treaty of peace.

Gen. Pando Against Peace.

Mexico City, Aug. 18.—General Pando, who has been here, has gone to Vera Cruz, and will thence proceed to Havana, expecting to accompany General Blanco to Spain. He said to friends while here that both he and Blanco were unalterably opposed to making peace, and that the war should have been continued.

Howell's Orders Changed.

Senator Reed Had the First Idea.

The New Jersey editor of the New York Tribune today makes public a portion of a letter written by Senator Reed to a friend, in which he says that while a member of the Assembly he tried to have a law passed establishing the principle embodied in the Squire law. Mr. Reed says in this letter:

You may remember that I got my bill reported without recommendation by the committee and came within four or five votes of passing it through the House. I was hooted at and derided for my pains, but the time is about here when trolley roads will have to pay for their right of way. I had an awful hard time to get my bill reported at all. And it's a good bill yet. It should not be possible to give the public streets away.

The bill referred to by Mr. Reed contained the following provisions:

That no Board of Aldermen, Common Council, Township Committee or other governing body of any municipality of this State shall have power to locate by ordinance or otherwise the tracks of any street railway, in, through or upon any public highway or place in such municipality, nor to grant any franchise or right to construct or operate any street railway, or to erect or construct any system of wires or other conductors of electricity for that purpose in, through or along any such public highway or place, unless payment shall first be made or secured to such municipality for the use thereof of a sum of money to be agreed upon between the governing body thereof and the street railway company applying for such location, franchise or right, which said sum of money shall in no case be less than $4,000 for every mile of single track and $8,000 for every mile of double track railway which such street railway company proposes to operate by virtue of such location, franchise or right, and at the same rate for fractions of a mile, and that in addition to the payment hereinbefore provided for such governing body may require from such railway company an agreement for a license fee to be paid yearly by such railway company for the use of such highway or public place.

Hale to the Women.

Women may have many visionary ideas about municipal government and how it should be conducted as echoed in town improvement societies, but in this section of the country where such associations have been formed frequently during the past three years it cannot be denied that feminine energy and idea has brought many benefits to the communities in which they worked.

The pretty city park which now adds attractiveness to Plainfield was redeemed from a waste of land solely through the efforts of the women. Other features of public improvement made in this city within the memory of not very old residents also add their testimony to the work of the women, notwithstanding the laughs which some of their schemes may have prompted from the men.

And now we hear that what the political office holders of New Brunswick were either unable or unwilling to do the public spirited women of the old Dutch town seem to be accomplishing. The society started out with the intention of beautifying and improving the city. Heaven knows that in New Brunswick they had a big enough job. If they have succeeded in changing and bettering the conditions that have existed there since the time of King George we say, hale to the women!

Crop Report.

The following is John Neagle's crop report for this week: Plainfield—All vegetation improved and doing well; garden truck maturing; fall plowing progressing. Rainfall, 1.90 inch.

MONTAUK POINT, LONG ISLAND.

Montauk Point, the place chosen as a recuperating ground for General Shafter's army, is situated at the eastern extremity of Long Island. It is an ideal spot for the encampment of troops in summer, as the ground is high and swept by ocean breezes.

WHAT THE SHEARS FIND.

Editorial Comment From Other Papers of Interest in Plainfield.

Hereafter the New Jersey Naval Reserves will not have to get down on their knees annually and beg the Legislature for an appropriation to keep the organization in existence. Nor will there be a disposition on the part of the statesmen to question the utility of maintaining and encouraging the Reserves.—Tribune.

* * * *

It is getting to be the custom in New Jersey for Republicans to renominate their Congressmen for third and fourth terms—Plainfield Press.

And a very good custom it is. The only way to get efficient Congressmen is to send the same men term after term to Washington. How else can they learn the art of legislation and gain ascendancy over their colleagues? What made Blaine, and Mills, and Holman, and Reed, and all the other leaders of the House of Representatives but long continued service. The Republican party will increase its chances of electing its candidates by renominating stirring members, for thinking voters will always have a preference for the man of experience, where no very urgent issues are at stake.—Jersey City News.

PASSING COMMENT

Things that Are Not Exactly News but Just as Interesting.

Has everybody forgotten J. H. Haverly, who rose and fell in the theatrical business years ago? asks the New York Sun He went up to flamboyant affluence and down to hopeless bankruptcy, after which he disappeared from stageland. Now he has come back, and a few nights ago he started out fresh and hopeful with a negro minstrel company, giving the first performance in Plainfield, N. J. The street parade had all the old-time Haverly gorgeousness. It was of such pageant that the late Eugene Field wrote:

Jack Haverly, Jack Haverly! I wonder where you are:
Are your fortunes cast with Sirius or 'neath
some kindlier star?
How happens it we never see your wondrous minstrel show
With its apt alliterations, as we used to years ago?
All the ebon aggregations that afflict these modern times
Are equally unworthy of our press and of our rhymes;
And I vainly pine and hanker for the joys that used to come
With the trumpet's ump-ta-ra-ra and the big bass drum.
How grand you looked, Jack Haverly, a-marching down the street—
A diamond on your bosom, patent leathers on your feet!
Your sturdy, curly mustache, of a warm, aggressive hue Seemed to advertise the circumstance that there were no flies on you;
First came the band, and then you came, and next your famous troupe,
And last of all, we youngsters, with a wild, hilarious whoop.
For it couldn't be expected that we youngkits should be dumb
In the rapture of those trumpets and that big bass drum.

Surely, no negro minstrel manager could reasonably hope for a more potent "press agent" than the genial Mr. Field incidentally turned himself into; but Mr. Haverly, not quite content, sends out some of his own composition, as follows:

Dear Eugene Field, brave, gentle soul,
In heaven you survey the whole
Of earth's poor slaves, left basking here,
Who on your tomb oft shed a tear.
Memory will in your old friend's heart
Keep yours as green, altho' we part,
Unto the day when nevermore,
Hope you to join on the other shore,
With trumpet's ump-ta-ra-a and the big bass drum.
40—count 'em—40! making things hum,
Still on parade, I leading van
And missing you greatly along o' the band.

There is an old adage which counsels the wisdom of letting well enough alone.

Realty Change.

The following real estate transfer from North Plainfield was recorded in the Somerset County Clerk's office: Henrietta B. Berry and husband to Margaret M. Mantz, North Plainfield, $500.

THEATRICAL.

Current Dramatic Attractions That Plainfielders Can Witness.

"Laugh and the world laughs with you; weep and you weep alone." You may be feeling kind of blue and in the mental "Dumps" on the evening of Friday, the 19th inst If so, just drop into the Stillman Music Hall, then, and see "The Real Widow Brown." That charming lady will hold a reception, diversified by tuneful songs and captivating dances, by an assembly of some of the cleverest comedians and comediennes on the farce comedy stage. And strange to say, there's a plot too, and that, together with clever acting and amusing complications, will keep you in unbounded hilarity till the final fall of the curtain. But kindly observe this injunction: "Don't be too boisterous in your merriment as your near neighbor may have made a mistake and thought he was to see a classical tragedy or romantic drama. In that case, blandly excuse yourself with the remark that you understood "The Real Widow Brown" was for laughter purposes only.

* * * *

The melo drama commences with a fascinating scene in a dressing tent of a circus, is punctuated in the middle act with a thrilling escape of the heroine from a window by walking a telegraph wire from a dizzy height and ends with a sight of her being cremated alive on an Indian pyre, only to be rescued in the nick of time by the lusty hero—there are features of the show business that have reached the most thrilling climaxes that Plainfield has ever seen. They were seen in "When London Sleeps," at Music Hall last night. There was more excitement to the square inch in the performance than has been seen in Music Hall in many a day, yet a revolver was flourished but once. But without comment on the absence of such a detail, it is fair to say that "When London Sleeps" furnishes the old story of the poor girl, her suddenly found fortune, the scheming villain and the valorous hero in a manner that makes it intensely interesting. The scenes were constantly changing, each one proving more exciting than the former. In the second act the scene and dialogue was bordering on the risque, but clever acting relieved it of offense. The acting talent of the company was strong.

THREE PAST FOUR SCORE

A TRIO OF AGED PEOPLE WHOSE AGES AGGREGATE 249 YEARS.

Met at the Eighty-third Birthday Celebration of William B. Stewart at South Plainfield—Host was Hale and Hearty.

[Special to The Daily Press.]

South Plainfield, August 18—To have lived four score and three years and still be comparatively hale and hearty is the particular good fortune of William B. Stewart, who celebrated his eighty-third birthday yesterday. The auspicious event was attended by about a dozen of Mr. Stewart's friends and relatives. Together with two of his old comrades, a combined age of 249 years was shown—the other long-lived people being Peter P. Dumont and P. P. VanArsdale, of Plainfield. There is only ten months difference between the ages of each of the three men. The youngest guest of the celebration was Mr. Stewart's four-year-old grandson.

The day was spent in social intercourse and the serving of refreshments. During the day Mr. VanArsdale read the following acrostic which he had composed in honor of the occasion:

We come today to see your smiling face,
In this old home, your presence doth it grace.
Let us enjoy the pleasure it doth give.
Live for each other's welfare while we live.
Increasing years doth lessen our old friends.
And yet, our Lord in His rich mercy sends
Much of His love, on which our life depends.

Between us "Mizpah" is our word today.

Surprised though you may be, we've all to say
'Tis three and eighty years since you were born.
Each year developed strength, like ripening corn.
We gladly honor and assure you, too,
A wish that days like this we may renew.
Rewarding blessings waits beyond this life.
Together may we meet above earth's strife.

WESTFIELD.

(Special Correspondence of The Press.)

Westfield, N. J., Aug. 18—An Italian laborer employed by Harry Wilcoughby was badly hurt about 1 o'clock yesterday. He was driving a horse, hitched to a mowing machine, down Clark street, when the horse kicked and broke the shaft. This falling on his heels he started down the hill at a fast clip and the driver was thrown to the road and dragged along by the rake. The horse managed to get free from the machine and the Italian was taken from the wreck. He was cut about the head and his whole body was covered with bruises. Dr. Smith, in front of whose house the accident happened, dressed the wounds and the man was taken to his home. The horse fell twice before he had been stopped and was cut about the legs and his back was badly bruised.

The Ward Association held its anual clam bake at Vreeland's Mill yesterday and was attended by about fifty of their friends.

HOUSE HOLD TALKS

The Value of the Lemon.

No woman should be without lemons on her toilet table. They are about as necessary nowadays as soap, so those who believe in them say.

"Lemons!" exclaimed one who believes in them religiously. "Why I wouldn't be without lemons a whole day for anything. I once heard of a Frenchwoman who was considered the most beautiful woman of her time, and she attributed her good looks to eating eight oranges a day for 365 days in the year.

"I'd be willing to declare solemnly that lemons will do far more towards beautifying a woman than oranges. Nothing in the world bleaches the skin, hands, and face like a little diluted lemon juice applied at night, and, strange to say, unlike most bleaches, it softens the complexion. Then the finest of manicure acids is made by dropping a teaspoonful of lemon juice in a cup of tepid water. This removes all stains from nails and skin and loosens the cuticle naturally and much better than any sharp instrument. A dash of lemon juice (only a dash) in plain water is an excellent tooth wash, removing tartar and a teaspoonful of the juice in a small cup of black coffee will drive off a bad headache. Best of all, the juice of lemon taken with a teaspoonful of soda, cooking soda, after each meal, will reduce the fat of any flesh-ridden woman."

Patriotic Cozy Corner.

One might as well be out of the world as out of the fashion. A cozy corner is a fashionable, as well as a comfortable adjunct to every complete home these days. Why not combine fashion, comfort and the patriotism everybody is bubbling over with just now and have an American corner instead of a Turkish one? It certainly would be original, unique, different from any one else and a change, which is often a relief. The home decorator can easily carry out in red, white and blue the cozy corner our picture represents. Bunting answers nicely for back, sides and canopy, the sides to be finished with a band of stars. The seat may be upholstered in red, rep, denim or burlap, but preferably the latter. Small brass buttons should be used for tufting instead of the regulation upholstery button. A shield, bayonet, sword, badges of the Grand Army and relief corps, or anything suggestive of the army or navy can be used to advantage. Framed copies of the Declaration of Independence, the Emancipation Proclamation, or photographs of our war heroes would add to the general effect.

THE COZEY CORNER.

A great deal of ingenuity can be employed in the decoration of the cushions. Any material will do; blue and red denim are favorites and the different flags of the navy, the shield, the Union Jack, or the Standard will do to embroider on them.

If this is too much trouble the shops are full of patriotic cushions that can be bought ready made just now.

A down cushion covered with a flag would be effective and characteristic.

Brown Bread Souffle.

Beat up the yolks of five eggs and gradually add them to an ounce of butter previously rubbed to a cream. When the butter and eggs are thoroughly mixed add to them three-quarters of an ounce of sugar, two ounces of grated brown-bread crumbs, a few powdered cloves, half an ounce of picked currants, a spoon of grated lemon peel and the stiffly whipped whites of the eggs already broken, the latter ingredient to be added after the others, and to be stirred in lightly. Turn the mixture into a buttered pie dish and bake about one-half or three-quarters of an hour.

Sponge Cake.

One tumbler powdered sugar, heaped; one tumbler flour, level; four eggs, five teaspoonfuls of cold water, one teaspoonful baking powder, heaped. Take yolks of eggs, sugar, a pinch of salt and the baking powder and water and beat all together until very light and creamy. Then beat the whites stiff and put in alternately with the flour.

Scotch Woodcock.

First toast and butter some bread on both sides and spread on this some chopped anchovies. Beat up the yolks of four eggs with half a pint of cream, and thicken this for a few moments in your chafing dish without letting it come to a boil. Arrange the small pieces of toast into a little pyramid and pour the egg over it.

GIRLS WIELD BROOMS

A HANDY AND NOVEL WAY TO DEVELOP THE ARMS.

Thin Girls Who Desire Rounded Arms Need Not Go to a School of Physical Culture But Simply Sweep Hard Several Times a Day.

Those flowing sleeves for girls are unusualy pretty this year, but, judging from a conversation I chanced to overhear the other day, they are driving the girls with scrawny arms to distraction. I didn't mean to play eavesdropper, but I'm glad now that I was within hearing distance, for I made a discovery which I am sure will be of interest. You see, the sleeves are very transparent, and that is why the group of girls seemed filled with woe. They were all talking about how thin their arms were and discussing tennis and golf as a means of rounding them out.

"Golf never in the world will do it, girls, nor tennis, either," exclaimed one plump looking miss—the only plump one, by the way, in the group. "Look at my arm," and in a trice she had unsnapped her cuff links and, whisking the pink pique sleeve to her shoulder, displayed a beautifully modelled arm, dimpling in soft rounded curves.

"Yes, but yours were gifts of the gods," cried a scrawny one. "You don't know what it means to be bothered about them."

"I do, too! Wasn't I almost a scarecrow a year ago? You remember how thin I was for months after I left school. I tried everything—tennis, golf, massage and physical culture, until I didn't really care a fig whether I had plump arms or skinny ones."

"But do tell us what you did do finally to bring about such ideally lovely curves."

"I not only 'did,' but I still 'do' it every day of my life. Now don't laugh when I tell you that I have swept my sitting and bed room five times every morning since last August. Haven't you noticed that housemaids nearly always have rounded, shapely arms? The idea popped into my head one day while Nita was sweeping the halls. She had her sleeves rolled up, so I saw her arm from shoulder to wrist, and it was the most beautiful in symmetry that I have ever seen.

"I just didn't wait another minute, but bounded up the stairs into mamma's room and told her I had made a discovery, and that she must go right down town and order a load of imported brooms. I began that very hour. I swept my room over and over again. It tired me most to death, too. My back ached, my head hurt and the next morning I found the muscles of my arms were so sore I could not dress myself.

"In a week's time I noticed an improvement. My arms were more firm, and before a month had gone by I was in the seventh heaven of delight. But, just think, girls, I haven't neglected this exercise but twice since I began, and then I was on a sleeper going and coming from Chicago.

"Of course, it's an awful bother, but when one considers the comfort it brings, why, you never once think about that. I just hop out of bed into my cold plunge, and then the sweeping comes right after. It really is a tip-top exercise for one all over, too. My cheeks are all aglow when I finally poke the broom away.

"How many brooms do you reckon I have worn out? Just five, that's all, and my carpet has been renovated twice. So, you see, it is not any more economical than going to a physical culture madame, but it's a deal more gratifying in the end."

"But how on earth do you do it," asked one of the thin girls. "I don't know how to hold a broom."

"Hold it the best way you can. That's all the information I can give," laughed the pink bud. "But you want to buy those with good large sticks, because they do not cramp one's hands so. You must wear chamois gloves, or your palms will be blistered, and get some silk dust caps to slip over your hair. You've no idea how funny one looks gotten up so. And if you go to work with a long skirt on it will make you ever so tired dragging it around over the floor. Put on a golf skirt; they are just lovely for sweeping."

The thin girls were profuse in their thanks, and went away rejoicing.

The Stockings She Wears.

Resplendent in all the hues of the rainbow are milady's stockings. Silk ones in gay plaids have first choice, and then lisle. So low have the lisle been brought down in price that there seems no excuse for any woman wearing the clumsier cotton this season. Gay reds, blue and greens are blended together in plaids and stripes and find equal favor. Blue polka-dotted ones are very popular, and no woman seems to fear the opprobrius title, "Vas bleu." Many patterns in vogue years ago have been revived and vie with those of later model. Silk open-worked ones in long lacey stripes or patterns over the instep or up the front are very smart for evening wear with slippers. Plain bright shades in these last-mentioned predominate, while the plaids and stripes usually have a black background.

Short Waterproof Coat.

We have something new in waterproof. This is nothing more nor less than the short waterproof cloak. It is of pale tan, with pipings, collar facing and buttons of dark green silk. The coat is double-breasted, loose fitting both back and front, and has very full bishop sleeves. The cut is, indeed, admirable for any sort of cloak, so that even if the uses of a short waterproof are not at once apparent, the garment is sufficiently smart to recommend itself on that score alone.

Doan's Kidney Pills are endorsed by Plainfield people.

Read what a citizen says:

Mr. Jos. VanArsdale, Carpenter and Contractor, living at 213 Spooner Ave., says: "For several years I suffered from severe pain in my back, hips and loins, so bad at times that it was almost impossible for me to get about and attend to my work. Any stooping or heavy lifting aggravated it and if I contracted the least cold it always settled in my back and at such times my suffering was something intense. When Doan's Kidney Pills came to my notice I was in pretty bad shape and procuring them from L. W. Randolph's drug store, I had only taken a few doses when I found they were helping me and on completing the treatment I was quite free from pain. I always keep Doan's Kidney Pills on hand so to have a sure remedy close by if the trouble should ever return. I highly recommend Doan's Kidney Pills for aching and lameness in the back and consider them an honest kidney medicine and possessing all the merits claimed for them."

Doan's Kidney Pills are sold for 50c. per box, for sale by all dealers. Mailed on receipt of price by Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, N. Y., sole agents for the U. S.

Remember the name Doan's and take no other.

LET US ARM YOU!

It's quite necessary, because while Uncle Sam is settling scores with the Spaniards you're bound to have a little brush at home at the same time, and there's nothing like being ready for emergencies. Until you can sign a perpetual truce with sun, wind and storm, your house and other buildings will need to be fortified with paint, and ours are like a 20-inch chilled steel armor.

CHAPTER XI.

David loitered over his after dinner coffee. Though expected at the office, a disinclination to enter the world of prose and machinery mastered him. He was in a relaxed and fanciful mood. He sat by the club window, conscious of the shadows flitting under the lamps, listening to the street sounds. He talked with those about him on social happenings and politics, but always, no matter what was said, felt a fine disregard of it all, because the glamour of the afternoon was with him still and his deeper thought was of that alone.

"I'd love to hear Anne sing a ballad tonight," he thought, as he went down the steps, a cigar between his lips. "I wonder if she's at home. She can't be off with Donald anywhere, for he wasn't in town today. I'll see if she's in, at any rate. The walk down the lower part of the avenue and across Washington square will be glorious on a night like this."

David was in a mood when a man is his own historian and reads the facts of a life with pleasure or a sense of failure according to the truth in that intimate, unpublished record. He saw none of the passersby, was only half conscious of the frost and the gaslit streets. He was regarding his years from boyhood and measuring the completeness of his present by his use of opportunities.

It was a comfortable reverie. He had nothing to regret. The death of his father had been his only grief, soon lived down in the fullness of ambition and independent wealth. No shadow lurked in his past. He had experimented with "the world, the flesh and the devil," but had formed no ignoble ties. He had splendid health, invincible will, limitless desire for success in whatever he touched, clean years behind him, a shadowless future. Suppose he married? A picture rose before him as inviting in its way as the others of the group. Why not? A woman, gentle, beautiful, sympathetic, reflecting him, sharing his life, children in his home, their future to be laid and finished when his own life was practically over.

His heart glowed; a spirit singing of triumph went with him.

Very soon—for he walked quickly—he had crossed the almost empty square to the street where Anne lived. Her sympathy meant much to him, since he wished urgently for her tonight, as if she would divine the power of the new dream possessing him and all his secret thoughts. He might lead her on to talk to him about Olga.

As he went toward the house his eyes were fastened on her windows. He was not aware that a man had come down the garden path and, having opened the gate, stood watching him. But when his eyes became accustomed to the shadow he saw Donald's face under the low drawn hat. It was almost unfamiliar, haggard, of a sick pallor, the old curse with a new shame upon it.

David looked at him in silence. The leniency of secret brotherhood between them had lately influenced his inward attitude toward Donald, and there was an elder brother's scrutiny and impatience in the look he fixed upon him.

"When I sent for you this morning, Donald, I heard you hadn't been home for three days," he said gravely. "I thought you'd gone to the lightship to make the pictures for Arnold's story, though next week would have done for that. Did you go?"

Donald drew back into the path, the light of the street lamp upon him. He seemed to age. He lifted his hands and let them fall heavily.

"No, I didn't. I meant to go. I—well, you see how it's been with me," he said bluntly.

"You've been drinking again."

"You've hit it. Going at the devil's pace."

It was the apathetic admission of one vanquished.

David had always thought of him with impatience as one deliberately bad.

He saw Donald's face under the low drawn hat.

seeking the congenial though it meant wreckage, and he had mentally washed his hands of him long ago. Just because he was a brother and dependent he had retained him on The Citizen despite his lapses, paying him for what work he handed in, never questioning him, letting him entirely alone. He had always viewed two things as hopeless—a woman with a hobby, a man with a vice. There was no lasting virtue in reformation. He had seen so many failures even when men and women hungered for the good they were not strong enough to grasp. And now Donald—the old story! It was a pity. The years behind him were his future temptation. There is shock in a fall, but a step to familiar conditions is easy enough.

He fingered his cigar uneasily, almost at a loss for words.

"I'm sorry you were weak, Donald," and the words, despite his effort, had a flat, stereotyped ring, "but you mustn't fancy it's hopeless. You must just begin the battle over again."

Donald's eyes fell, a faint smile played over his face.

"So she said," and he looked up shrinkingly at Anne's window. "She can't save me, nor can any one else. I must save myself. That's what she said when she sent me away tonight—I must save myself. I tried before—I was so sure—so sure—so happy. But when temptation got to a climax it was like a paper house trying to get the better of a flame. You wouldn't bet on the paper house, would you?" he said sharply.

"Get away from the flame."

"Suppose you carry it with you night and day, night and day, here, here, here?" he called out, his hand tight upon his breast.

His expression changed to stolid gloom, and he looked past David.

"Only for her I'd give it all up and go to the devil without a regret. I didn't mind so much before I knew her. Now when I know what a poor thing I am why can't I forget that she cares what happens to me, go away, quench this damnable torture by satisfying it and die, the sooner the better? Why can't I do it?" and his voice rose and quivered, but sank again to a whisper. "I can't. I can't. No one else cares a hang what becomes of me, but as long as she cares I've got to try in spite of myself. I've got to try and suffer and deserve a little her belief in me."

He laid his arm along the icy bars and let his head fall upon it. David thought of his late self congratulation and contented review of his life, and the sight of this tormented soul was terrible.

"Look here, Donald, this is all nonsense. You mustn't take this lapse so seriously. You must forget it and start anew," and he pulled at the bent shoulder, his tone encouraging. "That's what you must do. And you mustn't think no one cares but Anne," he added softly, his hand tightening where it lay. "I care very much."

"You?"

Donald lifted his head and looked at David steadily.

"Yes, I. Don't forget that. No one was more glad than I when you started in to make something of yourself. I pity you now. By and by I want to be proud of you. Don't say you have no friend but Anne Garrick. I hope you'll deserve her good opinion. But, remember, I count on you too. I will do anything in the world to help you. Don't you believe it?"

He held out his hand. Donald looked at it, but did not stir. There was almost irresistible magnetism in David's kindling eyes, and Donald had always stealthily loved him. But he could not touch the proffered hand, much as he longed to. It would be renouncing too sweet a revenge.

"Won't you take my hand?"

"No," he said insolently. "What have you ever been to me that I should flatter this poetic impulse of yours—this impulse now—that means nothing?"

Chagrin and uneasiness seized David; his hand fell.

"I'm sincere. What do you mean?"

"You care what becomes of me? You care for my contemptible existence? You?"

He stood erect, buttoning his coat tightly across his breast, his eyes brilliant and dry.

"You seem skeptical," and David's tone was uncertain in a way most unusual for him. "Believe it or not, I'm ready to help you now or at any time."

"Oh, are you?" said Donald slowly, nodding his head. "Your generosity comes too late. This is a strange place to have this matter out between us. I never supposed I'd speak of myself to you, but I'm not myself tonight. You, too, seem to have undergone a wonderful change. The words you speak are unfamiliar. Why didn't you say years ago what you've said tonight? Did you ever think of the difference between us—what love and care can make of a boy, what scorn and intolerance can make of him? There were nights when I thought I'd go mad from sheer loneliness, and you, full of your schemes and pleasures, never gave me a thought. My heart starved for sympathy, but I couldn't get near you. Don't let me think of those things before I had learned to say, 'I don't care,' and when you could have helped me. Don't let me think of them."

He brushed past David and pulled open the gate.

"Wait a minute, Donald. What you say requires an answer. Listen to me. You forget circumstances made it almost impossible for us to be friends. My father's unhappiness with your mother, his dislike of you—cruelly unjust, I admit"—

"I was his sin." And a sneer made Donald ugly for a moment. "His eyes couldn't bear to light on me. The sight of me turned him sick and made him nose for comfort among the Psalms telling of King David's repentance. I was his materialized sin, and he scourged me. You know that."

"Yes, but there, don't let us go into that miserable business. I'm only trying to defend myself. The injustice of those days wasn't my fault."

"And after John Temple died was there any difference? You gave me work, but I was nothing to you. For eight years I've been busy at slow homicide, strangling whatever was good in me. You said nothing. You didn't tell me then to brace up and make something of myself. Now"—and the words were a cry of anguish—"I seem to have a malformed soul unfit for struggle. It's like entering a cripple against a giant. Once what wouldn't I have given to have felt you really cared! Think what it would have been to me! I was without a friend, as ready for evil as a laid powder trail is for a match. If you'd spoken then as you did tonight—he paused, looking away from David "You didn't. You offer your encouraging words now. They're useless, and I refuse them."

He closed the gate sharply, and David watched him down the street. There was a sick sense of guilt at his heart For the first time he faced the truth He saw himself wrapped in egotism living for personal success, never thinking of want in Donald's life. He had always known he was cold, practical, stern, apt to view the failures of life with impatience, the road to his heart a narrow one beset by roughnesses; but to realize he had been cruel, too, and that the remorseful soul he had faced tonight was in some degree a result of his self absorption, was a new and hateful fact. Even this new consideration for Donald had been selfish. His own unqualified content had made him kind, as an overfull glass must waste some of its wine.

On leaving the club he had looked forward to a cozy hour with Anne, when he might have led her to talk about her cousin; but he had been roused to something sterner, to face a delayed duty, and when he did anything he did it well.

Anne was writing when he went into the sitting room.

"I met Donald at the gate," were his first words, and he noticed a look of anxiety pass over her face.

"Were you speaking to him?"

"Yes, we had it out. Curious, wasn't it, after all these years to know for the first time the real Donald at your garden gate?"

"Don't be hard on him," she said clearly, standing up.

An expression of defiance in her eyes added to his self reproach. He looked at her thoughtfully.

"I must have seemed a brute to you. Sit down by me here, Anne, and help me a little. I've always been so obedient to my conscience it has never been a nuisance. Well, tonight it stings me like a fretful woman, and I must silence it," he said bitterly. "I'm going to do something for Donald. I've a scheme I think would save him. I'm going to help him with all my heart."

"You will?"

"With all my heart."

"Oh, yes!" she said, seizing David's hand, her love for him rushing over her. "He's done all he could to ruin his life, but you'll help him to value it now. You're so good!"

A STRIKE IN PHARAOH'S TIME.

Workmen Had Their Grievances Then as Now.

The earliest strike occurred about 1450 B. C., or upward of thirty-three centuries ago. Pharaoh was building a new temple of Thebes. The masons received very little cash, but a quantity of provisions, which the contractor thought sufficient, was handed to them on the first day of each month. Sufficient or not, they mostly ate it before the time had elapsed. On one occasion many of them had nothing left quite early in the month, so they marched to the contractor's house, before which they squatted and refused to bulge until justice was done. The contractor persuaded them to lay their distress before Pharaoh, who was about to visit the works, and he gave them a handsome supply of corn, and so all went on well for that month. But the same state of things recurred by the middle of the next, and for some days the men struck work. Various conferences took place, but the men declined to do a stroke until they were given another supply of food. They declared the clerks cheated them, used false weights, and so forth, familiar enough complaints in this country under the truck system. The contractor not complying with their demands they marched to the governor of the city to lay their grievances before him, and he tried to get them to return to work by smooth words, but that was no use, and they insisted on having food. At last, to get rid of them, he drew up an order for corn on the public granary, and the strike was at an end.—St. Louis Republican.

GEN. JOE WHEELER.

A Georgia Friend Tells How He Once Unmasked a Battery.

At the battle of New Hope Church, between Atlanta and Chickamauga, Gen. Walker sent Major William H. Ross, who was on his staff, to ascertain from Gen. Wheeler, who occupied an advance position, what was in his front.

He found the General on his horse, with one leg over the pommel of the saddle. Saluting him, Major Ross said:

"Gen. Walker intends to make a charge at this point, and would like to know if the enemy has a masked battery in front of us."

"I don't know, Major," Gen. Wheeler replied, "but I can soon find out," and swinging into position in his saddle, he galloped up to a slight eminence, accompanied by Major Ross and his staff, and planted a guidon. A moment later a puff of smoke in the distance and the sputtering shriek of a shell as it flew over them, showed what was ahead.

Turning to Major Ross, the General said: "Give Gen. Walker my compliments, and say there is a masked battery in front of us."

Major Ross ventured the remark that it was a rather risky way of unmasking a battery.

"The first shots always fly high," was the cool reply. "It's the shots that follow that are dangerous."

"When I returned and reported to Gen Walker,' said the Major, "I requested him to send some one else the next time he wished batteries unmasked by Gen. Wheeler."—Macon (Ga.) Telegraph.

ORDER OF TRAPPISTS

RECENT GROWTH OF A BRANCH OF THE CISTERCIAN.

Total Number of Monasteries Is Seventy-four—Africa Has Two Settlements of Trappist Nuns and Japan One—In Europe Itself the Trappists Number 4,200.

In connection with the centenary of the great Cistercian order some interesting statistics have lately been published. Among others not the least remarkable figures are those relating to the recent growth of that branch of the order so well known as the Trappists. It is certainly striking that the extension of this, perhaps the most rigorous and austere of all the orders, has been particularly rapid during the present closing decennium of our century.

Between 1890 and the recent jubilee, it is stated, no less than 18 new houses have been established; or, going back to 1869, when the Trappe of Maria Stella, in Bosnia, was founded, the number of new settlements has been 31, and these in very different parts of the world. As at present the total number of Trappist monasteries is 74—viz, 59 for men and 15 for women—it appears that since 1869 the order has well nigh doubled. With the exception of those in America, all the extra European foundations belong to the last 30 years.

Of these Asia claims four—viz, two in Syria; one near Peking, in China, and one in Yesso, the northernmost island of Japan. Africa has six Trappist monasteries in existence and one more already planned in Mozambique (Portuguese East Africa). The six referred to are: One at Staoneli, in Algiers; a second in the Kongo State; a third in Madagascar; a fourth (the celebrated Marianhill monastery and Kaffir settlement) in Natal; a fifth at Cologne, in German East Africa, and, finally, one near the Zambezi, in Rhodesia. Two settlements of Trappist nuns are attached to Marianhill, in Natal, and one other has just been started in Yesso, Japan.

In America both Canada and the United States have three Trappist monasteries each. In West Australia there is an abbey in the diocese of Perth, and in the French island of New Caledonia one has existed since 1876. So far neither India nor South America possess Trappist foundations, though it was reported last year that the patriarch archbishop of Goa intended to introduce them into his diocese. In any case the above record of progress is certainly a remarkable one and seems to open out quite a new chapter in the history of this famous order.

In Europe itself the Trappists have foundations in France, Belgium, Holland, England (Mount St. Bernard's), Ireland (Mount Melleray), Italy, Spain, Austria, Bosnia and Germany, and altogether it is calculated that they possess 74 houses, with 4,200 inmates. The remaining Cistercians, known as the "ordinary" and the "middle" observance, exist only in Europe, where they have 23 convents in France, Belgium, Italy and Austria-Hungary, with 1,650 members.

These figures are certainly wonderful when we remember that at the time of the French revolution the order was almost extirpated. In fact, the 4,200 members of the Trappist congregation of the present day are the representatives of the small body of 21 Trappists who in 1799 made good their escape with their novice master, Dom Augustin l'Estrange, from the abbey of La Trappe.—London Tablet.

Conception of a Catholic Missionary.

The idea of weaving silk from the web of one of the spiders of Madagascar was first conceived by the missionary Pere Camboue, who proved it experimentally possible by having a very fine tissue woven from it. The process is now actually being carried out on a considerable scale, and the spiders may be seen standing in rows by dozens attached to a reel which unwinds a very fine orange silk thread from their bodies in lengths of from 16 to 40 meters per head. When the supply is exhausted, the thread is cut, and the spider, which does not seem to suffer from the treatment, is released to find in her favorite corner of the room an ample supply of flies and gnats, for which she has an insatiable appetite. The thread is covered with viscous matter, from which it is freed by washing in running water, and is so fine that eight strands must be joined to give it sufficient solidity for use. The textile, which is much lighter than ordinary silk, is used entirely for the manufacture of the nets which cover the outside of balloons.—London Tablet.

Souvenirs of the Maine.

Father John Chidwick, formerly chaplain of the battleship Maine, will present to the families of the martyrs of that ship crosses made from brass gathered from the wreck of the ship. The crosses are polished brass. The horizontal beam is an inch in length, the perpendicular 1½ inches. At the top is a small knob perforated so that the little emblems can be used as watch charms or hung pendent from a necklace. The emblems were shipped from New York city recently to Father Chidwick at Norfolk, Va., where the cruiser Cincinnati was supposed to lie. Father Chidwick is chaplain of that cruiser and will arrange for the distribution of the crosses from his headquarters on board that ship.—Pittsburg Catholic.

Birthplace of American Prelates.

From Mr. Reuss' new biographical cyclopedia of the Catholic hierarchy of America The Citizen has compiled this interesting bit of information: Out of the 297 names listed, 92 American prelates were born in Ireland, 71 in the United States, 43 in France, 29 in Germany, 15 in Belgium, 10 in Canada, 8 in Italy, 8 in Austria, 7 in Switzerland, 4 in Spain, 3 in England, 2 in Scotland, 2 in Holland and 1 each in Cuba, Mexico and the West Indies.

A CENTENARIAN NUN.

An Old Pupil Tells of the Centenary of Mother St. Ignace at Boulogne.

The centenary of Mere St. Ignace, Ursuline nun of Boulogne-sur-Mer, France, has recently been celebrated. "An Old Pupil" writes:

"The festivities, which continued for three days, were opened by high mass in the convent chapel, sung by the Rev. M. Tellier of the cathedral. The attendance included the majority of the clergy of Boulogne, including the superiors of the Jesuits, the Redemptorists, the Little seminary and the Institution of St. Stanislas. During mass Canon Le Jeune gave a short discourse, in which, after touching upon the day's fete, he proceeded to show how useful to the world was a long life consecrated to God. After the service each of the clergymen advanced to greet the aged nun, who afterward, without any appearance of fatigue, was conducted to the parlor, where a substantial meal had been prepared for the clergy and members of her family.

"Toward evening the mayor and his deputy honored the centenarian with a visit, and the good nun recommended to their care the poor, for whom she always has had such great solicitude. Two days later 200 ladies, all of whom had been pupils at the convent, united to offer their congratulations. By special permission from the bishop, the cloister had been thrown open for the day, and it was with great delight that they found themselves in the interior of the convent where they had spent so many happy days. Conducted at first to the chapel, they heard mass and listened to a short address delivered by Rev. M. Marette, the convent chaplain.

"The ceremony over, the numerous assembly presented their congratulations to the heroine of the day, after which, having dispersed all over the convent, they were with difficulty reassembled for dinner. During the afternoon an entertainment reproducing the different scenes of the past life of Mere St. Ignace elicited warm applause. The memorable day closed with benediction of the Blessed Sacrament."—London Catholic Times and Opinion.

The Pope on Holy Scripture.

The pope received in audience recently the Rev. Edward Miller, prebendary of Chichester, who presented his holiness with copies of volumes by the late Dean Burgon and himself on "the traditional text of the gospels vindicated and established." The holy father received Prebendary Miller with much kindness and spoke evidently with deep feeling and great energy. He expressed his satisfaction that Mr. Miller's researches were directed toward preserving the words and phrases of the holy gospels against destructive influences. The study of holy writ was most important, and he would like to see it spread farther than it reached at present. Holy Scripture, he said, contains the seed of union on all controverted points such as the eucharistic sacrifice, the primacy and supremacy of St. Peter and others. He believed that such a union would come about in God's good time. He hoped that Mr. Miller would be able to continue his labors and that the blessing of God would rest on him and them.—London Times' Rome Dispatch.

A Miniature Lourdes.

There are many existing in different parts, but the latest is the one at Bordeaux, France. This is an ex voto on the part of the Vicomte Pierre Rœderer in memory of his deceased brother, a fervent votary of Notre Dame de Lourdes. It is a perfect Lourdes grotto in miniature and has its place at the Convent of the Alhambra in connection with the fathers of the Assumption and the work of the Good Press. While erected as an ex voto in memory of a dead brother, it is intended also to be a permanent act of reparation for the outrages upon the Mother of God, of which the French infidel press is constantly guilty. There is to be a continual supply of Lourdes water at the miniature grotto. The Vicomte de Malet has already presented it with a barrel of 75 gallons.—London Catholic Times and Opinion.

An Impressive Scene.

His holiness Leo XIII at the consecration of the archbishop of Naples on a recent Sunday, besides his ordinary vestments, wore the fanon, which is peculiar to the pope when officiating as pontiff, and the pallium. After the consecration the pope led the new bishop, wearing his miter and holding his crozier, to a faldstool, where he inthroned him, and then returned to his own throne, where he sat without a miter. During the singing of the "Te Deum" Cardinal Prisco walked down the chapel blessing the people. The pope finally invested him with the pallium. The scene was most impressive. His holiness appeared most vigorous throughout, though the ceremony lasted over two hours. — London Catholic Times and Opinion.

The Pope as a Living Picture.

The animatograph which was recently taken of the pope in the Vatican gardens ought to be an interesting historical document. He was photographed in the little chaise which he always uses for his airing in the shady groves that surround the "villino." The chamberlain is seated by his side, and the pontifical carriage is preceded and followed by four of the Guardia Noble in their picturesque uniforms, under command of Count Pecci, the pope's nephew. Another film represents the pope as he gets out for his customary stroll on descending from the vehicle, and this includes the chief members of his personal suit and the great functionaries of the Vatican.—London Chronicle.

THE KING OF SIAM.

ONLY A BOY OF FIFTEEN WHEN HE ASCENDED THE THRONE.

Women Police Govern the Harem—No Limit to the Number of Wives Which the Ruler May Have—His Sisters and Daughters Never Marry.

Prabat Somdetch Pra Paranindr Maha Chulalongkorn Patindr Tepa Maha Mongkut Pra Chula Chom Klao Chow Yu Hua, King of Siam, was born on September 21, 1853, and succeeded to the throne on October 1, 1868; and, although only a youth of fifteen, he was already the father of two children. His majesty reads, writes and speaks English with ease, and all conversation between him and the Tsarewitch—present Tsar—who visited Siam in 1891, was carried on in that language. His earliest lessons were from an English governess, and these he continued later in life under an American resident, who acted as tutor. In addition to other Asiatic languages, he possesses a knowledge of Pali, and his admirers claim that he is also a good Sanscrit scholar. The king's private life is passed in utter seclusion within the Khang Nai, or Inside, as the harem is known among the Siamese. This Inher Palace is forbidden ground to any man, European or native, except under very special circumstances, and then only when accompanied by a guard of trusted servants. It is safe to assert that no man has ever been personally acquainted, even in a remote degree, with the life or history of the inmates.

The king is the only representative of his sex who lives in this community of women—one amidst thousands! There is a force of female police for preserving order and punishing any unruly members. Flogging with a rattan is resorted to for certain offenses, and only those wives who are of royal birth enjoy immunity from such treatment.

It is doubtful if any European could fully explain the position of the ladies of the harem. Even if the Siamese themselves know, they do not impart the information; in fact, among them it is contrary to all etiquette to make any allusion to the subject. One of the wives is known as the "first queen" and takes official precedence of all the others. Another is often referred to as the second, and sometimes a third is mentioned. These are all near relatives of the king, and, with the other wives of royal blood, take precedence of those who may be regarded as commoners.

There is no limit to the number of women that the king may take to wife, and although they may be dismissed at will, to have been admitted as a member of the Khang Nai, far from being in any way derogatory, is regarded as an honor. All their children are legitimate.

The king's sisters do not marry, for fear of creating possible rivalry for the throne; neither do his daughters, who remain all their lives in the harem; but perchance some future king may offer them a position similar to that held by their mothers. So jealously are these ladies guarded from contact with the world, that in 1879 an elder sister of the first queen was allowed to drown in the presence of a number of spectators, not one of whom was permitted to put a hand on her, even to save her from certain death.

In common with most of the Siamese, the king is a firm believer in omens, and nothing of importance is done without reference to the Brahmin soothsayers and astrologers who are attached to the palace. As an example, it may be mentioned that on June 25, 1894, his majesty returned from Kohsi-chang, his seaside residence; but as the day was considered unpropitious by the astrologers, the vessel anchored near the mouth of the Meinam until the next day.

The country palace of the King of Siam is called Bang-pa-in. About forty miles north of Bangkok, on the Meinam, are two islands, separated by a narrow channel, not 150 feet wide. On the smaller of these is a Bhuddist temple and college, and on the other is the country residence of the King of Siam, which consists of three buildings—the official, the private and the Chinese palaces. Each is separated from the other by canals, with which the island is intersected, and which, in places, are enlarged into small artificial lakes. Sluice gates are provided between the canal and river, which serve to maintain the level of water in the former, and also for flushing; for, although some seventy-two miles from the sea, the tide rises and falls between three and four feet. Through these gates pass the boats containing the ladies of the household, who, to escape public notice, are landed a few feet from their apartments.

The Ko-pra, or landing stage, is a wooden gangway, hinged at both ends, and resting on a pontoon anchored in water deep enough to allow large launches to moor alongside. At the top of the bank is a band stand, close against a portico of classical design, which forms the entrance to the official palace, and looks down a narrow strip of walks and lawn, shaded by mango and tamarind trees. On the occasion of a grand fete, this was the site of an enormous device that was used for an electric light illumination.—Lady's Realm.

An Irishman was naturalized the other day in Philadelphia, and after the ordeal was over he expressed his satisfaction as follows: "It's not so aisy fur a mon of little eddication to answer all the Judge's questions, but Oi did it, begorra, and, thank God! Oi'm now a native-born American citizen."

CYCLING COMMENT.

F. L. C. Martin, of Park avenue, returned yesterday after spending a few days at Lake Hopatcong. He went and returned awheel.

The colored men of the city who are interested in bicycle racing are planning to give a meet at the Crescent Oval about September 1st. It will be open only to riders of color and will give all the local colored men a chance to prove just what they are made of when it comes to real hard riding.

VISITED THE CLARKS.

MRS. WARDWELL FOUND THEIR CONDITION VERY PITIABLE.

She Could Scarcely Believe That Two Human Beings Could Live in Such a Place—Contributions for Them Today.

Fresh stories of the extreme poverty and want of old Jim Clark and his wife, who live in their ramshackle hut in the woods near Stony Hill, come to light. Other Plainfielders have gone their to investigate the sad story of their great destitution and all coroborrate the facts as exclusively told in The Press.

Last Saturday morning, Mrs. W. Wardwell, of Belvidere road, drove over on a prospecting tour as it were to learn just what was needed. Not wishing to go empty handed, she took half a peck of potatoes, a quart of onions, half a pound of tea, two pounds of sugar, half a pound of butter and two loaves of bread.

She found their shanty at last and found it worse than the descriptions. She says that she could scarcely believe that two human beings could live in such a place. It was absolutely bare of every comfort and the floor looked as if it had not been swept for weeks.

Mrs. Wardwell gave them the articles she had brought and $2 in cash. She found Mrs. Clark almost stone deaf while her husband is almost blind and has a terrible sore on his foot. She township gives them $1.50 a week for their support.

A spring bed has been donated for the use of the couple in addition to a large stock of groceries that have been left at The Daily Press office, and which were this morning taken to the aged couple. The bed can be had by calling at Garrett Q. Packer's furniture store. Mrs. A. D. Smith, of Willow avenue, also contributed some articles this morning.

Mrs. G. W. Lowerre, of 53 Grandview avenue, sent $5 this morning for the old couple.

Mrs. Wm. Pangborn and her children, Miss Carrie Pangborn and Ira Pangborn, of Linden avenue, who have been sojourning at Rose Hill Farm, Somerset county, will return home tomorrow, accompanied by Wm, Pangborn.

ORANGE WON BY A RUN.

THE RIVERDALES OF PLAINFIELD MADE FINE SHOWING.

Played Orange A. C. Yesterday at Orange Oval—Orange Won by a Score of 3 to 2—Best Game of Season—Visitors Bat Hard.

(Special to The Daily Press.

Orange, August 18.—It was a close squeak but the Orange Athletic Club pulled through and defeated the Riverdale Field Club, of Plainfield, yesterday afternoon at baseball by the narrowest kind of a margin. It was one of the best games played in Orange this season and the cranks were properly wild over it. Both teams were strong and made a hard fight.

The Riverdales were the first to score. Reinacker reached first on a hit, was advanced to third on others and reached home on a wild throw to first. In the fifth Orange rolled up three. Smith and Romig made expensive errors and two men scored on a hit by Horner. Then Horner stole third and scored on a passed ball. Fred Smith added another to the Plainfield score in the sixth. He made a three-bagger and scored on Murphy's single.

The Riverdale had two men on bases in the last inning. Westervelt came up to bat with two men out and sent a hot liner to Grissinger who just caught it. The visitors hit Voorhis somewhat, but their hits were scattered. Westervelt did great work. Warren MacLoughlin was on the bench for the visitors.

The individual scores were as follows:

THE COUNTY TROLLEY.

Council for that permission. A refusal would mean a deadlock and unless some compromise was made, a lengthy legal controversy would follow.

To a Press reporter yesterday afternoon a prominent Councilman stated that he had no doubt but that if the Board of Freeholders would withdraw their objection against the granting of the franchise by the Council, there would be no difficulty in having the Council agree to allow the county trolley system to go through the same thoroughfare over the route intended by the originators.

A WORTHY WORK.

Lack of Funds Deprive Exhilirating Air to Suffering Babies.

As there is a lack in the funds to carry on the work of the camp on the mountains for the little children, which is supported by voluntary contribution, the committee wish to make an appeal to the people of Plainfield. This is such a worthy object and the nurse is doing such grand work that it seems as though the people here should be interested enough to give their assistance.

In some cases the little ones lives have been saved just by this little change and by the tender care of the nurse while at the camp.

It cost $3 a day to take these little ones to the camp. If you only knew what a great benefit this little change is to them your hearts would be touched and you would gladly give us a little towards our funds.

The physicians send us more applicants every day than we can really take care of, owing to our small amount of money.

Money is what we so badly need and we hope for a large response to our appeal, and all contributions can be sent to Mrs. W. A. Coddington, 409 East Second street, and the Committee will greatly appreciate your help.

Dog Attacked a Cyclist.

As Willard M. Miner, of East Sixth street, was riding his wheel along Franklin place, this morning, he was attacked by a large dog owned by Dr. Carman, of Franklin place. After barking at him, the dog set his teeth in Mr. Miner's leg. The flesh was badly bruised but the skin was not broken. If the dog runs about the street again, it will probably be made way with.

J. OAKLEY NODYNE DEAD

ONE OF THE OLD-TIMERS WHO CONNECTED PAST WITH PRESENT.

Died in Jersey City Tuesday Night—At One Time He Was a Prominent Lawyer, and a Friend of Horace Greeley

Death has stepped in again and severed a human link that connected the early days of Plainfield, when the place was but a country village, and the present bustling city. It is in the passing away of J. Oakley Nodyne, one of the old-timers.

In Greenwood cemetery today the body of Mr. Nodyne, who died in his home in Jersey City last Tuesday night, will be interred. He was born in New York in 1816, and once was prominent in Brooklyn and New York. He lost a fortune through speculation. He was an alumnus of Union College and a member of the bars of New York and New Jersey. When in good health he was an active Mason.

In early life Mr. Nodyne lived in Plainfield for many years. In the fifties he took an active part in politics as a Republican. He was Librarian and Registrar of the New York Free College shortly before the war. Horace Greeley charged him in the Tribune with promoting a movement to make General Spinola, a Democrat, Registrar of Deeds.

Mr. Nodyne and Mr. Greeley afterward became good friends. In 1861 Mr. Nodyne was elected Alderman of the Tenth ward of Brooklyn. It was said he was the first Republican Alderman elected below the Harlem Bridge. Later he served as Street Commissioner in Brooklyn. He twice declined a nomination for the Assembly. He was the friend of A. T. Stewart, Chester A. Arthur and Governors Seward and Hoffman.

Justice Nodyne was a resident of Plainfield for about fifteen years, during which time he occupied himself chiefly with the justice of the peace business. He was at one time overseer of the poor in this city and filled the position with credit. As a member of Trinity Reformed church, he was a faithful attendant at the services when able. The funeral services were held this afternoon from the residence of his son, William H. S. Nodyne, 257 Warren street, Jersey City, at which place he died. Mr. Nodyne had not lived in Plainfield for some time past, as it was more convenient for him to reside with his son in Jersey City.

PREPARING FOR THE PRESIDENT.

Vice-President Hobart Says McKinley Will Come to Lake Hopatcong.

(Special to The Daily Press.)

Lake Hopatcong, Aug. 18.—Manager Rand, of the Lake Hopatcong Club, has received a telegram from Vice-President Hobart stating that President McKinley would visit the club on August 27. The President and Vice-President, with their families, will arrive together on that date, and will spend two weeks at the clubhouse.

Arrangements are now being made to give the distinguished guests a fitting reception. They will be met and escorted to the clubhouse by several tallyho parties, and the Seventh and Twenty-second Regiment bands of New York will furnish music. Captain George W. Rand, of the Seventh New York, who is managing the reception, is arranging for a grand concert to be given in the club parlors on the night of the President's arrival, and the rooms which the party is to occupy are to be handsomely decorated. They will contain oil portraits of President McKinley, Vice-President Hobart, Attorney-General Griggs, Senator Sewell, Senator Smith, General Congdon, Congressman Pitney and Franklin Murphy.

Leased Reform Hall.

The members of the Calvary Baptist church who have been holding services in the building opposite the First Baptist church, have given up their place of worship and leased Reform Hall for the present. This action is taken so that the accommodations will be larger. The capacity of Reform Hall is about nine hundred. The first service will be held next Sunday in Reform Hall. In the meantime the members will arrange to build a new church on the lot back of Reform Hall. The old buildings are being moved back and inside of four months the new church will be completed.

Disappeared, a Wagon.

About four weeks ago a man named William Easton, of this city, borrowed a wagon and a set of harness from David Blackford, of South Plainfield. Since that time Mr. Blackford has not seen his property and only once has he heard concerning it. A short time ago he heard the man was in Philadelphia with the wagon and harness, having borrowed a horse somewhere else. Mr. Blackford has had a warrant issued by Justice Storms, of New Market, for the arrest of Easton, and he hopes to be able to secure his property.

—There will be a special meeting of the Epworth League of Grace M. E. church tomorrow evening at 8 o'clock in the church. As this meeting is of great importance, a full attendance is desired.

THE LIFE OF A WHEEL.

Depends a Great Deal on the Treatment It Receives From Its Rider.

It has long been a matter of great surprise to wheelmen that so delicately constructed a piece of mechanism as the modern bicycle stands so well the rough-and-tumble treatment it so frequently receives. It is ridden by hundreds of thousands who have no mechanical knowledge, and yet accidents are comparatively rare. It seems to be little short of wonderful that a wheel weighing in the neighborhood of twenty-five pounds should be able to carry from six to eight times its weight over all sorts of roads at a speed running up as high as twenty miles an hour, day in and day out, and have damages come, except in rare instances, from defective forgings only. It is more than likely, however, that most of the protection is given by the pneumatic tire, which prevents the wheel from ever getting a really hard blow, the air cushion taking up most of the force of impact. A well-known manufacturer is quoted as saying that the life of a bicycle is, at most, an uncertain quantity, and that the treatment it receives at the hands of the rider is the most important factor. He considers it quite possible for a machine to be strong enough to carry a rider of 180 pounds, and yet give way under a rider of 150 pounds. It all depends, he says, upon the relative strain put upon it by the rider. The really good bicycles, and there are many, are safe and may be ridden thousands of miles without any signs of giving way.

Bicycle Notes.

When it comes to a woman on a bicycle there's just one step 'twixt the charming and the ridiculous—but that step is a whole flight.

Many a soldier in this glorious war will not know the horrors of a modern battle until he has had a bicycle shot out from under him.

The large sprocket wheels which seem to be the fad this year on most chain-driven wheels are a mistake from a mechanical viewpoint. They may look all right, being the vogue, but they add just so much labor to the rider. Where's the use in having big sprocket wheels back and front for a 70 gear when smaller ones answer the same purpose and require less chain length, and therefore induce less friction? The smaller the sprockets the easier the work.

Students of character as depicted in physiognomy, especially in the faces of great athletes, have often noticed the resemblance which exists between Eddie Bald, the champion cyclist of the world, and James J. Corbett, ex-champion pugilist of America, who held the same relative position in pugilism that Bald does in cycling. It might be further stated that Charles Comiskey, the great baseball Captain of the old St. Louis Club, also bears a strong resemblance to Bald and Corbett in expression and features. It is rather singular that the three great leaders in cycling, baseball and pugilism should resemble one another. Perhaps this type of face denotes dominance in athletics.

When looking for an evasive squeak or a noise even worse an inspection of the bearings will sometimes show that in replacing the balls, after cleaning, too many have been put in one cup. This causes overcrowding, which will not only cause the noise, but make the wheel run harder and eventually wear out the cones and cups.

Many riders have a habit of jerking out their knees at the beginning of the stroke when pedaling. This has an ugly appearance, and wastes a considerable amount of power otherwise available for propulsion. The knees should travel up and down without any lateral motion.

The rider who is dependent upon his brake and never back pedals is helpless should his brake become out of order. Every rider should practice the art and thus prepare himself for any emergency.

In the German army the cyclist has scored a distinct hit. The cycle corps of 1,000 men at the recent maneuvers outdid the cavalry in swiftness and endurance, and easily proved superior in a majority of tests as scout, patrol and courier duty. The German army cyclists are regarded as the most proficient in the world.

When hot and fatigued after long riding, allow cold water to run over the wrists of both hands. This simple remedy allays thirst and braces the muscles.

Sprains and fractures should be treated with hot water, and not with cold. It is astonishing how hot applications relieve pain, and hot bandages, by pressure, prevent swelling and inflammation.

Eddie Bald has had for years the reputation of having the instincts of a true sportsman, and of always being a good loser. He is not one to offer excuses when he sustains defeat. If he is beaten he smiles, and lets it be understood that it was because the others rode faster.

The idea of a number of trotting associations combining with cycle race meet promoters to control professional cycling is said to be viewed with favor by prominent members of several trotting associations.

The enemy of the shoe trade is the carrying over of stock from year to year until it gets clear off style. It deceives customers. It disgusts clerks. It turns profit into lose. Hence goods of summer fashion are to go before August 31st. We'd rather have the cash than to carry over the goods, besides we want the room for fall stock.

DESERTED WIFE WANTS DIAMOND RING BACK.

Given as Security for Note Made by Faithless Husband.

SAD TALE FROM CRANFORD.

CASE HEARD IN DISTRICT COURT AT ELIZABETH YESTERDAY.

Mrs. Julia Thornton Tells How Her Husband Treated Her Shamefully and Then Ran Away With Another Woman—Now She Wants to Recover Ring Which She Says She Parted With Under Duress.

(Special to The Daily Press.)

Elizabeth, August 19.—An interesting and somewhat sensational case was tried in the district court yesterday, in which a number of Cranford's best-known people were involved. It was the action of Mrs. Julia Thornton against Miss Emeline Dunham, of Cranford, for the recovery of a diamond ring given by the plaintiff as security for a note executed by her husband, E. W. Thonton, in favor of Miss Dunham for a sum of money loaned.

Mrs. Thornton is a young woman, and, according to her testimony while on the stand, she has been treated very badly by her husband, who has now deserted her. She was accompanied by her sister, Mrs. Jennie Fesmeier, of Plainfield, and was represented by her brother, Louis A. Allen, of Passaic. Mrs. Thornton gave her engagement ring, valued at $120, as security for a loan on a note for $60 obtained by her husband from Miss Dunham in 1896. After her husband deserted her she began the suit to recover the ring, as it was all the property he had left her. The note had gone to protest, and Miss Dunham held the ring to reinburse her for the amount of cash Thornton obtained.

Mrs. Thornton was the first witness. Much of her story was not admitted in evidence, as not bearing on the case. Lawyer Allen desired to show that his client and sister had been obliged to part with the ring under duress. Mrs. Thornton said that her husband had deserted her on May 17th last, and went away with a woman named Helen J. Grant. Since he had disappeared she had received no money from him. Before he went he had pawned her watch and all of her jewelry and had left her practically destitute.

Mrs. Fesmeier went upon the stand and testified to having seen Thornton strike his wife, but this was stricken out from the testimony.

Lawyer John Brown appeared as counsel for Miss Dunham, who was the only witness for the defense. She stated that on one occasion Mrs. Thornton had told her that she was willing to give up the ring, and then some time afterward had said that she, Mrs. Thornton, had received no peace from her husband until she had given up the ring as security. The note had been renewed and then had gone to protest. She had paid the amount for renewal, and the protest fees as well, giving $7 for this purpose to Harry C. Thornton, a brother of E. W. Thornton, who was one of the indorsers of the note. Harry Thornton had taken the money to the First National Bank in this city and there had the note renewed.

Mrs. Thornton became slightly hysterical during the summing up, and was sobbing mournfully. She had broken down while upon the stand, and there was deep sympathy expressed for her by those in the court room.

When Thornton went away, Lawyer Allen said he brutally told his wife that he was going with another woman who had more money than she had. It was at this point that both plaintiff and counsel broke down, and the scene was affecting.

After Lawyer Allen closed, Judge Atwater announced that he would reserve decision as to the possession of the ring, and gave the lawyers opportunity to submit briefs.

Looking for Support.

Prof. R. M. Van Horn, principal of the Public School at Belvidere, Warren county, is in Plainfield, endeavoring to secure the support and sanction of local and State Public School officials for his candidacy for the position of superintendent of schools for Warren county. The present incumbent, Mr. Price, is a Democrat and has held the position for eighteen years. Mr. Van Horn is a Republican, a graduate of Lafayette college, and is highly recommeuded for the position he seeks.

TROUBLE IN A CHURCH

FIRST CHURCH OF CHRIST MAY LOSE ITS EDIFICE.

Members Disagreed With the Pastor and Withdrew—Interest on the Mortgage Due—The Members Talk Openly.

For some time past the First Church of Christ, otherwise known as the Christian church, located on Grove street, has not been in a flourishing condition. It is no secret, and the members are the ones who talk most freely about the church troubles which seem to grow more every day. The membership has materially decreased, and it looks as though the building might be closed up by the executors of the Stewart estate, who hold a mortgage of $2,100 on the property.

The serious troubles of the church began soon after the present pastor, Rev. H. W. McKane, took charge.

The first person of importance to leave the flock was Rev. B. W. Hand, a layman. Mr. Hand's reason for withdrawing was that he could not agree with Pastor McKane's methed of running the church.

The membership was so reduced that the pastor called a meeting to inquire into the troubles that threatened the destruction of the church. Mr. Hand plainly told Mr. McKane that he did not belive in his methods and he would not continue to labor in the church.

Pastor McKane was not moved, however. He stood firm, and some of the members withdrew. Thus taking their support away from the church, the pastor has felt the loss very much. He gets about $4 a week, it is said. Frequently he gets up socials, entertainments, etc., for benefit, of the church, but generally the attendance is small.

Another thing which is a great drawback to the church is a debt of $2,100. The original amount was $2,000, but $100 has been added for interest.

B. W. Hand and Fred Canfield are executors of the Stewart estate, that holds the mortgage on the church property, and they say that a settlement will have to be made very soon to satisfy the heirs. Pastor McKane is trying to have the Church Extension Society loan the members the required amount to satisfy the estate and then give the members another chance to pay off the debt.

A JUDGE TO BE ARRESTED

PLAINFIELD WOMAN DECLARES HE MISAPPROPRIATED FUNDS.

Mrs. Agatha Allen Alleges That ex-Judge Fullerton Received $8,000 From Her Husband and Still Has $6,615.58.

(Special to The Daily Press.)

New York, August 19—Justice John S. Lambert signed an order yesterday for the arrest of ex-Judge Wm. Fullerton, of Newburg, N. Y. The application was made by James M. Kerr, a member of the law firm of Campbell & Hance, of 220 Broadway, on behalf of Mrs. Agatha Allen, of Plainfield, N. J. She alleges that ex-Judge Fullerton is indebted to her in the sum of $6,615.68 with interest from Dec. 24th, 1881. She says that on Oct. 18th, 1875, her first husband, James J. Reid, gave ex Judge Fullerton $5,000 to invest in her name, and that subsequently other sums, amounting to $8,000, were placed in his hands for a similar purpose. She says the investments were never made, and that, allowing for the money returned to her, there is the shortage stated above. She says she has made repeated demands for the money, and that she started the present proceedings on learning that ex-Judge Fullerton is insolvent. Counsel for Mrs. Allen asked Judge Lambert to fix the bail at $13,000, but it was put at $5,000.

A like application was made by Mrs. Allen to Justice Maddox in Brooklyn Sept. 17th last, but it was denied on the ground that the action was barred by the statute of limitations, and that the court believed that the defendant was a responsible party. The charge of insolvency is now backed up by an affidavit of H. R. Lydecker, a Newburg lawyer.

Dr. Zeglio will perform the operation next Monday.

JUNIORS AT THE PARK.

AMERICAN MECHANICS HAD A BIG TIME BY THE SEA.

New Brunswick, Elizabeth and Fair Haven Councils Won the Prizes in the Parade—Plainfielders Last to Leave

(Special to The Daily Press.)

Asbury Park, August 18.—The contingent of Plainfield citizens who came to this seashore resort at 10:20 o'clock yesterday morning and were the last excursion to leave at 9:40 o'clock last night, formed a good portion of the crowd that attended the American Mechanics' parade.

It was the largest crowd of the season, special trains arriving from Jersey City, Newark, Rahway, New Brunswick, Plainfield, Elizabeth, Trenton, Camden and Philadelphia. The visitors began to arrive at 9 a. m. and by noon the resort was crowded with the wearers of the red, white and blue. Nearly every business house and hotel was decorated, and flags were displayed on every hand.

The annual parade of the order took place at 11:30 a. m., and nearly two thousand members of the order marched through the streets of Ocean Grove and Asbury Park. There were about fifty subordinate councils represented in the line. Eight bands and drum corps furnished music. Milan Ross, of this place, acted as grand marshal, assisted by Howard Hulick and William H. Stauffer.

About fifty members from Somerset and Franklin Councils, of Plainfield, turned out in the parade, under the charge of F. A. Long, one of the aids to the marshal. They made a presentable appearance.

Governor Voorhees, Adjutant-General William Stryker, Colonel Alexander C. Oliphant, Captain William C. Buttler, U. S. A.; Major Thomas S. Chambers, Bishop J. N. FitzGerald, "Founder" Bradley, Mayor Frank L. TenBroeck and the Councilman of Asbury Park rode in carriages in the parade, and afterward reviewed the procession from the grand stand in Atlantic Square.

The State officers who rode in the possession were State Councillor Fergus A. Dennis, of Princeton; State Vice-Chancellor Lewis L. Hansell, of Jersey City; State Council Secretary William H. Miers, of Trenton; State Council Treasurer J. J. Reed, of Seabright; State Council Conductor Maurice A. Rogers, of Camden; State Council Warden Frederick J. Blackshaw, of Jersey City; and Junior Past State Councillor C. T. Fisler, of Camden.

Goodwill Council, of New Brunswick, and the Junior Order of United American Wheelmen, of Elizabeth, made the best appearance in line, and the prizes offered by the local council were awarded to them. The Elizabeth boys rode bicycles trimmed with red, white and blue ribbon. Onward Council, of Fair Haven, received a prize for having the largest percentage of members in line.

After the parade the Juniors and their friends spent the afternoon on the beach and taking in the sights about town.

The Plainfield excursionists arrived at the North avenue station last night at 11:40 o'clock, thoroughly tired out as a result of their trip. The return from the Park was a very tedious one and nearly half the excursionists dropped off into a restless sleep. Before leaving the Park it rained steady for an hour and a half so that as far as pleasure was concerned the train might have left at an earlier hour.

One of the cars had a hot box at Elizabethport and it was necessary to delay the train for some time at that point to take that car out of the train. The passengers were then crowded into the other coaches, making it disagreeable for all. Many of the excursionists were obliged to stand up.

A DOUBLE WEDDING.

Rev. T. Logan Murphy Marries Sisters to Men of Their Choice.

A very unusual event took place yesterday afternoon at the rectory of the Church of the Holy Cross, when a double wedding ceremony was performed by Rev. T. Logan Murphy, rector of the church.

The contracting couples were Edward Drake and Miss Anna Belle Snyder; Frederick Floyd Diem and Miss Julia Louise Snyder, the brides being sisters. The ceremony was performed in a quiet manner at 3:30 o'clock, and the parties married were unattended, and after the ceremony they returned to their homes where they will reside in the future.

Hong Kong, August 19, 1:35 p. m.—American Consul Wildman today requested of the Hong Kong government permission for the ships of the American fleet under the command of Rear Admiral Dewey, now at Manila, to be allowed to dock for repairs here.

The request was a surprise to the officials here and it presented the possibilities for so many serious complications that it had to be submitted to the British home government for answer. It was cabled to England at once.

There is no doubt but that the British officials here would be glad to grant the permission were it not for these complications that it must inevitably cause. Under such circumstances it was deemed best to allow the matter to go to headquarters.

Meanwhile the harbor police have ordered the American despatch boat Zafiro, which arrived here with the despatches from Dewey and Merritt, to leave British waters within twenty-four hours.

ARE THEY ALL OURS?

President and Officials Wonder Whether Surrender Included all Phillippine Islands.

(From the Union Associated Press.)

Washington, August 19, 1:31 p. m.—Assistant Secretary of State Moore was in conference with President McKinley this morning on the question as to whether the surrender made by Gen. Jandenes at Manila last Saturday included the whole of the Phillippine Islands or only as much of that territory as was occupied by the American troops.

It is the general belief in official circles, however, that the surrender included the whole group of islands. Inquiry has been made by the President of the officers in command at Manila for definite information on the subject.

STORM CALLED A HALT.

PICNIC OF THE TROLLEY EMPLOYES INTERRUPTED AT MIDNIGHT.

Mountainside Grove Decorated for the Occasion—A Thousand People There—Dancing the Principal Amusement.

The employes of the Plainfield Street Railway Company held their annual picnic yesterday afternoon and evening at Mountainside Grove. Last evening there were 1,000 people present and everything passed off smoothly and quietly. The grove was prettily decorated for the occasion with red, white and blue bunting, while many colored lights added greatly to he general appearance of the grounds. Of course, dancing was the feature. Music was furnished by Eugene O'Reilly. The picnic was continued until 12 o'clock, when it was thought best to bring the affair to an end, owing to the threatening weather. The picnic will be continued tonight, and those holding tickets can use them this evening. Those in charge of the picnic have done all in their power to make the event one of pleasure for all, and in this respect they did not fail.

Yesterday afternoon and evening one of the trolley cars, elaborately decorated, made a special trip over the lines of the company, filled with specially invited guests, and last evening it made regular trips to the picnic held under the auspices of the trolley employes. This generosity on the part of Superintendent Adelmann was much appreciated by those who were invited to go on the special trip.

A FAVORITE SPEAKER HERE.

Robert E. Speer Will Address the Men's Meeting at the Y. M. C. A. Sunday.

Robeet E. Speer, a Princeton graduate, who has been engaged to speak at the Y. M. C. A. building Sunday afternoon at 4:15 o'clock, is a favorite speaker in Plainfield. Mr. Speer is a talented young man and delivered two powerful addresses at the International convention of the Student Volunteer Movement for foreign missions held in Cleveland, O., in February last, at which there were 1,598 student delegates, besides 623 clergymen.

At the meeting Sunday afternoon there will be singing by a choir of male voices, and Wm. N. Runyon will sing several solos. F. H. Andrews, W. D. Murray and Dalziel Schoonmaker, of this city, attended the convention at Cleveland, and can testify to the interesting addresses made by Mr. Speer.

DOG DIED HARD.

It Took Eleven Shots to End Career of Mad Canine.

A strange and suspicious looking canine found his way into Elmwood place late yesterday afternoon and the neighbors were inclined to believe that he was mad. He acted very queerly and had several fits. Word was sent to Patrolman Mattox and he hastened to the scene of the trouble. By this time the dog had gained entrance to Julius Williams' yard, and was there when the officer arrived. It required eleven shots from two revolvers to kill the dog. After nine shots were fired the officer thought the canine was dead and was just going away, when he happened to look around. It was well that he did, for the dog was found walking about the yard. Two more shots put the animal out of misery, and the remains have not yet been taken away.

DISCOVERED FUN IN PLAINFIELD.

But, Oh, What a Difference in the Morning When He Woke Up.

He came from Dunellen, so he told the police, and wanted to see how much fun there really was in Plainfield. He tried several of the resorts over in the borough and loaded up on a combination of drinks. Only one result was possible. He became roaring drunk and wandered down Somerset street, performing all kinds of stunts.

Patrolman Cash caught him just across the city line and trotted him down to the lockup, where he spent the night. This morning he was haled before the City Judge and told it was the first time he ever tried such a performance. Sentence was suspended, for the Judge was in good humor.

DUGWAY ROAD IMPROVED

A DETERMINED ATTEMPT TO PUT IT IN CONDITION.

North Plainfield Township Committee Has Just Had it Turnpiked and Gutters Paved—Was Washed Away by Storm.

The country roads of Jersey, as well as other States, have been poor enough to satisfy the most exacting. The system of macadamized roads that is gradually stretching all through this part of the State is changing things so that progression over those roads is fast becoming a pleasure. In the hilly sections, however, the efforts to repair the roads and place them in good condition are frequently met with serious obstacles. Such has been the history of the efforts of the North Plainfield Township Committee to put the Dugway road in condition.

Every time there happens to be a heavy rain, the Dugway road is immediately converted into a mountain torrent and drains the surrounding mountainside, carrying the water down the steep hill into the brook in Washington Valley.

Now, several months ago, an effort was made to have the Dugway road macadamized. So a top-dressing of crushed stone was laid over the big boulders that form a firm roadbed and all was carefully leveled. Two days after a big storm came, and the Township Committee found that their crushed stone had been carefully deposited at the foot of the hill while the road was bare. This was not encouraging.

The road is largely used by the neighbors, and complaints at its terrible condition again started a movement in the Township Committee. This time they arranged to have the road "turnpiked," that is, graded with the centre high and the gutters low and set with stones. This job has just been completed and the Committee is hoping that the extra sum spent in paving the gutters and grading the roadway will prevent the wholesale departure of the stone for the foot of the hill.

CLARKS PROVIDED FOR.

OLD COUPLE'S IMMEDIATE NEEDS HAVE BEEN SATISFIED.

Plenty to Eat and More Comforts for Their Home—The $5 Cash Contribution Will be Used Later on for Needs.

Mrs. Wallace Vail paid her second visit to the home of the Clarks yesterday and found it a little more cheerful than it was, thanks to the interest which the description of the old couple's condition in The Daily Press brought about. Mrs. Vail says that she thinks they were on the brink on starvation, but now they are well supplied with groceries for the present.

The $5 in cash which was contributed by G. W. Lowerre, of Grandview avenue, and which The Daily Press put in charge of Mrs. Vail, the latter has decided to hold till a little later on when the old couple will need some winter clothing and other necessities. Their judgment in the matter of finances is rather poor, and it is feared that if given to them now it will not be used to as good purposes as later on. For the present their needs and comforts have been provided for. Mrs. Vail has received the following contributions for the family: Mrs. Dr. Adams, clothing; Mrs. James Manning, clothing; William H. Shotwell, bag of flour; William Schwarts, three pair of hose; V. L. Frazee, tea, soap, sweet potatoes; Mrs. Marcley, bread; Mrs. McVey, mattress, two comforters; Mr. Beerbower, Sr., suit of thick clothes, with other useful articles.

Henry Rogers will see to it that the contributions are transported to the home of the Clarks.

Cleaned Out the Gutters.

Health Inspector William Addis deserves much credit for his forethought in having the gutters on Park avenue cleaned last Wednesday afternoon previous to the heavy rain that fell in the city. This work belongs to the street commissioner's department, but Mr. Addis took it upon himself to have the task performed in the absence of Mr. Gavett. As a result the water made its escape from Park avenue quickly and gave pedestrians little trouble.

Rookery Threatened With Destruction.

The inhabitants of the city jail, the crawling and the creeping ones, had their morning rudely disturbed yesterday morning when their home was threatened with destruction by fire. The fire was inside the chimney, and a still alarm was sent in. A hose wagon responded. The fire was extinguished with a hand extinguisher and the inhabitants crawled back to their respective places of abode.

L. A. W. SUSPENDS LOCAL WHEELMEN.

G. H. Kenyon Permanently Ruled Off L. A. W. Tracks.

A TRACK BLACKLISTED.

ALL CAUSED BY UNSANCTIONED RACE MEET THERE.

Kenyon Did Not Care to Pay $5 for Sanction and so Chairman Mott of the Racing Board Acts—Thirteen Local Riders, Including Sims and Richter, Suspended for a Month.

In the many years that bicycle racing has flourished in Plainfield, it has never occurred until now that the officials of the League of American Wheelmen, who are considered the guardians of amateur racing in this country, have been called upon to discipline any of the local race meet promoters for violation of the racing rules of the L. A. W. Now, George H. Kenyon, a bicycle dealer of this city, has been permanently ruled off any L. A. W. track in every capacity, a local track has been blacklisted, and thirteen local riders have been suspended for a month.

The cause of all the trouble was a meet given on Maltby's track several weeks ago by Mr. Kenyon. It was only for local riders and was rather an informal affair throughout. It was Mr. Kenyon's first attempt at race-promoting, and he had never been brought into connection with the L. A. W. before. Consequently, he was not acquainted with the methods. When Local Consul T. A. Cuming learned of the proposed meet, he notified Mr. Kenyon that he should secure a sanction.

There was a misunderstanding regarding the cost of a sanction, Mr. Kenyon getting the idea that it could be obtained merely on application. He applied and was instructed to send the fee of $5, on the receipt of which his sanction would be granted. Deeming L. A. W. consent too expensive for such a little affair, Mr. Kenyon went ahead despite the protests of the Local Consul.

In duty bound, the consul notified the chairman of the Racing Board of the race, but made a plea for leniency for the men, as most of them did not understand the situation. Since then the matter has rested in the hands of Chairman Albert Mott, of the Racing Board. He first planned to make the suspension for the men six months, but the request of the local consul, accompanied by his explanation of the circumstances, reduced it to one month's time.

The following is an extract from the official bulletin of Chairman Mott:

G. H. Kenyon, Plainfield, N. J., is permanently ruled off all L. A. W. tracks in every capacity for promoting unsanctioned races, after repeated warning.

The Maltby track, Plainfield, N. J., is placed upon the list of those to which sanction will be refused, because of an unsanctioned meet held upon it.

The following racing men are suspended to Sept. 20th, 1898 for competing in the above unsanctioned meet:

Harry Condit, Ed. Duck, Joe Harkins, Arthur Chapman, Paul Otto, Charles Westerfield, Eugene Richter, Joe Burke, Peter Sims, M. Burke, M. Owens, J. Sorrenson, William Dodd.

MERRITT GIVES REPORT

A Loss of Fifty Men at the Taking of Manila.

SPANISH MISRULE ENDED

The Despatch Tells of the Demands for Surrender. The Attack and American Losses. No Disorder Reported. The Insurgents Must Recognize the United States' Authority.

Washington, Aug. 19.—The war department yesterday received a dispatch from General Merritt, reporting the fall of Manila and giving the details of the demand for surrender and incidents preliminary to the final capture of the city.

The dispatch, which had been eagerly awaited, was immediately communicated to President McKinley. It reads as follows:

Manila, August 13.

Adjutant General, Washington:

On seventh inst. Admiral Dewey joined me in forty-eight hour notification to Spanish commander to remove noncombatants from city. Same date, reply received expressing thanks for humane sentiments, and stating Spanish without places of refuge for non-combatants now within walled town.

On ninth inst sent joint note inviting attention to suffering in store for sick and non-combatants in case it became our duty to reduce the defences; also setting forth hopeless condition of the Spanish forces, surrounded on all sides, fleet in front, no prospect of reinforcements, and demanded surrender as due to every consideration of humanity; same date received reply admitting their situation, but stating council for defence declares request for surrender cannot be granted, but offered to consult government if time was granted necessary for communication via Hong Kong. Joint note in reply declining.

On the 13th joined with navy in attack with following results: After about half an hour's accurate shelling of Spanish lines, McArthur's brigade on the right and Green's on the left, under Anderson, made vigorous attack and carried Spanish works. Loss not accurately known—about fifty in all. Behavior of troops excellent; co-operation of the navy most valuable. Troops advanced rapidly on walled city, upon which white flag shown, and town capitulated. Troops occupy Malate, Binonde, walled city, San Miguel. All important centers protected. Insurgents kept out. No disorder or pillage.

MERRITT.

The war department has sent the following order to General Merritt regarding the occupation of the city of Manila by the American forces. It was first made public yesterday:

Adjutant General's Office,
Washington, Aug. 17.

Major General Merritt, Manila, Philippines:

The president directs that there must be no joint occupation with the insurgents. The United States, in the possession of Manila city, Manila bay and harbor, must preserve the peace and protect persons and property within the territory occupied by their military and naval forces. The insurgents and all others must recognize the military occupation and authority of the United States and the cessation of hostilities proclaimed by the president. Use whatever means in your judgment are necessary to this end. All law abiding people must be treated alike.

By order, Secretary of War.

H. C. CORBIN,
Adjutant General.

The meagre details in General Merritt's dispatch received from Manila yesterday are disappointing to army officers here. The results, already anticipated in the press dispatches, are received with visible marks of approval. There is nothing in the dispatches received in the last day or two which indicates that the insurgents in the Philippines are more ugly than they have been. The officials at Manila are guarding against any uprising on the part of Aguinaldo's forces. The instructions sent to General Merritt specify there shall be no co-operation with the insurgents, who must understand that the United States occupy, completely and undividedly, the city, bay and harbor of Manila. The Washington authorities do not anticipate any serious trouble with Aguinaldo.

There is a flutter of curiosity in the department of state to know from some authoritative source just how much of a victory was gained by our arms at Manila. If it be true that the entire group of the Philippine islands was surrendered with the chief city, the responsibility devolves upon us for keeping order throughout the group. It also greatly simplifies one aspect of the problem which will be presented to the peace commission. The question of just how much we had gained by Dewey's victory on the first of May has caused no little perplexity here.

Manila, Aug. 13, via Hong Kong, Aug. 18.—The Spanish flag, which for 350 years has floated over the city of Manila, was lowered this evening and the Stars and Stripes hoisted in its place. The American band played the "Star Spangled Banner" and Admiral Dewey's warships fired a national salute. It had been Admiral Dewey's hope since he destroyed the Spanish fleet in Manila bay without the loss of a single American life, that he would be able to effect the surrender of the city in a manner equally bloodless, and, so far as his own command is concerned, this has been accomplished. All of the lives that were lost in the capture of the city were due to the precipitate action of the army, whose haste to advance was in opposition to Admiral Dewey's advice.

Shot for a Deer.

Utica, N. Y., Aug. 19.—At White Lake about three miles from Forestport, on the Mohawk and Malone railroad, yesterday, Fred Recknall mistook his son Philip, aged sixteen, for a deer while hunting, and shot him, death ensuing soon after. The family resides at White Lake. A few years ago another son, George, was shot and killed in mistake for a bear.

PRESENTATION AT CAMP BLACK.

Ceremonies at Camp Black Interfered With by the Rain.

Hempstead, L. I., Aug. 19.—After a reviewing stand had been erected and elaborate preparations made for the presentation of colors to the regiments at Camp Black, yesterday afternoon, rain fell and prevented the proposed display. Fully eight thousand people had assembled on the little eminence in front of the Eagle headquarters, where the grand stand had been built, when at 4.45 o'clock dark clouds began to gather in the west and great drops of warm rain forced all to seek shelter. It was soon seen that the presentation could not take place according to schedule, so Colonel Schuyler, the post commander, invited the delegations from the Sons of the Revolution and the Society of Colonial Wars into the big officers' mess tent of the Two Hundred and Third regiment, where the flags were delivered to the several regiments. Mr. Thompson made the presentation speech.

The flags were then turned over to the regiments and batteries, the color companies of the regiments having delegations present to receive them. Just previous to the time set for the presentation, before the rain had begun, all of the regiments were drawn up in line, ready to march to the places assigned them. When the storm broke, however, all the colonels, with the single exception of Colonel Stephen Y. Seyburn, ordered their men back to their quarters. Colonel Seyburn, however, marched his men out on the field, where they stood in the drenching rain, until Colonel Schuyler, seeing them, peremptorily ordered Colonel Seyburn to take them back to their camp. The men were in their dress uniforms and did not have their ponchos. All were soaked to the skin.

Cervera Will Not Go Home at Present.

Washington, Aug. 19.—Admiral Cervera will not return to Spain for the present, and reports from Annapolis stating that he would leave for Washington to-day at the navy department are said to be due to misapprehension.

The admiral has made no application to leave, and it is believed he will be the last of the Spanish prisoners to go home, as he has shown a fatherly regard for all the officers and men, and appears to be desirous of seeing them on their way homeward before he leaves.

The navy department has not taken up the question of the final disposal of the Spanish prisoners, although it has passed upon one or two special cases in which the circumstances made speedy action advisable. One of these was the case of Dr. Jurada, the venerable Spanish naval surgeon held with the other Spanish prisoners at Annapolis. The doctors reported that Dr. Jurada was very feeble, and that while he might be able to reach Spain if released now, he would not be able to make the trip a month hence. The navy department accordingly directed his release, and the Spanish chaplain will be allowed to accompany Dr. Jurada to Spain.

The case of Captain Moreu, commander of one of the cruisers of Cervera's fleet, has also received special attention by the department. It appears that Captain Moreu is not only an officer of the navy, but is a member of the Spanish parliament. With the prospect that the parliament would reassemble at an early date, Captain Moreau was desirous of returning to Spain and appearing in the sessions. In particular he expressed the desire of telling the Spanish parliament of the generous treatment accorded to him and all other Spanish prisoners by the United States. The officials here felt that such a statement from Captain Moreu could but have a salutatory effect. His release was accordingly ordered.

More Bourgogne Bodies Seen.

Boston, Aug. 19.—Captain McCallum of the steamer Philadelphia, which arrived yesterday, reports that on last Monday at noon, when sixty miles to the southward of Sable island, the vessel passed close to the bodies of three persons, with life belts attached, from the ill fated steamer La Bourgogne.

HER VANITY PUNISHED.

A Little Six Year-Old Felt That She Had Reaped a Just Reward.

A dear little maiden of six, the daughter of a South Jersey clergyman, came to New York for the first time the other day to visit a wealthy aunt. In her simple home life in the country no one had ever paid much attention to the beauty of her coloring and the pathos in her eyes. She was simply a child, to be spanked when she was naughty and let alone when she was good.

When she arrived in the metropolis, dressed like a quiet little sparrow, her aunt fathomed the sensation that she would create if put in an artistic setting. So she hied her to a swell establishment where everything that is dainty and chic in children's clothes can be had for a price. The child was soon transformed into an infant belle. Four or five artistic creations were tried on and purchased, and finally she issued from the store radiant in a fluffy white gown and a big pink picture hat. Her delight in her new clothes was simple and unaffected and no thought of how they might affect other people disturbed her. Her beauty was fairly dazzling.

As the aunt led her into a trolley car and they took their seats every eye was on the child. Smiles greeted her wherever she looked and finally it was forced upon her that she was the observed of all observers. The roses in her cheeks deepened. She twitched and turned, unable, in her sweet innocence, to endure the admiring glances showered upon her. In a little while her eyes filled with tears, and sobbingly, she buried her face in her aunt's lap and tore the picture hat from her head.

"Oh, auntie," she said, "take it away. I look like such a fright in it; everybody is staring at me. It's God's punishment for being so vain."—New York Mail and Express.

PEACE FESTIVAL PLANS

Saturday's Welcome to War Ships Only a Beginning.

A NATIONAL CELEBRATION

The President and His Cabinet and the Governors of All the States Will Be Invited to Attend. An Enthusiastic Meeting of Citizens of Greater New York.

New York, Aug. 19.—There is no doubt now that the return of the battleships and cruisers to this harbor will be marked by a demonstration that will fitly celebrate their remarkable achievements. As victors over a vaunted fleet, the destroyers of Cervera's magnificent men of war, will come to New York with so few casualties that the man killed and the two or three wounded or injured will be immortalized by their very scarcity in numbers.

And the welcome down the bay and along the shore front of the great metropolis will not be the end of the ceremony. Indeed, it will be merely a preface or opening chapter to the celebration that will come, for it was decided yesterday that a peace feast and festival be held in New York to mark the close of the war and a committee on plan and scope will be appointed by Mayor Van Wyck to arrange the details. It was concluded that the time was too short adequately to demonstrate the gratitude of the people for the outcome of the war, and more time and opportunity should be given to the mayor to complete arrangements for a grander celebration later on.

The character of the celebration will be such that the people of the whole country may attend with profit, and not only the president and his cabinet will be invited personally by the mayor and his committee, but urgent requests will be made to the governors of all states in the Union to attend with their staffs. In fact, an endeavor will be made to make the event the greatest of the kind ever held.

In compliance with the published notice and request of Mayor Van Wyck, many of the persons whom he had designated assembled at noon yesterday in the chamber of the board of aldermen in the city hall for the purpose of arranging for a due celebration of the "home coming of the victorious American fleet" on Saturday of the present week. The mayor presided, and after stating the object of the meeting, said that it was designed "to let the civilized world know that in our veins flows the same blood that caused the hearts of these conquering heroes to beat when they faced death itself." (Applause.) The time, he said, appeared all too short, but after all, "none is too short for us to do our duty." (Applause.) Yes, it was the proud duty of the people of this city to co-operate in "doing honor to these people, to these conquering heroes—who—who—never should be forgotten." (Applause.) It was the purpose and prerogative to give them "a reception which they will never forget, and which will impress the civilized world, and will prevent their being forgotten, not only in this country, but in every country throughout the civilized world."

Upon motion of General Daniel Butterfield the mayor was made permanent chairman of the general committee.

Upon motion of Samuel Untermyer, ex-Governors Flower and Morton were chosen vice presidents.

General Butterfield offered the following resolution, which was unanimously adopted:

Resolved. That the mayor be requested to appoint a committee on plan and scope to arrange for a peace jubilee to celebrate the triumph of American arms, and to render thanks, honor and a triumphal ovation to the heroic soldiers and sailors of our country, at such future date as may be considered best, and can be arranged for—the committee to confer with the mayor and report to a subsequent meeting to be called by the mayor.

A committee of seventy-five was named to assist the mayor.

De Pauw's Big Failure.

New Albany, Ind., Aug. 19.—Charles W. De Pauw has filed a petition in bankruptcy. He places his liabilities at $850,000 and assets at $45,000. The liabilities are held by banks of New Albany, Louisville, Indianapolis, Chicago and other cities and by a number of capitalists of those cities.

On many of the items of the liabilities judgments were taken several years ago and many of them are secured. The assets consist of bank stock, the interest of the petitioner in the estate of his grandfather, the late Elijah Newland, and other items.

England Congratulates.

Washington, Aug. 19.—The department of state has received a note from the British ambassador, Sir Julian Pauncefote, who is now sojourning at New London, Conn., communicating the expression of the profound gratification with which her majesty's government has learned of the signature of the preliminaries of peace between the United States and Spain, and their sincere congratulations to the president and the government of the United States upon the termination of the war.

The confidence in Cudahy's ability to retrieve his fallen fortunes was so great that his creditors gave him time, and to-day he is again a millionaire and can look the financial world in the face.

The Clearing Sale of Shirt Waists.

With the close of July comes the greatest price-cutting—the most attractive values ever offered. The remaining stock is divided into two lots, 49c. and 75c., former prices ranged from 75c to $1.50. There's not 200 waists in the entire assortment, so we advise an early call for the best selection.

Sailor Hats and Untrimmed Hats 49c.

This means that each and every hat, irrespective of former price, will be 49c. Of especial interest should the price be, as none have been less than 75c, and the styles offered are all of this season's production.

Men's Negligee Shirts 59c.

Sounds cheap, but the hundred or more shirts that go on sale have been selling at 75c., 85c. and $1. The patterns are all new and desirable, the kind that you would like. Clearing time is here, and the new price, 59c., will be the means of their quick disposal.

Men's Summer Underwear 20c.

Nearly 600 pieces gauze underwear to be 20c. This is ordinarily the best 25c underwear sold, but 20c will be the clearing price.

MUSTERING OUT OF TROOPS.

War Department Finds it a Hard Task To Select the Regiments.

Washington, Aug. 19.—The selection of the troops to be mustered out under the decision reached to reduce the volunteer army to the smallest possible numbers, is proving a difficult matter to the president and the secretary of war.

As soon as the announcement was made that this would be done protests began to come in from the governors and prominent persons of the several states, whose troops it was supposed would be included in the order, alleging favoritism and unfairness in the distribution of soldiers for service. One of the assistant adjutant generals yesterday said that there was a perfect avalanche of protests coming in.

He said:

"The boys who have not yet seen service want at least an opportunity to go to Cuba, Porto Rico or the Philippines, and say so strongly; and few of the soldiers, comparatively, business and professional men and those who have substantial interests at home, ask to be mustered out now that the war is over, but the great majority desire to see something of army life aside from camp routine before returning. How to satisfy them all is a perplexing question."

General Corbin confirmed this view of the situation, and in answer to the question, "Will the list of troops to be mustered out be published to-day?" (Secretary Alger said yesterday he expected it would be made public at once) he said:

"No, it will not be published to-day nor to-morrow nor the next day, nor the day after that. We'll be lucky if it is decided upon by the end of next week."

NO MOVING FROM CHICKAMAUGA

Gen. Breckinridge Has No Orders to Send Troops Away.

Chattanooga, Tenn., Aug. 19.—General Breckinridge has issued no orders yet regarding a movement of troops to the new camps. He has received no instructions from Washington and the impression prevails that the troops will not be moved.

A staff offier this morning said: "It is my opinion from information I have that when it is necessary to muster out the troops they will be sent to their state capitals and there be mustered out of service. Until that is done there will be no movement of troops and no change of camps."

Pension Commissioner Evans write to a friend here saying that he had consulted General Corbin, and that the general had told him that he had no intention of recommending a change from Chickamauga, that he was perfectly satisfied that the place was as healthful as any, and in fact did not think a change advisable.

The practice marches began to-day, when the First Illinois cavalry went to Lookout Mountain.

General Mattock's command will go to Dayton Tenn., to-morrow for a march. Since the army came to Chickamauga 302 soldiers, including both regulars and volunteers, have died.

The First Vermont leaves for Fort Ethan Allen to-morrow.

Massacred by Spanish.

Ponce, Porto Rico, Aug. 17, delayed in transmission.—Reports are coming in from all directions of outrages committed within the Spanish lines. Doubtless many of these are exaggerated, but the rumors of a massacre at Ciales are confirmed. Some of the natives there took refuge in the belfry of the cathedral and fired on the Spanish troops, but they were overpowered and macheted to the number of eighty.

Battery N of the Seventh regiment, under Captain McComb, was unable to proceed along the mountail trail with General Henry, and, having lost a gun and six horses over a precipice, returned here.

The health of the troops is steadily improving. The typhoid fever brought from Camp Alger and Camp Chickamauga is of a mild type and is fast disappearing. Strict sanitation is being enforced with the gratifying result that sickness has decreased from ten to three per cent. To-day's reports show only 430 sick in hospital quarters out of a total command of 15,000. Most of these cases are climatic complaints.

The army is being revaccinated, as there is a small pox epidemic in some portions of the island.

The auxiliary cruiser Prairie, formerly El Sol, left to-day for Santiago, to take troops to Montauk Point.

General Miles has postponed his visit to the front on account of rain. The wet season has set in and there will be rains daily until the end of October.

A Cotton Thread Trust.

Chicago, Aug. 19.—A big combination of the cotton thread concerns of the country is reported to be on the eve of completion. It will, it is said, be capitalized at $18,000,000 and will practically control all the plants of importance and four-fifths of the thread output of America. A decrease in the price of thread will probably result.

The new concern, according to the statements made, is to be an Anglo-American affair, with a large proportion of its capital held by the English thread combination or by its representatives. By working in complete harmony with the English interest, it will bring practically all the cotton thread output of both countries under one control.

Storm in Pennsylvania.

Lancaster, Pa., Aug. 19.—A series of terrific storms, accompanied by high wind and heavy rain, passed over this county Wednesday night, doing considerable damage. Hail in some sections cut and riddled the tobacco, most of which was almost ready to cut, ruining the crop. Several barns were struck by lightning and burned.

A Fatal Scaffold Accident.

Philadelphia, Aug. 19.—The cornice of a building in course of erection at Nos. 475 and 477 North Sixth street, fell yesterday, carrying with it a scaffold upon which several men were at work. Two of the workmen were killed, one fatally injured and four others seriously hurt.

MORE TROOPS FOR CUBA

The Fifth Regular Infantry Will Go to Santiago.

A GUARD OF 5,000 SOLDIERS

This Will Complete the Army in Eastern Cuba. The Government Determined to Preserve Order There. Gen. Lee to Command in Western Cuba With 30,000 Men.

Washington, Aug. 19.—Orders have been issued assigning the Fifth United States infantry to duty in Santiago under General Lawton. This will make a force of five thousand troops in the department of Santiago, as the Second, Third, Fifth and Ninth regiments of immunes have already proceeded to Cuba. This force is deemed ample for all the demands likely to be made upon the army in eastern Cuba. General Shafter's entire force is being gradually withdrawn.

No plans have been definitely settled for the military occupation of western Cuba, but General Lee has been assured of this command. He will take with him the troops now in his incomplete corps, with additions to bring the force up to a numerical strength of 30,000 men.

The war department has authorized the state of Pennsylvania to bring home its sick and wounded troops, and the means of transporting these soldiers are being arranged.

It is believed at the department that the well trained and disciplined regulars will have a good influence upon the troops at present at Santiago and with them once there the troubles will cease. The department will be kept advised as to the conditions, and if more troops are deemed necessary they will be sent at once.

The government intends to take vigorous measures to preserve the peace and keep order in Santiago and the territory under United States control. The emphatic order issued to General Lawton a few days ago will be followed by orders sending sufficient disciplined troops to enable him to carry out the instructions of the secretary: As a further step in this direction, the president yesterday directed that the Twenty-third Kansas regiment, colored, be dispatched to Santiago, to form part of the army of occupation of Cuba. The Kansans had tendered their services for this purpose, and had urged acceptance, which President McKinley and Secretary Alger finally agreed to.

NO MORE PUBLIC CREMATIONS

Gen. Wood Orders That the Spanish Dead Be Burned Privately.

Santiago de Cuba, Aug. 18.—General Wood has issued an order that the burning of dead Spanish soldiers and pauper Cubans should no longer be conducted publicly.

This order is the result of the spectacle which was witnessed at the cemtery yesterday, when seventy bodies were placed within the kiln for cremation.

The fire was started, but a fire came suddenly and put it out before the work was half done, and the mass was left over night, because no oil could be procured to rekindle the fire after the storm had abated.

The work was completed this morning. General Wood dismissed all the men employed in the work this morning and employed new ones, increasing the pay of the men in order to insure efficient service.

The burning of bodies will continue, as it is the best and safest means, from a sanitary point of view, of disposing of the bodies of Spanish soldiers, who are dying faster than the cemetery workmen can bury them.

Further Advance in Iron.

Pittsburg, Pa., Aug. 19.—Another advance has been reported in structural iron and steel and billets. Billets in last week's report were quoted at $15.50, a jump of 25 cents per ton, and are scarce at that. This is the best price that has been recorded since the days of the strong billet pool, two years ago.

Tht billet situation is surprising, in view of the closing down of the immense billet using plants of the American Steel and Wire Company throughout the country on account of labor troubles.

There is an unusually heavy export movement, in which all the big plants have participated to some extent at least, the Carnegies of this city alone sending out about 30,000 tons last week. Plate has gone up $1 per ton.

England and Russia.

Berlin, Aug. 19.—The Cologne Gazette's London correspondent says that the fortifications being built on the Canadian coast are attributed to the possibility of an Anglo-Russian conflict.

Vancouver, B. C., Aug. 19.—The Chinese ambassador, Shir, formerly stationed at St. Petersburg, and also at Berlin, arrived here yesterday, bound home for a rest. He does not think the trouble between Great Britain and Russia over Chinese concessions will amount to much.

Tin Manufacturers Assign.

New York, Aug. 19.—The Central Stamping Company, manufacturers of tinware, at 25 Cliff street, yesterday made an assignment to Alfred R. Turner, Jr., of Paterson, N. J., without preferences. The officers are: John H. Sprague, president; George W. Ketcham, secretary; David B. Hunt, treasurer. The company employs five hundred hands.

The company was incorporated in 1894 with a capital stock of $400,000.

More New Yorkers for Hawaii.

San Francisco, Aug. 18.—The 330 officers and men of the First New York regiment who are going to Honolulu on the steamship Alliance, embarked this morning. The Scandia will sail a week from Saturday. There will be aboard 250 officers and men of the First New York for Hawaii.

NO MORE WAR BONDS.

Hardly Probable That a Second Issue Will Be Necessary.

Washington, D. C., Aug. 19.—It is the opinion of the officials of the treasury there will be no necessity for another bond issue growing out of the war, and that the present revenue law, with slight modifications, should be retained on the statute books for an indefinite period. The following may be taken as the views of the treasury department on these subjects:

"It may be confidently hoped that no further issues of bonds will be necessary in connection with bringing the extraordinary war expenditures to a close. With the treasury well supplied for the early future and with the power conferred upon the secretary to make the temporary loans to the extent of $100,000,000, if required, any further resort to bond issues seems a most remote probability. This view is reinforced by the fact that with the operation of the new excise and stamp taxes, the revenues of the government will largely exceed disbursements based on ordinary peace conditions. This increase in revenue ought to aad will provide for an increase in war and navy department expenditures, which will no doubt be witnessed even after military operations have terminated. That the enlarged expenditures for the army and navy over the past will be necessary, is most obvious, and it is a matter of congratulation that by the wise action of Congress the government revenue has been put on a broad and effective basis."

The Lake Tagish Gold Mines.

Seattle, Wash., Aug. 19.—Three small steamers have arrived here from Alaska with fifteen passengers. About one-third of them only were included in the list of fortunate ones. Their combined sacks of gold dust are estimated at $100,000.

Advices from Pine Creek, near Lake Tagish, where a rich strike was reported a few days ago, say that the diggings are not so rich as have been stated. The stampede, however, continues, men even going from Cook's Inlet and Copper river.

At St. Michael boats are landing freight and passengers, but the congestion has been materially relieved. Provisions are reported scarce and commanding high prices. The steamer Bair arrived at Dawson July 25, from St. Michael, with a large number of passengers and a cargo of freight supplies.

Victoria, B. C., Aug. 18.—The British steamer Tess has arrived from Skaguay. Her passengers confirm the news of the rich strike on Pine Creek, in the Lake Tagish district, though some of them say that previous reports from there are somewhat exaggerated. The more enthusiastic ones say that as high as $50 a pan has been taken out. The claims can easily be worked, and are well adapted for hydraulic machinery. Inspector Strickland of the mounted police says that the gold will average fully $20 an ounce more than the Klondike gold.

DISORDER AT SANTIAGO.

Local Police Force Increased.

Santiago de Cuba, Aug. 18.—This morning General Wood, military governor of Santiago, increased the local police force with additions from various regiments. There has been some trouble from soldiers who have been disobeying orders and there have been some thefts, several street fights, at least one murder, and a good deal of drunkenness, so that an exceptionally large force is needed to preserve order.

This morning the Eighth Illinois volunteers, colored, entered upon patrol duty. The First infantry leaves to-day by the Miller.

There are seven Spanish transports now in the harbor awaiting the embarkation of the Spanish troops.

The general appearance of the prisoners is pitiful. There has been much sickness among them and within the last two days over 200 bodies have been buried.

The death rate in the city is about 70 per day. The heavy rains increase the fever among the soldiers and the inhabitants alike.

Launch of the Admiral Dewey.

Philadelphia, Aug. 19.—The Admiral Dewey was launched at 2.40 yesterday at Cramps' shipyard.

The Admiral Dewey is the first of four merchant steamers building at Cramps' shipyard for the American Mail Steamship Company, to be named for distinguished admirals of the American navy. They are to be operated in the trade between Boston, New York, and Philadelphia and Jamaica, D. W. I., and may be regarded as the pioneer vessels of the post-bellum development of American commerce. They will be run by the Boston Fruit Company, and will furnish weekly mail service to West Indian ports as far as Jamaica.

Bids for Navy Shells.

Washington, Aug. 19.—Bids for $500,000 worth of shells for the navy have been opened by the naval ordnance bureau. The awards of contract will take into consideration the time of delivery and the facilities of firms. A casual examination shows the lowest bidders, on steel projectiles of large calibre, to be the Cumberland Steel and Tin Plate Company of Cumberland, Md., and the Taylor Iron and Steel Company of High Bridge, N. J. The lowest bid for forged shell was that of the United States Projectile Company of Brooklyn.

The Hot Weather in Germany.

Berlin, Aug. 19.—The tropical heat continues and many cases of apoplexy are reported. Many fires have broken out in Germany and elsewhere on account of the dryness.

Hamburg, Aug. 18.—Ten deaths from the effect of the heat occurred here today. Many people were taken ill on the streets.

Count Cassini to Go to London.

London, Aug. 19.—M. De Staal, the Russian ambassador to Great Britain, according to a dispatch from St. Petersburg, will soon retire from London and be succeeded by Count Cassini, Russian ambassador to the United States.

Restriction in Whosale Licenses.

Prosecutor Dungan, of Somerset county, is bestirring himself after violators of the liquor license laws in that bailiwick, and has already preferred charges against four wholesale dealers in Bound Brook. The Prosecutor is a resident of Bound Brook, and perhaps his activity in this direction may be the result of personal observation, but the whole county provides a good field for that sort of work in the Prosecutor's office.

The Somerville Unionist Gazette prints the following editorial this week anent the matter:

There seems to be no class of liquor dealers that give so much trouble as those which operate under a wholesale or bottler's license. Some of these bottlers are doing a legitimate business, and upon them we wish to cast no reflection. But the fact remains that as a class these dealers are more often caught violating the excise laws than any others.

There are in Somerset county at present 32 licensed hotels, 9 saloons and 29 whosale and bottling places. Judge Bartine has ruled that he has no power to refuse an application for a wholesale license, though the court has discretionary powers with other licenses. We are not prepared to dispute this ruling. We do not know that it has been questioned. But the court ought to have the same power to restrict the number of licenses that are granted to wholesalers as in other cases. In Hunterdon county the court refuses to grant any licenses to wholesalers and bottlers, or to saloons. Hotels only can get licenses, except in Lambertville, which has an Excise Board. The court there claims to have the discretionary power.

In Bound Brook there are five licensed wholesale places, and all of them are mere bottlers, who cannot sell less than a quart nor more than five gallons of liquor. Four of them were arraigned before the court last week, charged by Prosecutor Dungan with illegal seling.

It would seem that these were cases for the court to take in hand. If their applications cannot be refused them, the court can only find a remedy in punishments administered. But it would be far better if this class of licensed persons could be restricted to those who will do a legitimate bottling and wholesale business.

Bad Brand of Editorials.

The Washington, (N. J.) Tidings prints ten editorials, occupying two columns of space, each one of which is an attack on the editor of the Star of that place. If that editorial page strikes all of its readers with the same impression that it makes on us, the editor of the Tidings must be classed by the quotation "What fools these mortals be."

Editorial animosity between two papers may be indulged in once in a while in a good natured way without encroaching on the patience of readers, but when it appears in such abundance and vindictativeness as the Tidings' columns evidence the editor makes himself ridiculous. In reading the screeds the editor who penned them undoubtedly feels personal satisfaction in the idea that he has lambasted his competitor in a vigorous manner, but in the conduct of a newspaper there is a higher ideal for the editor to strive for than assailing a brother journalist for the purpose of pleasing self.

Nothwithstanding the fact that the ceaseless competition between the newspapers of New York is a matter that attracts public interest and that there is something fascinating in knowing of the internal workings of these great news purveyors and moulders of opinion, the recent bitter editorial attacks on one another indulged in by the New York Sun, World, Journal and Herald has become sickening to their readers. The editors of these great journals who pose as men of giant intellects and conservative minds are bordering close on to pigmies in both qualifications in the way they have let their jealously and enemity to one another become emblazioned to the world in the cold type of their editorial pages.

RED CROSS HOSPITAL AT SIBONEY.

At the time the photograph here reproduced was made there were in this Red Cross Hospital eight patients suffering from typhoid, four from malarial and four from yellow fever. It was in this house that the death of Eben Brewer, our first postmaster in Cuba, occurred. The photograph was taken for the New York Press.

A Worthy Charity.

On two different occasions recently the managers of the Fresh Air Camp for poor children on the mountain have appealed to the public for contribution of funds necessary to carry on the work. He who gives quickly in this case gives double and even more, for the benefits of the noble endeavors of the King's Daughters in this line are limited to warm weather.

The work of the King's Daughters in establishing and maintaining this camp is such a worthy one that there ought not to be a lack of money, and we haven't any doubt but if some of the philanthropic people of this city were more acquainted with the purposes and results of the camp there would be plenty to carry it on. The Daily Press assures those who feel that they have a little cash to spare for charitable purposes that they cannot do better than respond to the appeals of the King's Daughters.

Truth In It.

Editing this journal is a nice business. If we publish jokes people say we are too "rattle headed." If we don't we are an old fossil. If we publish original matter, they say we don't give them selections enough. If we give them selections, they say we are too lazy to write. If we remain in the office, we ought to go out and hustle. If we go out, then we are not attending to our business. If we wear old clothes, they laugh at us. If we wear good ones, they say we have a "pull." Now what are we to do? Just as likely as not some one will say we stole this item from our exchanges, and so we did.

WHAT THE SHEARS FIND.

Editorial Comment From Other Papers of Interest in Plainfield.

Some of the newspapers are making fun of an order recently issued to the brakemen on the Lackawana railroad to call out with the name of stations, a reminder to passengers not to forget their packages when leaving the train. As a matter of fact the idea is an excellent one, and deserves high commendation. It should be universally adopted.—Paterson Press.

* * * * *

"It's all nonsense," said a citizen of Plainfield yesterday, "to believe that the Lord wants folk to shout out their religious fervor so loudly as to disturb the peace of others not so demonstrative. A season of silent prayer would be quite as acceptable to the Lord and so-so to those who live in the neighborhood of Netherwood." From which it would appear that camp meetings in Hyde's Grove are reaching the limit of human endurance.—New York Press.

PASSING COMMENT

Things that Are Not Exactly News but Just as Interesting.

Jacob Jennings, the veteran newsdealer of this city, with the exception of illness, has sold papers at the North Avenue station for eleven years. Mr. Jennings has been very faithful and during his service has made many friends.

* * * * *

"So you are trying to block the Plainfield Street Railway from extending their tracks, Judge? Is that the way you are endeavoring to help Plainfield merchants?"

It was at the Board of Trade rooms Wednesday evening, and ten members were present, one short of a quorum. The above questions were propounded to former Judge W. R. Codington, who is the attorney for the Union County Board of Freeholders. It was evident that there would be no meeting of the Board, and the members wanted to be repaid for their trouble in coming out, so they sought their legal friend and questioned him until it was thought the Judge would send in a bill for services.

Mr. Codington assured his audience that he has no intention of blocking the scheme of the Plainfield Street Railway, but thought it was no more than fair that the officials should first secure the consent of the Board of Freeholders, as they intend to run over Richmond street—a county road (?)

"Well, Judge, when did Richmond street become a county road? inquired one of the members. "Several months ago," replied the Judge, with a smile that evidenced a meaning more than the words would imply. Continuing, he said, "the people want the Elizabeth-Plainfield trolley now, and they want Mr. Kean to make a nice job of it by widening the entire county road."

This did not satisfy those present, and another more bold person present ventured to ask the Judge if he wasn't counsel for Scotch Plains and had helped to see that the trolley franchise was properly given in that village. The Judge gave an assenting bow and said that he was the man "Well, how are you going to pacify the people living in Scotch Plains?" was the question asked. The Judge thought he could do that all right if he poured oil on troubled waters.

LITERARY.

Prof. Dean C. Worcester, of the University of Michican, will contribute to the September Century a paper based on personal experience, entitled "The Malay Pirates of the Philippines," and illustrated from photographs taken by the writer. The adventurous trip of Edwin Emerson, Jr., "Alone in Porto Rico," will be narrated by him in the same number, which will also contain the first of several articles on "Life and Society in Old Cuba," from the journals of the late Jonathan S. Jenkins, written in 1859, but dealing with many topics now in the public consideration, such as yellow fever, coffee planting, etc.

THINGS THAT INTEREST SCOTCH PLAINS AND DUNELLEN.

Brief and Terse Observations Gathered by Alert Press Reporters to be Perused at the Supper Table at Your Leisure

DUNELLEN.

(Special Correspondence of The Press.)

Dunellen, August 19.—Just as soon as Manager Charles Sebring, of the Dunellen Electric Light Company, concludes the work of placing new poles in position along North avenue and raising the wires, the Brunswick Traction Company will be ready to give the residents trolley service. "Charley" is sought every day by people who ask him when the trolley is going to run, and he answers them by saying "Just before Thanksgiving..' He says that he does not want disappoint the people and therefore sets the date far enough ahead.

The Borough Council no doubt did a wise thing when they decided to leave the trolley tracks where the Brunswick Traction Company placed them, for had the enmity of the trolley company fallen to the lot of the boroughites no doubt they would be deprived of many courtesies that the company now feel disposed to extend. The Borough Councilmen can consider themselves lucky that the trolley company agreed to do as much as they have.

A great many people have noticed the spire on the Presbyterian church and from its position have thought that lightning struck it. Such is not the case, however. A man was paid a good sum to straighten the tip and he did not make a good job of it. The matter should be attended to before it falls.

Rev. Mr. and Mrs A. I. Martine will return from their honeymoon the last of this month. No doubt the members of the Presbyterian church will arrange to give them a reception.

When North avenue is macadamized the people of the borough will appreciate what a good road is. It has been sometime since North avenue has been in excellent condition.

A large number of the local council, Jr. O. U. A. M., and their friends went to Asbury Park yesterday, and they all report having had a good time.

It is to be hoped that when the trolley begins to run through the borough that a waiting station will be located somewhere in a handy place.

The Misses Jamison, of Church street, who have been enjoying the summer out of town, will return home the first of September.

Miss May Fulper, of New York, is spending a few days with friends in town.

Postmaster Coriell has returned from a business trip out of town.

Isaac Stites has recovered from a severe attack of malaria.

WASHINGTONVILLE.

(Special Correspondence of The Press.)

Washingtonville, August 19.—Miss Anna Blazier, of Newark, is spending a few weeks at the home of Mrs. William Delmer.

An exciting race took place on the Dugway road Wednesday afternoon that attracted the attention of many of the inhabitants of Washingtonville. Two well-known residents were returning home from a trip over the mountain. They started to trot their horses. The race continued on the road until they reached the hill. Then they went down it, the drivers standing up in their seats in their efforts to keep the horses from stumbling.

J. W. Johnston and family, of Brooklyn, have come to their summer home near this place, and will remain here through August and September.

Miss Emma Palmer, of Brooklyn, who has been making an extended visit with Miss Nettie J. Beeching, has gone to Asbury Park.

THEATRICAL.

Current Dramatic Attractions That Plainfielders Can Witness.

If you want to enjoy a good, hearty laugh go and see "The Real Widow Brown" when she comes to Stillman Music Hall tonight. The lady in the leading character is one of the best farce-comedies on the road. The play has been a great success wherever produced, and it is safe to say its popularity will be duplicated here. Manager Scammon has introduced a wealth of innovations in the shape of bright and catchy songs and fascinating dances. He possesses a company of recognized ability, each individual being selected for his or her personal and artistic qualities. Unlike the average farce-comedy this play possesses a decidedly amusing plot hinging on a case of mistaken identity. Its's wit and jokes are refined and clean, and you don't have to sink shafts to find them, but like the Klondyke, all the mental nuggets are found on the surface. In "The Real Widow Brown" you won't have to dig for laughs.

* * * *

A genuine sensation is looked for in the performance of Black Patti's Troubadours at Music Hall next Wednesday night. The company is unquestionably one of the great merit and its versatile and talented artists are capable of giving a magnificent entertainment. The delightful feature of the performance is the happy mingling of comedy, burlesque, vaudeville and opera which is presented with the most consummate artistic taste and splendid stage surroundings. Black Patti is a host in herself and although the star of the company she is surrounded with a coterie of singers and comedians such as is rarely found in travelling combinations. The costumes worn by the company are said to be marvellously rich and extremely elegant, particularly those worn in the "March of the Mattadors" and in the great operatic kaleidoscope. Reserved seats will be on sale tomorrow.

A letter today from Rev. Dr. Schenck, from the Catskill Mountains, where he and his family are spending the month, contains the gratifying intelligence that his family are all well and that he is improving in health and feeling much better by the complete rest that he is getting.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Topic For the Week Beginning Aug. 21.
Comment by Rev. S. H. Doyle.

TOPIC.—Practical uses of the Bible.—Ps. cxix, 97-105.

The supreme purpose of the Bible is to teach us what we are to believe concerning God and what duty God requires of us in this life. It is our only infallible guide. It alone tells us how we can live so as to glorify God that we may enjoy Him forever. It is therefore worthy our highest admiration and love, our most earnest study and our deepest meditation. Would that all men could say with the psalmist:

Oh, how I love thy law!
It is my meditation all the day.

The Bible, to accomplish its high purpose, must necessarily be a practical book, and it is. Some of its practical purposes are pointed out in the topical reference.

1. The Bible gives wisdom and understanding. "Thou through Thy commandments hast made me wiser than my enemies. * * * I have more understanding than all my teachers; for Thy testimonies are my meditation." The Bible above all gives practical wisdom, moral wisdom. It tells us how we may wisely use the talents and opportunities of life that our lives may be a success for eternity as well as time. It teaches us how to number our days that we may apply our hearts to wisdom. It aims not so much to give intellectual wisdom, as heart wisdom, practical wisdom—such an understanding of life as will lead a man to practice virtue and shun vice, and after all this is the most desirable kind of wisdom.

2. The Bible refrains our feet from every evil way. "I have refrained my feet from every evil way, that I might keep Thy word." The Bible explains to us the true nature of evil, it warns us against its awful consequences, and in these ways it leads us to refrain from evil. It holds up before us the beauty and advantages of a holy, virtuous life and thus again gives us an incentive for avoiding the very appearance of evil. We cannot keep God's word and engage in evil, and therefore, if with the psalmist we wish to keep the commandments of God, like him also we must refrain our feet from every evil way.

3. The Bible is a guide—"a lamp unto my feet and a light unto my path." It is our best guide, our only true and sure guide. It guides us from sin to holiness, from selfishness and worldliness to God, from earth to heaven.

We should seek more and more to make the Bible a practical book, by putting into practice its commandments and precepts. It is not enough to know God's commandments; we must do them.

Bible Readings.—Deut. vi, 6-9; Joshua i, 7; Ps. i, 1-6; xix, 7-14; xc, 12; Prov. i, 1-16; iii, 1-12; vii, 1-3; Eccl. xii, 13, 14; Luke xxiv, 25-27; John v, 39; xv, 10-14; Acts xvii, 10, 11; Col. i, 9-17; II Tim. iii, 14-17.

Inspiration and Experience.

The Bible was written by inspired men, but it was also written largely out of the personal experiences of those men. This is a very instructive fact, and it will require a little thought to see the full force of it. The Bible is, in a very great degree, the record of the experiences of men under the influence of the spirit of God, and this is one central reason why it is so profitable for doctrine and reproof and edification. That which unites them is the intensely interesting fact that God uses them, with all their individual peculiarities, and yet with their common spiritual needs, as His special messengers of warning and mercy to the human race. —Commonwealth (Baptist).

Full of the Holy Ghost.

It was after Stephen had delivered a sermon that cut his hearers to the heart and made them gnash upon him with one accord and cast him out of the city and stone him to death that he, being full of the Holy Ghost, looked up steadfastly into heaven, saw the glory of God, saw Jesus standing at the right hand of God, prayed for his murderers, committed his spirit to God and fell asleep—the first Christian martyr.—Christian Standard.

The Church.

After all and before all churches are for religion. It is because men and women are children of God that the churches exist, that they may come nearer to each other and come nearer to God. They exist that every day they may go about their business more and more in accord with Him, and that life may be not petty and small, but infinite, in its relations.—Christian Register.

Self Reliance.

He is most my friend who teaches me self reliance, and self reliance, in the last analysis, is reliance on those laws and principles which can never be severed from us.—Trinities and Sanctities.

Learn How to Spend.

Economy is half the battle of life. It is not so hard to earn money as to spend it well.—Spurgeon.

Religious Notes.

Rev. Timothy Richards believes that China is on the eve of a great religious awakening.

A hotel for workingmen and plain people, where a warm room is provided for 15 cents, is conducted by the Salvation Army in Boston.

It is stated that in Presbyterian Scotland 60 years ago there were 76 Episcopal charges. Now there are 321.

The American relief committee propose to establish an orphanage at Kharput, Turkey, with contributions from young people's societies.

A shelter for the workingmen of Detroit will be built this winter by the Salvation Army.

There are reported to be 100 Christian Endeavor societies in the Belfast district, Ireland.

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Lesson For the Week Beginning Aug. 21.
Comment by Rev. W. J. Yates, A. M.
Topic, The Duty of Cheerfulness.

SCRIPTURE READING.—Rom. xii, 12; Phil. iii, 1; I Thess. v, 16.

The religion of Jesus Christ is not calculated to make a person morose or gloomy. It recognizes the truth of life, sees fully all the evils of human nature, the suffering and distress of the world, the hopelessness of society, the terror of death, and yet teaches cheerfulness. It does not encourage stoical indifference to pain, nor epicurean frivolity and sensual pleasure in order to drown thought and stupefy the spirit. It is not recklessly indifferent or coldly callous. It is warm hearted, pulsating with affection and sensitive to all the agonized conditions of men. Knowing all painfulness and helplessness, it still says in voice clear with conviction, "Rejoice in hope."

It knows the sun shines above the clouds and shall in due time disperse them all and rule in radiant splendor.

It has peace because the future is secure and the present only brings richer treasure by its very hardships. It does not rejoice in things, but it rejoices in God. Loyalty to and faith in the Father Almighty makes the privations of life highest privilege. What American sailor in Dewey's fleet at the battle of Manilla counted it a hardship to be in the fight? Heat, danger, exhaustion, were all forgotten in the overwhelming sense of devotion to the flag and what it represents. Every gun was loaded with ammunition never stored in magazines. They did execution because double shotted with enthusiastic loyalty.

So with the live Christian. Duty is privilege. He works for God and with Him. God guides and man trusts Him.

When everything seems dark, friends desert, poverty pinches, health gives way, how can one be cheerful? If the thought is allowed to rest on the dark side, on the bodily pain, on the need, the treachery, the meanness of men and deceitfulness of things, there can be no cheer, and, however we may coax and threaten, no one can be cheerful even if it is a duty.

The only way is to look away from the blackness and trouble, forget self and look at God. Think of Him, of His power, His plans, His goodness, promises, providence. Go on the knees and talk aloud to Him. Fill the soul with ideas of His love and nearness, tenderness and truth till the heart melts and eyes moisten and tongue sings praises for very gladness. Then go out and find some poor lonely soul and pour the sunshine around it. Lift up some needy one and share your joy. Brooding over trouble never brought relief. "Rejoice in God evermore," and trouble flees as mists before the sun.

Honesty In Giving.

It is easy in imagination to be generous. How often the heart is touched, the emotions deeply stirred and we wish we had wealth or power or eloquence! How much we would do! And we don't do anything because we can't do something great and conspicuous. We deceive ourselves with the idea that we are generous. Honesty of purpose gives what it owns, not what it wishes for or covets.

A cup of cold water is all you have? Then give it. The chances are that it is the very best thing the needy one could receive. Give the cup full now and don't wait till you can command an aqueduct with unfailing reservoir. Willingness to do is ingenious in resources. Unwillingness to help is skillful in excuses. Do what you can and you will often find yourself able to do all you would.

How Goes the War?

Daily news of the progress of our war with Spain has been eagerly sought. Never before was such enterprise shown in collecting and publishing the news. All classes read the papers.

A greater conflict is being waged by the forces of Jesus Christ against the kingdom of darkness. News of the worldwide movements of the forces ought to be of intense interest to all Christians. Our denominational papers give thrilling reports from the field. Too many of our people take no copy of any religious paper. The German Methodists of the United States, however, have half as many subscribers for their periodicals as their whole membership numbers. They lead the host.

Assemblies and Summer Schools.

Not every one can attend one of these. No one can attend them every year. Great numbers can go and multitudes get benefit. The great Chautauqua assembly has been a blessing and life inspiration to thousands. The smaller meetings have done untold good. The companionship, the stimulation to mind and soul, the widening of the horizon, all are helpful. They have supplied a need in our busy life which no other means could so well meet.

Caution is needed not to overdo, but recreation is so well mixed with work that this rarely occurs. If we cannot have the old time camp meeting, the modern assembly must be used wisely to serve the church.

Alone With God.

Grant me, O Lord, a little while
To sit at Thy dear feet.
The day is drawing to a close,
And light and darkness meet.

Thou knowest, oh, my Father, kind,
All that this day has brought.
With labor, weariness and care
Its hours have been fraught.

Thy guiding hand, O Lord, this day
I earnestly have sought.
Pant to know Thy blessed will
In me is being wrought.

I fain would look into Thy face
And see Thy gracious smile.
Oh, hide me in Thy tender love
And bid me rest awhile!

And so, my feeble strength renewed,
Rejoicing, I'll go on
From strength to strength until at last
The heavenly rest is won.

—A. M. G. Hicks

Dresden. Neben verschiedenen Legaten hat die vor kurzer Zeit hier verstorbene Wittwe des Vermessungsdirektors Preßler für wohlthätige Stiftungen 448,000 Mark hinterlassen.—Der Verband deutscher Kriegsveteranen von 1848 bis 1870—71 hielt hier dieser Tage seinen fünften General-Appell ab.—Drei gleichartige Eisenbahnunglücksfälle fanden kürzlich an einem und demselben Tage in Sachsen statt: Der Leipziger Schnellzug hat bei Gaschwitz, der Reichenbacher Schnellzug bei Siegmar und ein anderer Zug bei Zwickau je einen Bahnarbeiter überfahren und getödtet.

Glauchau. Hier hat der Stadtrath verfügt, daß alle Händler und Gastwirthe, die amerikanisches Schweinefleisch verkaufen, dies durch Anschlag verkünden müssen.

Leipzig. Der klassische Philologe an der Universität Leipzig, Professor Ribbeck, ist gestorben.

Markranstädt. Von der Frühschicht im Leipziger Braunkohlenbergwerk wurde ein Häuer von Kohlenmengen, die einem herabstürzenden Steine folgten, verschüttet und getödtet, ferner wurde ein Fördermann schwer verwundet. Der durch die herabstürzenden Kohlenmassen verursachte Luftdruck war so stark, daß den in der Grube befindlichen Arbeitern die Lichter erlöschten.

Pethau. Der Besitzer des Dianasaales hat dieser Tage einen für Münzensammler und Alterthumsforscher wichtigen Fund gemacht. Er fand in einem großen Stücke böhmischer Braunkohle, die in einer Tiefe von etwa 400 Meter gegraben worden war, zehn Stück alterthümliche und zum Theil noch gut erhaltene Münzen.

Tharandt. Hier sind der Bauunternehmer Krämer und ein Komplize verhaftet worden. Ihnen wird Brandstiftung, in Folge deren zwei Personen um's Leben gekommen sind, zur Last gelegt.

Zwickau. Das hiesige Landgericht verurtheilte den Gutsbesitzer Singer aus Reuth-Werdau wegen unmenschlicher Behandlung seiner Ehefrau und Kinder zu zwei Jahren fünf Monaten Gefängniß.

Thüringische Staaten.

Altenburg. Der Hofbuchhändler Kommissionsrath Oskar Bonde, Herausgeber und Eigenthümer der „Altenburger Zeitung," ist nach langem Leiden im Alter von 73 Jahren verschieden.

Hildburghausen. Der hiesige Gemeinderath wählte den Oberbürgermeister v. Stocmeier, dessen Amtszeit in einigen Jahren abläuft, auf Lebenszeit zum Stadtoberhaupt.

Rudolstadt. Die hiesige Stadt plant die Errichtung einer höheren polytechnischen Lehranstalt.

Weimar. Aus der Haft entlassen sind nun sämmtliche im August 1894 zu hohen Gefängniß- und Geldstrafen verurtheilte frühere Vorstands- beziehungsweise Aufsichtsrathsmitglieder des hiesigen „Vorschuß- und Sparvereins": Direktor Gerlach, Kassirer Hoffmann, Aufsichtsrathsvorsitzender Reisen und Aufsichtsrathsmitglied Baer. Ein Theil der Strafe wurde ihnen geschenkt. Theilweise haben sie bereits wieder gute Stellungen gefunden.

Freie Städte.

Hamburg. Das vom 23. bis 27. Juli hier veranstaltete Neunte Deutsche Turnfest nahm, trotz theilweise widrigen Wetters einen glänzenden Verlauf. An dem Hauptfestzug betheiligten sich etwa 24,000 Personen. Im Ganzen wurden 105 Sieger im Einzel-Wettturnen, 2 Sieger im Ringen, 9 im Hinderniß-Rennen, 8 im Dreisprung und 9 im Schleuderball-Wettwerfen verkündet.

Bremen. Das hiesige Tivolitheater ist von einer Aktiengesellschaft für 1,000,000 Mark erworben worden. Direktor wird C. F. Slawinski.

Lübeck. Von weit längerer Dauer, als man ursprünglich auf Seiten der streitenden Parteien annehmen mochte, scheint der Strike der Bauarbeiter zu werden. Es ist dies der größte Ausstand, welcher in Lübeck seit Jahren stattgefunden hat. Etwa 1700 Personen sind an demselben betheiligt. In der neuesten Zeit werden durch das gänzliche Ruhen der Arbeiten im Baugewerbe auch die Maler, Tischler, Tapezirer u. s. w. von dem Ausstand betroffen, und aus diesen Gewerken haben denn ebenfalls verschiedene Gesellen entlassen werden müssen wegen Mangel an Arbeit. Die Arbeitgeber haben über ganz Deutschland Listen versandt, welche die Namen der hier strikenden Arbeiter enthalten. Diese Maßnahme ist nicht ohne Erfolg geblieben, indem die zahlreichen Maurer und Zimmerer, welche sich von hier fortgewendet haben, nirgends Arbeit erhalten haben.

Oldenburg.

Varel. An der Hochzeitstafel gestorben ist in Schweinebrück ein Arbeiter, dem ein Bissen in die unrechte Kehle gerathen war und seinen Tod durch Ersticken herbeiführte.

Mecklenburg.

Wismar. Einen jähen Tod fand der Kartoffelhändler Kasten, indem er vor dem Altwismarthore, auf seinem Wagen sitzend, plötzlich vom Schlage gerührt wurde und sofort verschied.

CHAPTER XII.

Mrs. Ericsson fluttered into the green and white room and stood before Olga. She looked like a quivering interrogation mark.

"Why won't you go to see Irving with the Kents? The invitation has come at the last moment, but you know they got the box unexpectedly, so you needn't fancy you've been asked just to fill in."

She surveyed Olga with pleading eyes and irritated air. Never had she seemed so purposely provoking as now, lying before the window in a steamer chair, calm, attentive and polite.

"I'm not going, dear," said Olga, settling herself at an angle which brought added comfort and turning the fashion magazine she had been reading face downward on her knee, "because I'm lazy, because this dry cold makes my nose an ugly magneta"—

"You have furs"—

"Because I hate the theater in the daytime, am sick to death of Mrs. Kent and her knobby headed son"—

"Olga, you'll simply drive me distracted by your indifference."

"And because David Temple is coming at 5 o'clock."

"Oh," with a comprehensive gasp, "is he?"

"I asked him in last night."

Mrs. Ericson dropped into a chair and folded her hands in her lap.

"Olga," she said seriously, "for the past month, ever since Smedley Joyce's tea, he has been following you about. You've encouraged him, whether for fun, as you call it, or not I don't know. But people say David Temple is not a marrying man and to have him loom up like your shadow wherever you go will hurt your chances. It certainly will."

"Well, about David Temple!" she said sharply.

"Think so?" and Olga drew a loose strand of hair through her fingers.

"I know it. You're very perverse. There's Bob Deschalles making a fool of himself over you, a man with one of the largest fortunes"—

"And a fool. I'm not exacting when millions are appended, but I draw the line at him. Don't talk of him any more."

She looked fully at her mother with open criticism.

"How little you understand me. If you knew anything of character, you'd have seen long ago I must be proud of the man I marry. I need not care a pin for him, but because of brains, family or personality with wealth, I must regard him as a prize and have other women envy me. D'ye see? Now who'd envy me Bob Deschalles—who under heaven?"

She gave a conclusive shrug and returned to the magazine. Her mother looked at her and sighed impatiently.

"Well, about David Temple?" she said sharply.

"And what about him? He's coming at 5. I'm going to pour tea for him, which he'll pretend to drink. I'll see he thinks me beautiful, which I am, as well as a great many other things which I'm not."

"You know well enough what I mean, Olga. You can be so provoking. Why don't you answer me?"

"You haven't asked me anything."

"Does he mean anything?" she asked angrily.

"Yes, he means everything."

"Has he said anything?" And a look of rapacity made Mrs. Ericsson's eyes ugly.

"Not exactly."

"Then how can you tell? You only think so. You've thought so before and been mistaken."

"I feel it."

"And you'd marry him?"

"Why not? I've used my eyes to good advantage, mamma, though I haven't seemed to see much. Women have stopped running after David Temple because he's been given up as hopeless. Suppose I win him? If any have doubted my power they'll doubt no more. Besides he inspires a delicious sense of fear in me. As for what he is"—and she extended her hands—"show me anything better. He's rich. The position he holds at the head of The Citizen, representing its brains and money, is the nearest thing to a title to be had in this country. More than this, he's ambitious, and he'll keep advancing. He may go into politics, be the president—who knows—and I'll make things hum at the White House." She rose and in passing her mother drew her hand teasingly down her small, worried face, flattening the nose. "How would you look, dear, between two foreign diplomats at a state dinner? Just like a pussy cat," she laughed merrily. "And how would it like to look like a pussy cat?"

"Don't be childish, Olga." Mrs. Ericsson rearranged her nose and rose testily. "You've evidently made up your mind. Well, I'll be glad when it's settled and the strain of keeping up appearances is over."

"If you only wouldn't worry," said Olga placidly.

"Not worry?" flashed Mrs. Ericsson from the doorway. "And where would you be and how would things be with you today if I didn't worry to find some way of making ends meet? I'll say, 'Thank God,' when it's ended."

"And I'll say 'Amen,'" said Olga, with more emphasis than was usual with her.

FACES IN A TREE TRUNK.

Likenesses of Shakespeare, Queen Elizabeth and Raleigh Recognized.

A Minnesota carpenter named Hauge has run across a piece of maple that may well excite new interest in the Shakespeare-Bacon controversy. This carpenter lives at St. Paul—which is also the home of Ignatius Donnelly, one of the first of the Baconians. It was a cross-grained bit of maple that Carpenter Hauge was planing. In it was a bunch of black veins, showing the outlines of a human face. Fearful of spoiling the image by entering deeper, the carpenter cut out the section and polished it. The wood then showed a wonderful combination of three heads. Held at a distance it is a likeness, said to be excellent, of Sir Walter Raleigh. Held nearer, the upper portion is a cameo-like representation of Queen Elizabeth, ruff and all, with the smooth dressing of the red hair characteristic of the portraits of that notable, irascible dame, whose love was deep, but not lasting, and whose lovers had their heads laid on the block. Below the head of Elizabeth is the face of Shakespeare. Report has it that the portrait of the poet is correct, except that a portion of the pointed beard and of the upper left temple is missing. The bit of wood showing this remarkable trio of portraits, put there by nature, is two inches long and an inch wide.

If, now, instead of the face of Shakespeare, the face of Bacon had appeared, what more assurance could be asked of nature's testimony in favor of the cipher theory? Confessedly the portrait said to be that of Shakespeare lacks something of a complete likeness. Let it be examined again—it may be the face of Bacon after all. If it is not, let the carpenter take off one little shaving from the part, and probably Bacon will be found behind Shakespeare.—Detroit Journal.

A RAILROAD RUN BY MONKS.

Cowled Engineer and Brakeman Present a Novel Sight.

The Trappist monks of Saligny are the most enterprising com any of religious exclusives in the world. They have recently built a railroad, among other up-to-date undertakings, and this constitutes one of the most curious lines of conveyance to be found the globe around.

This unique railroad is equipped with the most modern rolling stock. The chief object of the road is the profitable transportation of the kaolin, or potter's clay, which is found in large quantities at Saligny. The spectacle of a couple of heavily-cowled monks, one acting as engineer to a cabless locomotive and the other doing a brakeman's duty, is the most startling feature encountered by the tourist in the Trappist's country.

When this railroad was first started there was much opposition to it, both from the laymen and the clergy throughout France. After the Trappists had demonstrated the value of their railroad to the town of Saligny and the surrounding country, as well as to their order, opposition ceased. To-day the little railroad is one of the most profitable in all France.—New York Journal.

FLAG OF THE SECRETARY OF WAR.

Similar in Design to the President's, but the Color is Scarlet.

Among the special flags of the United States, there is now, for the first time, one belonging to the Secretary of War. The new flag is of scarlet bunting, the fly measuring twelve feet, and the hoist six feet and eight inches. In the center is an eagle with outstretched wings, bearing on its breast a United States shield. The eagle, which is the same as that on the National arms, holds in its right talon an olive branch with red berries, and in its left a bunch of arrows. In its beak is a scroll with the motto "E Pluribus Unum." In the field of the shield are two rows of stars, six in the upper and seven in the lower row. There also is a large white star in each of the four corners of the flag itself.

There will also be a smaller flag, nearly square in shape, made of silk, and bearing the same design. This is to be used as the "colors" of the Secretary of War.

Popular Justice in Bavaria.

A debate in the Bavarian Diet recently shows that in some parts of Bavaria a kind of popular justice, a relic of the Middle Ages, is still exercised by the people in the case of offences which do not fall within the pale of the ordinary law, such as usury, flagrant immorality, arbitrary conduct of officials and the like. This method of procedure, which is called "Haberfeltreiben," is practiced by people who assemble with blackened or masked faces before the offender's house, and there create a horrible din, howling, firing rifles, and beating pots and kettles. Then a mock sermon, in doggerel verse, setting forth the offence of the person concerned is recited in the hearing of the misdemeanant. Neither person nor property is, however, injured.—New York Post.

Tomorrow afternoon will see the second appearance of the Riverdale Field Club at the Crescent Oval. Their opponents will be the Arlington A. A., one of the strongest semi-professional aggregations in this vicinity. In their game wilh the Orange Athletic Club, they were only defeated by a very narrow margin, and as the Riverdales lost with the Orange team by only one run the teams are bound to be pretty well matched. The success of the first game here last Saturday with the Montclair A. C. delighted the cranks beyond measure and will be the means of bringing many out to this game. As previously announced the ladies will be admitted free, and a section of the grand-stand will be reserved for their especial use. It's going to be a good game and well worth witnessing. The teams will bat as follows:

RIVERDALE F. C.	ARLINGTON A. A.

AMONG THE STEPPERS.

Harry Gynette is changing the gait of his black stallion "Sable Wilkes, Jr." from a trot to a pace.

There will be an interesting programme of races at the matinee races at the grounds of the Plainfield Driving Club tomorrow afternoon. Several matches between prominent horses will be trotted and there will be other events in which there will be several entries. The popularity of the races has brought out a number of new horsemen who are anxious to try conclusions with some of the regular attendants.

FIVE PERSONS DROWNED.

Nine Persons Hurled Into a Swollen Stream by the Crumbling of a Wall.

(From the Union Associated Press.)

Pittsburg, August 19, 2:15 p. m.—A cloudburst occurred at Bridgeville, near this city, early this morning. Two men, two women and five children, who were standing on the banks of Saw Mill Run at 8:30 o'clock watching the torrents sweeping into the Ohio River at the foot of Main street, West End, were carried into the water by the crumbling of the wall. Mrs. Loftis, two children and a man were rescued. Three members of the Loftis family, Mrs. Shaughnessy and an unknown man were drowned.

What is That Other Attraction?

William A. Stimpson, of The Plainfield Daily Press, is spending a week at the Gibson House. Mr. Stimpson is very favorably impressed with our town and its surroundings. Besides its natural attractions there are others which we know Mr. Stimpson's discerning eye will not fail to observe. —Milford Leader.

THE TODDY TREE.

Nature Has Her Rum Shops and Drunkards Among Insects.

Nature has her rum shops, her saloons. She produces plants which devote themselves to the manufacture and sale of intoxicants. The South American toddy tree is well known to naturalists. It is well known also to the South American beetle. When the latter goes on a spree he never goes it alone, after the unneighborly habit of the human drunkard, but he collects his friends and acquaintances to the number of thirty or forty; the whole crowd run their short horns through the bark of the toddy tree, revel in the outflowing juices and, while inebriated, are easily caught by the human natives.

The toddy tree parts with its liquor free of charge. There are other plants which are less generous. They exact no less a penalty than the death of the unfortunate drunkard. And what do they do with the body? Strange as it may seem, they eat it. In this manner they obtain the food which nourishes them and sustains their healthful existence.

At the end of each of their long green leaves these plants have a pitcher-shaped receptacle. We might style this the growler, but it never needs to be brushed. It is always full of what with special appropriateness might be called bug juice—a watery liquor, sweet to the taste and inebriating to the senses. Only in fine weather is the growler open for business. On rainy days it is firmly shut up to keep out the rain that would dilute and spoil the contents. Nature's saloon keepers do not water their stock.—William S. Walsh in Lippincott's.

CUBAN CAMPAIGNING.

SPANISH-INSURGENT WARFARE DESCRIBED BY A CUBAN COLONEL.

The Cuban Soldiers Heroes in the Eyes of the North if They Are Poorly Armed and Fed and Weaken Numbers—Gave up Land and Possessions to Join Insurgent Army.

The Cuban soldiers, poorly armed and poorly fed and weak in numbers, have become heroes in the eyes of the kind North. True, we have heroes among us, and we all try to fight bravely for our country. We willingly give up lands, professions and quiet to join the torn ranks of the little army; and we win many wonderful victories. These victories are due, to a great extent, to the fine qualities of our own men—to their dash and skill—but partly to the inexperience of the troops sent against us by the Spanish government. Boys of 17 and under are forced to take up arms against men for whom they have no real feeling of enmity. They are rushed about through a country they do not know; they are treated like dogs by most of their officers, and harassed by us from daylight till dark. Few of their old troops are left to fight us. They were men of mettle and knowledge of warfare, and often proved too much for us, man for man. But the new recruits are fighting unwillingly, in a cause they do not love, and if we have any pity to spare from our own people it is for them.

The Cuban in his early boyhood is trained in the use of the machete. In time of peace he uses it to cut cane and firewood, and as a tool in carpentry work; but when he rides to war it becomes more deadly than the American army sabre or the old-time rapier. Every countryman, white or black, owns a machete, so in this respect our men are easily armed. Many of our cavalrymen are without carbines, but as the wild charge is the most effective method of breaking the enemy in our guerilla fighting, the man with nothing but his machete is not entirely useless. When the Spanish commanders hear that we are somewhere in the vicinity and march into the hills to subdue us, our horsemen divide into small squads of ten or twelve and our infantry lie in ambush. When the Spaniards are near enough to make sure targets we open fire on them from the brush. Sometimes they answer this volley and charge at the smoke, and sometimes they turn back and make a dash for safety. In either case our little band of horsemen break in upon them from every side and cut and retreat. The Spanish officers may try to form their men into squares, but very often their attempts are unsuccessful, so we cut them down as they run. This is our way of coping with the superior numbers of Spanish regulars sent out to beat us back into servitude. Sometimes the victory is ours, often it is theirs—for once in the open their numbers tell. We would not be able to carry our system of ambush and deadly attack into operation but for our relays of scouts, who keep the main body of our army notified of every movement of the enemy.

Most of the colored soldiers fighting for the Cuban cause are in the infantry, being too poor to own mounts of their own—and in our army every man supplies his own horse, or else goes on foot. We have been under arms for over three years, and during all that time have known no such thing as payday.

Americans have too great a fear of catching yellow fever in Cuba. The truth of the matter is that our pastoral districts and our hills are as healthy as any country in the world, and that the disease rages only in the vicinity of Havana, and there it is partly due to the carelessness of the Spaniards in their sanitary arrangements.

A Remarkable Fact.

It is a remarkable fact that while the Christian churches of the United States are sending missionaries to the far East to convert the people of the land that was the cradle of the Aryan races, that same land is sending to this country the philosophy that has there been nursed and preserved for thousands of years, and its teachings are finding adherents among the most enlightened of our Christians, who say that it is nothing but more light shed upon the teachings of the Great Master, whose principal and oft-repeated maxim is that only through the love of humanity and the exercise of charity and self-sacrifice can the kingdom of heaven be gained.

Every kind act toward your suffering or ignorant brother carries with it its own reward, because it makes you a better man.

Surely there is something divine in the idea that a noble thought lives on forever even if not uttered, and that those noble thoughts and impulses come to him who fits himself for their reception through his own actions and life, and as the thought is the beginning of all action so our lives are assisted by noble thought.

Indian Fighters in Cuba.

The Indian warfare on the plains has developed as gallant soldiers as can be found in any army in the world. The campaigns against the murderous Sioux, Utes, Apaches and other hostiles lacked the pageantry and dazzle of some wars, but they developed soldierly qualities and made veterans equal to the best in the world. Many of the officers in the regular army and a great part of the men have seen active service against the redskins. They are ready for an ambushed, treacherous foe. Their discipline, keenness, resourcefulness and hardiness splendidly qualify them for service in Cuba. They were educated in the best school of the soldiers, the Indian campaigns in the West.

Margaret Fuller's Good Shot.

Mrs. Horace Greeley had a strong antipathy to kid gloves, and never wore them on any occasion. One day, it is said, she met Margaret Fuller on the street, and instead of greeting her with any usual salutation, she touched Margaret's hand with a shudder, exclaiming: "Skin of a beast! Skin of a beast!"

"Why, what do you mean?" asked Margaret, in surprise. "What do you wear?"

"Silk," returned Mrs. Greeley, "silk always."

Margaret touched her hand and shuddered, saying, "Entrails of a worm! Entrails of a worm!"—Exchange.

The enemy of the shoe trade is the carrying over of stock from year to year until it gets clear off style. It deceives customers. It disgusts clerks. It turns profit into loss. CONVENTION DATE NOT YET SETTLED.

Democratic State Committee Meet at Atlantic City.

LEADERS ARE HOPEFUL.

DALY AND SEYMOUR THE ONLY ONES WITH ACTIVE BOOMS.

Sub-Committee Will Issue the Call for the Convention—Between Now and Then the Idea of How the State Platform Should be Framed Will be Secured—Settling the Basis of Representation.

(Special to The Daily Press.)

Atlantic City, Aug. 20.—Twenty-one members of the State Democratic Committee met here yesterday and decided, after arranging for the representation to the State convention, to leave the naming of a date for the convention to a committee to be selected by Colonel E. L. Price, chairman of the State committee.

This action was taken after a long informal discussion by members of the State committee, who expressed the opinion that it might under existing conditions be wise to have the convention held at as late a date as could be agreed upon.

The most urgent reason advanced in favor of the plan was that few committee meetings had been held and, consequently, the representatives from the various sections of the State had little or no knowledge as to the views of their colleagues as to what the issues of the campaign ought to be or who would prove the most available candidate for Governor.

By its terms the committee was to consist of six members appointed by the chairman, including himself, and the following were named: Senator Daly, of Hudson; David S. Crater, of Monmouth; James S. Lanning, of Mercer; William J. Keys, of Somerset, and William B. Pugh, of Bergen.

This committee will meet at an early date, issue the call for the convention and between now and then hold several meetings and conferences with Democrats in different sections of the State for the purpose of obtaining ideas as to how the State platform should be framed. It will then submit the same to the committee on resolutions, to be appointed by the convention.

A remarkable incident connected with the meeting of the committee was the large attendance, notwithstanding the fact that nearly all the members present were protesting against having been called such a distance to simply fix the representation of delegates to which the State convention at one delegate for each 200 Democratic voters and fraction in excess of 100 at the last election, and then delegate the fixing of a date for the convention to a committee. The representation agreed upon provides that each district shall have at least one delegate, and that means that the total number of delegates will be about 1,050.

Oliver Kelley, while expressing the opinion as a loyal son of Middlesex that Senator VanCleef might prove a formidable candidate, said that in his opinion the candidate would be either Mayor Seymour, of Essex, or Senator Daly, of Hudson.

James M. Lanning, of Mercer, said it was probable, notwithstanding the reputed candidacy of General Donnelly, that Mayor Seymour would have the Mercer delegation, and William J. Keys had the same to say of Bergen.

In fact, every member of the committee present appeared satisfied that the sentiment was in favor of Daly or Seymour, and the Hudson Senator appeared to be so impressed with what he had learned that while insisting that he is and will continue to be a candidate until a decision has been arrived at by the convention, he says it looks like Seymour.

"If it should be he or any other equally as good a Democrat," said the Senator. "I will take off my coat and work just as hard for his election as I would for my own."

Most of the business of the committee was transacted in an informal way, and before the committee was called to order, and apart from what appears above, it consisted largely of a discussion of the proable features of the party platform.

HE AWAITS HIS ARREST.

EX-JUDGE FULLERTON NOT ANXIOUS ABOUT MRS. ALLEN'S CHARGES.

Declines to Make any Statement for Fear it Might be Construed as an Evidence of Cowardice on His Part.

(Special to the Daily Press.)

Newburgh, N. Y., August 19.—Ex-Judge Fullerton, an order for whose arrest on the charge of failing to make an accounting of $13,000 given to him to invest for Mrs. Agatha Allen, of Plainfield, N. J., has been obtained, said today:

"I feel so secure in this matter that I do not think it would be the part of wisdom for me to make any statement at this time in relation to it. If I should do so it might be construed as an evidence of cowardice on my part. If I should be arrested on the charge, it would then be time enough for me to speak about the matter."

In July, 1897, Harry Lydecker, the corresponding attorney of Campbell & Home, of New York, asked ex-Judge Fullerton for an accounting of Mrs. Allen's money. Mr. Lydecker says that the Judge replied:

"My memory is not reliable and I shall be unable to say anything positive until the books of the office have been consulted, which I will see is done on the morrow."

Mr. Lydecker says that when he called on the venerable jurist again, the latter admitted owing a balance, but said he was unable to pay it.

Part of the money alleged to have been given to Judge Fullerton for investment was given by Mrs. Allen's former husband, James G. Reid.

Judge Fullerton is suffering from a severe attack of rheumatism.

SOLDIERS IN REVOLT.

Third Regiment Objected to Working Without Supper.

(Special to The Daily Press.)

Pompton Lake, August 20—Last night was the most exciting one in the history of the camp. Lieutenant Cobb, who was acting as officer of the day, wanted some prisoners who were digging trenches to work after 6 o'clock without receiving their supper. They refused and remained obdurate until 8 o'clock, when they were returned to the guardhouse. However, they had more than a supper, as the men threw sandwich after sandwich to them while they were in the trench. About 8:30 o'clock the whole of the First Battalion was called to arms to put down the prisoners. Some of them, quartered in what is called the "cooler," burst its sides out and were making a complete wreck of it when they were stopped by the guards. This morning the building looks as if it had been pierced by cannon balls. The battalion did not march to the scene, as the guards suceeded in subduing the prisoners.

The two remaining companies of the regiment are expected to arrive here this week.

Forty written answers have been made and the correct ones will be announced tomorrow evening.

Lightning Destroys a Barn.

(Special to The Daily Press.)

Flemington, August 20—In a severe thunder storm which passed over this section at midnight Thursday night, the large barn and outbuildings belonging to Howard Larue, near Flemington, were struck by lightning and burned to the ground, with their contents. Two horses perished in the flames. There was no insurance on the buildings or contents. The loss has not been estimated, but it will be heavy. The lightning was the most vivid ever seen here. A number of grain stacks in different sections were burned.

New York's Great Celebration in Progress.

SHIPS ARRIVED ON TIME

THOUSANDS SEE PARADE FROM SHORE AND RIVER.

New York is Transformed—Many Visitors of Distinction Come—Sampson is Notified—Met by Mayor—Procession Starts for City.

(From the Union Associated Press.)

New York, August 20, 1:30 p. m.—It was a great welcome that was extended to the victorious fleet of Rear Admiral Sampson when they returned to this port this morning. Thousands of people participated in the celebration and the city opened its arms to its returning naval heroes fresh from the scene of their victories.

It has been years since New York has seen such a demonstration, arranged as it was on a moment's notice. It was the very spontaniety of the effort that made it so popular with the people. Of course, the city is now one mass of tri-colored bunting in which the American flags are prominently displayed.

The North river is one confused mass of craft of all kinds from the great steamers down to the little naptha launches almost lost in the maze of vessels all with one object in view, to witness the parade and aid in doing honor to Sampson and his brave boys. Each of the craft is decorated with patriotic colors.

There was an exciting time at the headquarters of the citizen's committee until, at 7:30 o'clock this morning, the report came that the looked for squadron has arrived off Atlantic Highlands.

A despatch boat was hurried to the fleet with orders and to notify them of the approaching celebration in their honor. On its arrival there was a great scurrying on board the men-of-war, and they were speedily put into holiday attire with their long string of flags.

The squadron, headed by the flagship New York, immediately steamed up the bay and reached quarantine shortly after 9 o'clock. After the necessary examination, they passed up the bay and anchored off Tomp-

JILTED, SHE CARRIES HER TRIALS TO COURT.

Newly-Married Man Arrested Enjoying His Honeymoon.

DID HE DECEIVE ONE GIRL?

THE DELICATE QUESTION THAT JUSTICE MOSHER WILL DECIDE.

Margaret Cassidy Says That Edward Drake, Who Married Miss Snyder Thursday, Promised to Marry Her and Thus Secured Money From Her—Prefers a Novel Charge Against Him.

From out of the reputed bliss of his honeymoon, Edward Drake was suddenly transported to the solemn atmosphere of the courtroom to answer the charges of a young woman who claimed that he had grievously wronged her. He was to have married her in October, she said, and she had given him funds in trust. Now he had married another and both he and her funds were gone. Obtaining money under false pretenses was the charge as registered by Justice Mosher.

There is quite a story that can be woven out of the combined tales of the two principal actors in this little drama. Needless to say, however, they do not agree on many details of the story.

There was nothing particularly startling in the account in The Press yesterday, telling of the double wedding, when the Misses Snyder became Mrs. Edward Drake and Mrs. Frederick F. Diem.

It really proved to be an important happening in this affair and the happiness of the newly married couple was soon cut short by the subsequent proceedings.

To go back to the beginning. Two years ago Edward Drake and Margaret Cassidy met Miss Cassidy is an industrious young woman who has been supporting herself as a domestic in the home of a family living on Mercer avenue. After that they met frequently, it is said. According to the story of the young woman Drake has been paying her serious attentions ever since until January 20th last, when he asked her to be his wife and she consented. The day for the wedding was set in October, she says.

Now Drake denies it all. They were good friends, he tells, but he never had the slightest idea of marrying her. All talk of that came from her, he claims. He believes that she was completely infatuated with him and was bound to get him somehow.

Some money changed hands according to the story of both. Drake explained that she gave him some $25 when he was out of work to support him until he could find a position. She gave it, he explains, because she was in love with him.

Now, according to her complaint, he promised to marry her and then begged from her some money to pay on several lots he had purchased which were to become their joint property when they were married. She claims that she gave him $125.25, during the period of the two years they were acquainted. She now believes that he was false from the start and that his pledge to marry her was simply a ruse to get her money.

While Drake and Miss Snyder were at the rectory of the Holy Cross church, about to be wedded, Miss Cassidy had hurried to the law offices of Counselor W. S. Angleman. She had heard rumors to the effect that Drake was to be married to another woman and so decided to consult a lawyer as to her best course of action. He had not been near her of late and she feared for the future of the money she claims to have intrusted in his hands.

Then came the announcement of the marriage. An hour later Constable Rockafellow was out with a warrant looking for Drake. He was found yesterday afternoon at the home of his mother-in-law on Cottage place. The constable entered and made the arrest. A scene followed. The bride and her mother wept. Drake was indignant and all vowed vengeance on the young woman who was at the bottom of it all.

Drake was arraigned before Justice Mosher. Lawyer William G. Meza appeared as his counsel and entered a plea of not guilty. Drake was paroled in the custody of his lawyer to appear for trial Monday afternoon at 4 o'clock.

SAD SIGHT AT MONTAUK

Invalided Troops Landed From the Mobile.

TATTERED AND DIRTY.

SOME SO WEAK THAT THEY HAD TO BE CARRIED.

It Was One of the Saddest Spectacles of War to See the Weary Men Drag Themselves to Camp—26 New Fever Cases.

(From the Union Associated Press.)

Montauk, August 20, 1:05 p. m.—The work of unloading the convalescent soldiers who arrived on the transport Mobile was begun this morning.

There are a hundred and fifty-six men in all, including members of the Eighth and Twenty-second Regular Infantry and the Second Massachusetts Volunteers.

As fast as the invalided soldiers could be conveyed to the shore from the transport, they were sent to the detention camp at once.

Twenty six additional fever cases were landed and placed in the quarantine hospital during the morning.

The troops were tattered and begrimed and many needed the assistance of their fellows in leaving the ship. It was one of the saddest spectacles of war.

ANDRE'S BALLOON SIGHTED.

Meagre Report of Sight of Man Who Went to Find the North Pole.

Victoria, British Columbia, August 20, 1:31 p. m.—Prof. Andre's balloon has been sighted by Esquimaux, according to reports received from the north. The report is very meagre, no details being given.

DEATH OF D. E. TOWNLEY.

Passed Away Early This Morning at His Daughter's Home.

The death of David Edwin Townley occurred this morning at the home of his daughter, Mrs. B. S. Braider, on Manning avenue. Mr. Townley has resided in the borough for the past ten years, and during that time he has been in feeble health. His death was due to heart failure and dropsy.

Mr. Townley was born in New York in 1815. His chief business was that of a clothier, and he and his brother conducted such a business in the city for many years. He was a member of the Baptist church at Scotch Plains for many years and was always active in the support of the church. Four daughters survive him, Mrs. B. S. Braider and Miss Townley, of the borough; Mrs. Turnbull, of Orange, and Mrs. M. L. Ford, of Berkshire, N. Y. The funeral services will be held from the house on Manning avenue next Monday afternoon and will be private.

A Fractious Horse.

Yesterday afternoon on West Front street two women had an exciting experience with an unmanageable horse. The horse backed the wagon up on the sidewalk in front of the Schepflin building, but the one woman jumped from the carriage just in time to catch the horse by the head and hold him down. Assistance was given by T. J. Carey and Mr. VanFleet, merchants on the street. The names of the women were not learned.

No Church Service.

Owing to the disappointment in securing a preacher there will be no preaching in Grace M. E. church tomorrow morning. An interesting service will be held in the evening under the auspices of the Epworth League.

Mrs. W. J. Luckey, and children, of West Second street, have returned from a sojourn of four weeks at the home of Mrs. Luckey's mother at Kenoza Lake, New York State.

WORK ON THE STREETS.

MUCH WORK IN PROSPECT ON THE CITY THOROUGHFARES.

One of the Most Notable Improvements Will be the Macadamizing of Westervelt Avenue—Storm Sewer is Laid.

It is rather quiet in the street department just at present owing to the absence of Street Commissioner Gavett on his vacation. There is, however, quite a little work in prospect on his return. One of the most notable improvements promised is the macadamizing of Westervelt avenue, which will be started immediately on his return.

When the Council agreed to put the road in condition, the property owners got together and decided that they were willing to pay their share if the street might be macadamized from curb to curb. The street department was willing and the agreement was made.

Patsy Christmas completed his contract last Saturday in laying the storm sewer in Plainfield avenue. The sewer runs from South Second street to Front and thence to Giraud avenue to Green brook, into which it empties. During the rain of the last few days the new sewer has been watched very closely and it answered all the requirements for which it was built. The water that had heretofore gathered under the railway bridge was speedily gotten rid of and the residents in that section were much pleased.

Contractor Meeker has started on his job of putting Crescent avenue, between East Sixth street and Park avenue, into condition. He has employed the city steam roller and will continue to do so until the work is finished. Crescent avenue has been in pretty bad condition of late and the improvement is a needed one. The work is not done by the city's men but was awarded on contract to Meeker.

A gang of the men from the street department are busy on the outskirts of the city, cutting the grass on the sidewalks where it has grown so high as to impede progress.

FINE DAY FOR THE EXCURSIONISTS.

Hope Chapel Took Eleven Cars of People to the Shore Today.

The excursionists who left for Asbury Park this morning under the auspices of the Sunday-school of Hope chapel, could not have asked for a more delighful day. The weather was charming, indeed, and so there was a crowd of the good people who turned out early this morning and assembled at the North Avenue station.

A train of fourteen cars was more than sufficient, however, to handle them all. The last three cars were empty and were dropped at Roselle. The rest of the train was well filled. The reception to Sampson's fleet undoubtedly took many away and so reduced the crowd to Asbury Park.

The excursion train left the station shortly after 8 o'clock this morning without any exciting circumstances.

A Lad Drowned While Fishing.

(Special to The Daily Press.)

Somerville, August 20—Barney McCune, the eight-year-old son of Peter McCune, was drowned Wednesday afternoon in the Raritan river, near Finderne. He went fishing with a younger brother, the bank caved in, and Barney was thrown into deep water. His younger brother made efforts to rescue him, but when he found that he could not do so he ran for assistance to Peter Case's house. The farmer hurried to the river bank but was unable to reach the drowning lad in time to save him. The body was recovered Friday afternoon.

Doaney Not Sentenced.

(Special to The Daily Press.)

Somerville, August 20.—Judge Bartine did not sentence Edward Doaney yesterday, as was expected, but the matter was laid over for one week. It will be remembered that Doaney was arrested in North Plainfield several weeks ago for entering the house of W. C. Smith, Jr., on Watchung avenue, and it was believed that he was the man that entered Andrew Vanderbeek's house on Duer street, just previous to that time. The man has a history and no doubt his sentence will be a severe one.

Arranging for Baby Parade.

(Special to The Daily Press.)

Asbury Park, N. J., August 20.—The annual baby parade, an event which Founder Bradley regards as the biggest of the year in his domain, nothwithstanding the Lilliputian character of the participants, is to be held Saturday, August 27th. Miss Emma Ross has been chosen as manager by a committee of arrangements, consisting of Dr. Bruce S. Keotor, T. Frank Appleby and Dr. Wilbur. The first entry was received today. It was that of Frank Longwig, of No. 60 1-2 West Albany street.

WARSHIPS GREETED IN FIGHTING TRIM.

Naval Display in New York Bay Makes a Big Time.

HOLIDAY TIME FOR MANY.

LARGE NUMBER OF PLAINFIELDERS ATTEND THE CELEBRATION.

Every New York Train This Morning Carried Many to the Scene of the Festive and Patriotic Occasion—James A. McGee Takes a Sight-seeing Party on One of the Standard Oil Co.'s Tugs.

The fact that the ships that have so gallantly defended the honor of the United States in Cuban and Porto Rican waters are right at our doors and are to be welcomed this morning in rousing fashion, attracted a host of Plainfielders to New York this morning. A chance to see the wonderful battleships, in their war paint, as it were, just as they have returned from their victories in the south, had its effect. As a result, the early morning trains were simply crowded with sight-seers and pleasure goers.

Many of the Plainfield commuters had a holiday from their duties in New York this morning. Having no business on hand, they promptly gathered their families about them and departed for the best post of observation. Some planned to go on yachts and tugs, others on one of the host of excursion boats that will crowd the bay. Still others will join the throng of spectators who will crowd Riverside Drive and the banks of the Hudson river.

The 7:28, the 7:55, and the 8:30 express trains were all crowded while the locals had an unusual number of passengers en route to the scene of the celebration. Everybody was dresued for a day on or near the water and yachting caps abounded on every side.

One of the largest parties to go from this city was that arranged by James A. McGee, of Willow avenue. They will go on one of the big ocean tugs of the Standard Oil Company. The party will include the families of Henry A. McGee, of Orchard avenue, Walter M. McGee, of Rockview avenue, James R. Joy, of Myrtle avenue, Charles E. Horne, of Willow avenue, and Charles Ashbridge, of Philadelphia.

The family of O. T. Waring, of Park avenue, were among the members of a party who occupied one of the tugs of the Standard Oil Company.

James Taylor and family, of West Seventh street, were among the guests on one of the New York Central's tugs.

Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Morse, Miss Morse, of Franklin place, Willard M. Miner, of East Sixth street, Henry B. Drake and Douglass Drake, of Duer street, made up a portion of the party on the yacht Alberta M.

Charles W. Burton and Gordon Burton, of Watchung avenue, went to New York, where they joined a party on board the ocean tug A. A. Sumner, of the Tide Water Oil Company.

FINES EAT UP SOLDIERS' PAY.

Punishment for Their Absence Without Leave.

(Special to The Daily Press.

Pompton Lake, N. J., August 20.—A few men are now getting away on furloughs, as those who went away on "French leave" are returning by every in-bound train. Four men left Company L on 48-hour leaves of absence yesterday. A like number left this morning. The fines imposed on the offenders are in most cases very heavy, and it is doubtful if any of them will receive more than 60 cents out of their next month's pay. Further punishment consists of confinement in quarters, as the guardhouses are already overcrowded.

An Italian Trick.

(Special to The Daily Press.)

Westfield, August 20.—A horse driven by Arthur Sommers, of Dunellen, got mired in the gas pipe trench on South avenue, Westfield, Wednesday night. While the owner was trying to get the horse out several Italians came along and he asked them to help him. They were willing to assist him for 50 cents each, which he paid them, before they would lift the horse out. When the horse was back on solid ground Sommers found that while working on the horse someone had stolen the buggy cushion, blanket, whip, tie-rope and five pounds of meat that he had in the buggy.

Contracts for New Residence.

The new house to be erected on the corner of Stelle avenue and Field avenue by Mrs. Ladd is to be started at once. A. L. C. Marsh is the architect. Contracts have been signed by John Abbott for the carpenter work, and with Seaman Williams & Co., for the mason work.

WHEELER IN COMMAND

Matters in a Much More Favorable Condition at Montauk.

MORE TRANSPORTS ARRIVE

Gen. Young Now Takes Command of Cavalry, Gen. Wheeler Will Hold the Reins Till Shafter Arrives. Great Improvements Are Seen Daily. Camp Will Soon Be a Model One.

Camp Wikoff, Montauk Point, Aug. 20.—Major General S. M. B. Young retired from the command of Camp Wikoff yesterday morning and General Wheeler took the reins. The new commander's first announcement upon taking hold was that he would rescind none of the orders for camp government issued by his predecessor, and that the completion of the camp would be carried out on the plans laid down by General Young. General Young takes command of the cavary under General Wheeler, whose term as commander of the camp will extend only until the arrival of General Shafter.

Every day now sees great improvement in the condition of both sick and well, and by the time that the last transport shall have arrived from Santiago, Camp Wikoff will be a model among camps and a credit to the men who planned and built it. The greatest improvement made so far is the building of roads by the few companies of volunteer engineers, which have been here but a few weeks.

GEN. JOSEPH WHEELER.

In the six miles of road which connect the various sub-divisions of the camp with the railroad station there is now no part that cannot be travelled by night as well as by day with perfect safety. The inability of the wagon trains to supply materials as fast as they were needed to the workmen engaged in building floors and erecting tents has ceased to exist, and now, from dawn until nightfall, the three hundred wagons included in the many trains run without interruption. Bridges have been built over the streams which drain the marshy bits of lowlands between the hills. Hollows have been filled and hills levelled, until travel is easy, and the work of transportation can be rushed as fast as is desired.

The problem of getting water was solved more than a week ago, but not until to-day have the plans of the well diggers for supplying the camps been carried out. The erection last night of a large tank, big enough at the bottom for four horses to find ample stable room in, and having a capacity of 25,000 gallons, on the top of Rocky Ridge, overlooking the cavalry camps, was completed, and to-day the cavalrymen are drawing drinking water from faucets, and all along the many lines of tents on the east plateaus there is more contentment that there has been at any time before. A pump which can supply 700,000 gallons a day, forces the water up a steep incline for a distance of half a mile into the tank, which is so high above the level of the camps as to furnish ample pressure for the three miles of small pipes which form the distributing system.

The well from which the water is drawn furnishes only 200,000 gallons per day, and not until the other wells now digging in the vicinity are ready can the full supply be obtained.

The Seneca reached here from Santiago soon after midnight and the Mobile arrived a few hours later. On board the Seneca were 400 members of the Fourth United States infantry. Dr. Magruder visited the Seneca soon after daybreak and was pleased to find that there was no illness on board, except a few cases of malarial fever.

He gave permission for the soldiers to land, and the debarkation began at 8 o'clock. Three hours later all the troops were ashore and noon found them established in their camp, which was in readiness for them.

The ferryboat Nevada also arrived here with 250 horses for the use of the sanitary department on board. One hundred and twenty-five wagons for similar use came by train.

So many patients have already gone into the hospitals that more nurses are needed and next week twenty-five sisters of charity who have volunteered to come will be in charge of many of the fever wards. Already thirty female nurses furnished by the Red Cross society have been placed in the general hospital.

Some fifty more nurses are necessary to equip the hospitals, and the 100 asked for by the Red Cross Society will arrive within a week.

The Signal Corps to-day began the erection of the electric light plant which General Young ordered to be put in, and before noon four miles of cable had been strung. The dynamo and the boilers, which weigh five tons, were carried from the station on specially constructed trucks drawn by twelve mules each. They were placed near the signal headquarters and will be housed by Monday. The system includes fifty high power arc lights to be placed as to light all of the camps and the roads as well.

A searchlight of sixteen thousand candle power is also being placed on the old United States signal tower near the railroad station. It will be used for watching for transports and for a guide to them when they are crossing into the harbor. The wigwag men on the hill tops to-day replaced the flags with heliographs, and all day long messages were transmitted by flashes.

Among the many plans for the comfort and convenience of the soldiers, conceived and set on foot by General Young, is that of establishing a bank where checks can be cashed, and the difficulty the soldiers encounter in procuring money will be reduced to a minimum. The war department has approved the plan and the bank will be established within a few days. An assistant army paymaster will be in charge, and any check properly drawn up and endorsed, when presented by a properly identified soldier, will be cashed. The army pay rolls will be used as a book of reference to guard against frauds.

The hospital reports this morning showed that there were 480 soldiers in the general hospital and 280 in the detention camp. There are 100 typhoid cases in camp and four cases of yellow fever.

REIMBURSING THE STATES.

Secretary Gage Lays Down Rules for Paying Their War Expenses.

Washington, Aug. 20.—Secretary Gage has made the following rules for the reimbursement of the governors of states and territories for war expenses:

Accounts or claims for reimbursement, with vouchers for all expenditures made, must be referred to the auditor for the war department for investigation.

Such accounts of claims are to be settled upon proper vouchers passed upon by the auditor of the war department and the comptroller of the treasury.

Original itemized bills must be furnished in all cases where it is practicable to do so. In cases where they are omitted, satisfactory reasons must be given for their omission. The vouchers given by the creditors of the states and territories must accompany the claims. No payment will be made directly to a creditor of a state or territory.

The certificate in support of every account, voucher, or claim must be made in the form prescribed by the comptroller of the treasury and signed by the governor.

The transportation to be reimbursed as reasonable costs incurred and paid by the governor of any state or territory in aiding the United States raise the volunteer army is only the transportation of men of his state or territory who were afterward accepted into the volunteer army from the place of their enrollment to the place of their acceptance by the mustering officer.

No reimbursements can be made for any costs incurred on account of men who were not afterward accepted in the volunteer army.

No interest can be refunded by the United States in case where the money to pay the reasonable expenses incurred in aiding the United States to raise the volunteer army has been or may hereafter be borrowed.

The rules and regulations for the settlement of claims under the act of July 27, 1861, may be taken as a guide so far as applicable in the settlement of the claims under the act of July 8, 1898.

DISBANDING OF REGIMENTS.

Several Regiments Ordered Home to Be Discharged.

Washington, Aug. 20.—Preparations are being made rapidly for the mustering out of from 75,000 to 100,000 men of the volunteer army. The list of regiments whose services are to be dispensed with will probably not be made up for about a week, but the authorities have already decided on the mustering out of several organizations, and these are being ordered to proceed from their present stations at the front or in southern camps to camps situated in their own states. The administration is thus observing its policy to muster out the volunteers at points as near as possible to their homes.

Meanwhile the troops will have the benefit of a change of climate and will become recuperated in health.

An order was issued last night directing the Second New York volunteers to proceed from camp at Fernandina, Fla., to Troy, N. Y., where it will probably be mustered out.

It was the intention to have this regiment go to Huntsville, Ala., for the present, but through the influence of Senator Murphy and others the order was changed so as to send it into camp at Troy.

Orders were sent from the war department yesterday changing the station of the First Illinois and the First Maine volunteers from Chickamauga to Springfield, Ill., and Augusta, Me., respectively, where they will be disbanded.

An order was also sent directing the Fifty-second Iowa regiment to Des Moines.

Gen. Schan Given Permission to Return.

Washington, August 20.—Gen. Theodore Schwan, who commanded a brigade composed of the Eleventh and Nineteenth regular infantry in the Porto Rico campaign, has been informed that he may return to Washington if he desires. He is an assistant adjutant general in the regular army and before being commissioned in the volunteers was the principal assistant of Adjutant General Corbin. He has performed gallant service under Miles.

Shafter to Command Montauk Next Week

Washington, August 20.—When Major General Shafter arrives at Montauk Point, L. I., next week, he will relieve Major General Wheeler of command of the troops at that post by reason of seniority of rank. General Young, who was originally in command of the camp relinquished the command to General Wheeler as his superior in rank, and General Wheeler will follow the same course upon the arrival of General Shafter.

Cloudburst at Pittsburg Pa.

Pittsburg, Aug. 20.—A cloudburst at Bridgeville, five miles southwest of here, yesterday, caused Sawmill Run to overflow, doing great damage in the West End.

Five persons, who were standing on an embankment when it gave way, are known to have been drowned, and others are missing.

DUN'S WEEKLY REVIEW.

The Trade of the Past Week Shows Encourgaing Features

New York, Aug. 20.—A war which brought no shrinkage of business while it lasted has brought with its ending a quite remarkable expansion. Orders and purchases have increased in nearly all branches, few as yet being of such nature that they can be attributed to the material enlargement of trade with the lately Spanish islands which must come a little later. The stock market has meanwhile advanced to the highest average for railroad stocks, $62.51 per share on Wednesday, that has been known for over five years, and the profit taking on Thursday did not lessen general belief in still higher prices to come.

The outlook is made still brighter by handsome earnings on important roads and increase of the dividend on Burlington and Quincy to six per cent. not over five having been paid since 1887. The statement that western roads have agreed to maintain rates from Chicago and other western points has some value, because with business enough for all it will be easier to keep the agreement.

It is odd that the iron industry, while reporting decline in products, shows more surprising gain in business than any other. Both returns of output August 1st show considerable decrease from July 1st, but more than the entire decrease is caused by the stoppage of two Shenango and four Mahoning furnaces under agreement to force higher prices for Bessemer pig. In all other states showing change output increased, exceptin gone furnace in Virginia. The demand for finished products expands remarkably, considering the enormous orders prior to July, which crowd some of the biggest works until December.

Shipments of boots and shoes in three weeks of August are the largest ever known, though but 1.4 per cent. larger than in 1895, being ten per cent. larger than last year, and sixteen per cent. larger than in 1892. In spite of general refusal of buyers to pay advances asked, purchases are continuous and keep works busy, many having orders for a month or two ahead.

The yielding in cotton to 5 7-8 cents helps the mills, and is not surprising, with present prospects of a great crop. Wheat has further declined two cents in spite of general holding of better grades by farmers which renders receipts low and visible supply small beyond precedent.

The volume of business through clearing houses has been for the week 11 per cent. larger than last year, and 30 per cent. larger than in 1892, and returns show increase outside New York as well as here. August, 1898, seems likely to much surpass any other August on record, and the tide is apparently rising.

Navy Shell Contracts Awarded.

Washington, Aug. 20.—Contracts for the half million dollars' worth of steel shells for the navy have been awarded as follows: Thirteen-inch projectiles to the Cumberland Steel and Tin Plate Company of Cumberland, Md., $95.40; ten and twelve-inch to the Taylor Steel Company of High Bridge, N. J., $46.55 and $78.96 respectively; eight-inch to the American Ordnance Company of Washington, D. C., $22.50; and four, five and six-inch, at $3, $5 and $9.75, respectively, to the United States Projectile Company of Hartford, Conn. The remarkable thing about the new contracts is the material drop in the prices of large shells. These prices are less than ten cents per pound for projectiles for which the army pays nineteen cents.

Cortes Will Assemble.

London, Aug. 20.—A dispatch from Madrid to the Central News, dated yesterday, says it is officially announced that the Cortes will assemble in September for the purpose of providing the necessary authorization of the chambers to the signing of articles of peace on the part of Spain.

Railways in Corea

Yokohama, Aug. 20.—The Corean government, replying to a German request for concessions, has notified the German consul at Seul that it proposes to establish a railway bureau, and to construct its own railways, and that therefore no further concessions will be granted.

THE CARDINAL VIRTUES.

Cannot Get Them All for Thirteen Dollar a Month.

One of the heroes in Cuba was given to indulging in the flowing bowl; not a mild indulgence, either, but a ripsroaring, whoop-snorting indulgence that is simply terrific in its mildest aspect. One day before he had floated over to the shores of the Gem of the Antilles, the colonel of his regiment called him into his tent for the purpose of talking to him like a father, as he had known him for years.

"Now, look here, John," said the colonel, kindly, "what do you mean by this sort of thing?"

"I mean to quit, colonel," he responded.

"You've said that a million times. You ought to be ashamed of yourself. You are a man of more than ordinary intelligence, you have nice people at home, you are of a good family, you are quick to learn the duties of a soldier, you are clean, you look well, you keep your accoutrements in fine condition, you are obedient, you are always willing to take your share of the hardships, you never complain, and in fact you are a model soldier with one exception."

"What's that, colonel?" asked John, just a shade leerily, it must be confessed.

"You will get drunk."

"Is that all, colonel?"

"That's enough, isn't it?"

John steadied himself by the colonel's table.

"Now, colonel," he said, as volunteers have a way of talking to their superiors, "if I'm all these good things that you say I am, why not let he drinking go with the balance? You don't expect to get all the cardinal virtues for $13 a month, do you?"—Washington Star.

The Clearing Sale of Shirt Waists.

With the close of July comes the greatest price-cutting—the most attractive values ever offered. The remaining stock is divided into two lots, 49c. and 75c., former prices ranged from 75c to $1.50. There's not 200 waists in the entire assortment, so we advise an early call for the best selection.

Sailor Hats and Untrimmed Hats 49c.

This means that each and every hat, irrespective of former price, will be 49c. Of especial interest should the price be, as none have been less than 75c, and the styles offered are all of this season's production.

Men's Negligee Shirts 59c.

Sounds cheap, but the hundred or more shirts that go on sale have been selling at 75c., 85c. and $1. The patterns are all new and desirable, the kind that you would like. Clearing time is here, and the new price, 59c., will be the means of their quick disposal.

Men's Summer Underwear 20c.

Nearly 600 pieces gauze underwear to be 20c. This is ordinarily the best 25c underwear sold, but 20c will be the clearing price.

SANTIAGO'S GARRISON

No Further Assignment of Troops Considered Necessary.

GEN. WOOD GOVERNS WELL

Further Reports of the Trouble Caused by the Various Kinds of Currency, Money Changers' Abuses. Regulating Prices of Necessaries. Progress of the Work of Reform.

Washington, Aug. 20.—General Shafter has telegraphed to the war department that he has consulted with General Lawton, commanding the department of Santiago, in regard to the military force it will be necessary to keep in eastern Cuba. Both officers agree that the army now assigned to garrison duty there will be ample for all needs. There are four regiments of so-called immunes, the Fifth regular infantry left Tampa yesterday and the Twenty-third Kansas is under orders to report to General Lawton.

Santiago de Cuba, Aug. 19.—The last week in Santiago de Cuba has seen the furtherance of reforms and improvements already under way. New complications have arisen, calling for settlement, and there has been a slow and steady increase in the death rate.

The question of Spanish and American money and their respective values continues to agitate the city, and this will probably last until little of the Spanish money remains. Notwithstanding General Woods's announcement that Spanish gold would be deprived of its Cuban increase of six per cent. on its face value and that silver was at 50 per cent. discount, many persons have persisted in considering the centen, twenty-five francs, as worth $5.30, as was formerly the case, and at no money changers could one get ten dollars in silver for five dollars in gold. Nine dollars in silver was offered and this only on small amounts.

There has been a meeting of merchants in the palace, with the object of discussing this matter of values with General Wood. The merchants were assured that the ruling applied to all transactions, so that the meeting was rather abruptly terminated.

It is becoming recognized that American money will be the money of the future in Cuba. Workmen are publicly advised to insist upon wages being paid in that currency.

GEN. WOOD, COMMANDER AT SANTIAGO.

One abuse that has been rectified was the exorbitant prices asked for food. A dollar a pound for meat, $3 for a bag of charcoal that once sold for 80 cents, and a general continuation of blockade prices long after their justification had been removed. This matter the palace has ably taken in hand, and after careful consideration and a discussion of the subject with leading wholesalers and retailers, a tariff in gold money on provisions has been arranged. Retailers have been notified that infringements of this tariff, or schedule, will be severely punished, and the community at large is requested to report any overcharge.

The cleaning of the city and the health of the people are matters receiving much attention. Probably the strangest odor Santiago ever knew—and Santiago has had an unusual experience in odors—is the new odor of disinfectants that are being scattered through the city. The street cleaning department has been hampered by the lack of carts, and, as a result, the piles of dirt that each householder carefully brushes into the street every morning are likely to remain for some days before removal.

This measure of General Wood is naturally very popular, and except from those who are prevented from longer indulging in their shameful robbery of the people, there is no complaint.

The death rate continues very high, from fifty to sixty cases per day, and there are only 30,000 inhabitants.

Leaving Santiago.

Washington, Aug. 20.—The war department has received the following:

Santiago, Aug. 19.

H. C. Corbin, Adjutant General, Washington, D. C.:

The D. H. Miller, with the First infantry and some stevedores, has just sailed.

SHAFTER,
Major General.

The war department has received the following cable dispatch giving information of the departure of Spanish prisoners:

Santiago de Cuba, Aug. 19.

H. C. Corbin, Adjutant General, Washington:

Cabadonza sailed this morning with 2,148 men, 109 officers, 44 women, 45 children. Two others are loaded and probably will sail this afternoon.

SHAFTER.

Gen. Morales Dead.

Washington, Aug. 20.—United States Minister Hunter of Guatemala cables the state department that General Morales, leader of the revolution, was captured in a cave on Wednesday, and died on his way to the prison at San Sebastian.

RELIEF ARRIVES FROM PORTO RICO

Ten Deaths Occurred During the Voyage.

New York, Aug. 20.—The hospital ship Relief, Captain Harding, arrived at quarantine shortly after 12 o'clock yesterday from ports in Porto Rico, bringing 248 sick and convalescent men from the various hospitals in Porto Rico. The Relief left this port on August 3, with Major Torney, surgeon of United States army, in charge. She also had on board Lieutenant Colonel Senn and a corps of skilled surgeons and nurses to care for and attend the sick and wounded of the army in Porto Rico.

The Relief sailed from Ponce on August 11 to Arroyo, and then returned to Ponce from which port she sailed on August 14. She then proceeded to Mayaguez, and sailed from that port for this city on the afternoon of August 15.

While at the various ports only the most serious cases of typhoid and malarial fevers were taken on board.

There were fourteen deaths aboard, four of which occurred at Porto Rico. Ten men died at sea during the voyage. Those dying on board in port were buried on shore, and nine bodies buried at sea. The body of Major L. I. Smith of the First Pennsylvania regiment, who died on August 17, of malignant typhoid fever, was placed in a sealed metallic coffin and brought to this port. The body will be sent to Philadelphia for burial.

Of those on board the Relief 154 are suffering from typhoid fever, 30 from malarial fever and 55 are convalescent. There are also nine seamen who will be sent to the navy yard. The typhoid cases will be transferred to the New York city and Brooklyn hospitals as soon as arrangements can be made to transfer them.

President McKinley Declines

New York, Aug. 20.—Mayor Van Wyck yesterday received this telegram from President McKinley:

Hon. Robert A. Van Wyck, Mayor of the City of New York:

The cordial invitation which you have extended, in behalf of the citizens and officials of New York, for the celebration of the 20th, is deeply appreciated, and I sincerely regret that public duties will preclude an absence from Washington at that time. It would be a great pleasure to unite with the people in giving a home welcome to the officers and men of the American fleet, who return with such signal honor for themselves and their country after a memorable campaign of blockade and battle.

At some future day I hope to make a personal visit to the stations of the soldiers, sailors and marines, to show, if only in slight degree, my appreciation of their heroic services to the nation, and while I cannot be present on Saturday, I am glad to have the opportunity of expressing my hearty sympathy with New York's tribute to the fleet.

WILLIAM McKINLEY.

The mayor also received the following from the attorney general

Hon. Robert A. Van Wyck, Mayor of City of New York:

I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of the invitation of the citizens and officials of New York city to be present to-morrow as a guest of the city of New York to welcome the return of the American fleet. I have, with other members of the cabinet, been directed by the president to represent him on board the flagship New York upon that occasion. Accept my appreciation of your courtesy.

JOHN W. GRIGGS.

Spain's Latest Demand.

Madrid, Aug. 19.—The government has resolved to insist that the capitulation of Manila after the signing of the protocol shall have no effect in the peace negotiations unfavorable to Spain.

In any event the government holds that the capitulation, having been signed by the commander of the town, does not entail the surrender of the whole of the Philippines.

All the indications are that the peace negotiations will be prolonged. The opposition factions are redoubling the agitation for convoking the Cortes, and it is said that Senor Sagasta begins to hesitate, although he shares the opinion of the Duke of Almodovar de Rio, the foreign minister, as to the inconvenience involved in a meeting of the Cortes and a series of debates during peace negotiations.

It is possible the Cortes will meet after the elections to the councils general about the middle of the month of September.

A Historic Group.

Washington, Aug. 20.—Secretary Day will return to Washington to-day.

At 11 o'clock the secretary will accompany Ambassador Cambon and M. Thiebaut, of the French embassy, to the White House, where all the principal figures in the signing of the peace protocol will be photographed together.

The group will include the president, Secretary Day, M. Cambon and M. Thiebaut. The assistant secretaries and other prominent officials who participated in the scenes following the signing of the protocol will also be photographed in another group.

It had been the purpose of the French ambassador to go to New York and witness the naval review, but in view of the return of Secretary Day and the engagement at the White House, his visit to New York has been cancelled.

Peace Commission.

Washington, Aug. 20.—The peace commission is not completed yet, and will not be made ready for completion until next week.

Secretary Day is still out of town, and Senator Davis, who is now said to have consented, has not arrived in Washington.

A third member of the commission will be a New York man, probably Elihu Root, although there is still talk of General Benjamin F. Tracy. Neither General Corbin nor Admiral Dewey will be on the commission.

Garment Makers Strike

New York, Aug. 20.—The latest development in the strike of the East Side garment workers is a new uprising of 1,900 cloak makers in the shops of 11 contractors and manufacturers.

SITUATION IN HAVANA

Blanco Has Ordered All Cuban Ports Thrown Open.

THE CITY LIGHTED AGAIN

Insurgents Continue Guerrilla Attacks in the Interior. Anxious Waiting for Supplies and Mail. American Correspondents Barred Out. Miss Barton Coming.

Havana, Aug. 19.—There arrived from Key West yesterday correspondents of four American newspapers, none of whom were permitted by General Blanco to land, the governor general considering their arrival here inopportune and inconvenient, and believing that their presence here before the arrival of the American peace commission might cause difficulty. The correspondents returned last night to Key West, on board the schooner Adams.

The San Quentin battalion has arrived at Pinar del Rio with 1,000 head of cattle.

One hundred Americans, who landed at Maria Gorda after a conference with the leaders Gayo and Lazo, reembarked. They afterward sent a supply of hardtack sufficient for eight days to the leader Varono. A majority of the rebels in that province are nearly naked, and entirely without shoes. They requested the Americans to provide them with clothes, etc.

Insurgents Active.

Rebel bands, under the leaders Pasayo and Pino Guerra, encamped on the 16th near the city of Pinar del Rio. Several passers by saw them, but were not attacked. The station chief at Cabezas, in the Matanzas province, reports that on the 16th inst., that place was attacked and a brisk musketry fire was kept up for an hour, but no damage was done. Reports from Jovellanos, Matanzas province, say that on the 15th inst. twelve armed insurgents appeared at the plantation Loledad, from which they drove away thirty-four oxen, after macheting a number of guerillas. They were pursued by a Spanish guerilla force, but were not overtaken.

The governor of Matanzas has dismissed the civil government secretary, who has made complaint to the colonial secretary of justice.

Reports from Matanzas state that torpedoes and other defences of the harbor were removed on the night of the 15th instant, and that the Punta Maya lighthouse was relighted.

The captain of the port has authorized pilots to take into port all vessels, and fishermen are allowed to leave the harbor at any hour. A quantity of merchandise which arrived yesterday has not been sold, owing to a difference regarding prices between sellers and buyers.

At eight o'clock this morning there arrived from Key West the schooner Irene with a cargo of provisions.

Last night Havana was again illuminated with the electric lights, which had been suspended during the blockade. The Plaza de Armas and the parks, after a period of long obscurity, presented a splendid sight. They were filled with persons of both sexes. The theatres were full. The arrival of American steamers with provisions and mails are awaited with impatience. Many soldiers who have not heard from their relatives for at least a month are anxiously awaiting the arrival of the Spanish mail steamers.

Miss Barton Going to Havana.

New York, N. Y., August 20.—In a telegram received by the Red Cross committee yesterday noon Miss Barton briefly outlined her plans and those of the government as detailed in the following:

"Secretary Alger telegraphs that the government sends me two thousand tons of supplies to Havana, as soon as they can be loaded at Port Tampa. Shall leave here Saturday on government transport, taking all mules and greater part of staff with me. Have asked Secretary Alger for ten wagons and harness. I take but small part of our supplies with me. Supplies here can be distributed to coast towns soon on regular liners."

Won't Leave Cuba Without Pay

Havana, Aug. 20.—The officers at the palace are now endeavoring to solve one of the most difficult problems with which they have had to deal for a long time.

It is the pacification of the soldiers of the regular army now on the island who have not been paid for many months.

Two army officers said positively that the troops would never evacuate the island until they had been paid. The soldiers also say that they will never give up their arms until taken from them unless they are paid.

Spanish Transport Leaves.

Washington, Aug. 20.—The following dispatch was received yesterday afternoon:

Santiago de Cuba, Aug. 19.

H. C. Corbin, Adjutant General, Washington:

Covadonga sailed for Spain this morning with 2,148 men, 109 officers, 44 women and 45 children. Two others are loaded and probably a third will sail this afternoon.

SHAFTER,
Major General.

Another Transport Off.

Washington, Aug. 19.—The following telegram has been received by the adjutant general:

Santiago de Cuba, Aug. 19.

H. C. Corbin, Adjutant General, Washington:

The D. H. Miller, with First infantry and some stevedores, has just sailed.

SHAFTER.

Spanish Military Commission Forecast

London, Aug. 20.—A dispatch to the Daily News from Madrid says that the Spanish evacuation commissioners for Cuba will be Generals Blanco, Castellanos and Leon and Admiral Manterola, and for Porto Rico Generals Macias and Ortego and Admiral Villarino.

Costs to Daily With the Law.

It don't pay to be negligent with the law's demands, as one Plainfield property-owner has found out. He owed the city 56 cents in taxes, the failure to pay which at a certain time made him a delinquent and caused the account to be inserted in the advertisement of the delinquent tax list which has been running in the local papers for the past few weeks.

This week the taxpayer appeared at the collector's office to pay the delinquency and was much astounded to find that officer demanding $1.58. At first the taxpayer couldn't understand how the tax bill could increase to that amount in such a short time, but when the collector showed him the incidental expenses that occurred by the account becoming delinquent the disgruntled property-owner could do nothing but pay the amount of actual tax three-fold increased.

Have You Read It?

Have you been reading the serial story, "A Circle in the Sand," which The Daily Press has been printing for the past week? If you have, you know how interesting it is. If you have not, you don't know what a literary treat you have missed. Kate Jordan, the author, has taken an interesting subject and woven a set of incidents and action around it that makes it very fascinating to the reader. As soon as this serial is finished another one will be commenced.

WHAT THE SHEARS FIND.

Editorial Comment From Other Papers of Interest in Plainfield.

Plainfield is famous for its hiccoughs, and Elizabeth for its skeeters. Cranford is the happy medium.—Cranford Chronicle.

* * * * *

A strolling stonecutter has done a good stroke of business in Plainfield, N. J., a few days ago. He cut the names of merchants deep in the pavement in front of their stores, and painted the letters crimson. These signs were unsightly, and, of course, would be useless in case the advertiser moved, unless he took away a part of the sidewalk.—National Advertiser.

* * * * *

It costs the Royal Baking Powder Company something like $500,000 annually for advertising. Some one once suggested to the company that it discontinue advertising one year, the baking powder was so well-known and advertised, and place that amount, $500,000, in the profits. The answer was that it would undoubtedly cost the company three times that amount to get the product in its original channels again. This is a pretty good pointer to those business men who imagine they are making a great saving when they discontinue a $4 or a $6-a-month advertisement a few months in the dull season. It never pays to tear out a dam because the water is low.—Paterson News.

The convention arrivals that attracted most of the attention yesterday were the two councilwomen from Lincoln, N. J. They are Miss Emma E. Egel, who is president of the Council, and Mrs. Flora P. Wrench. They are accompanied by Mayor Silas D. Drake. And the mayor reverses the rule. He can do more talking than either. They explain the election of women as officials of the city as follows: New Jersey has no law permitting women to act as officials, except as school trustees. When Mr Drake conceived the idea of founding Lincoln he did not go to the New Jersey Legislature for a charter. He just let the town happen in its own way, and the women vote and hold office, there being three women and three men on the Board of Councilmen. The result of the women representation that Drake is most proud of is that there are no saloons in the town. Drake calmly tells people that they have voted for sewers, electric cars and electric lighting in New Jersey. This seems strange when taken together with the statement that there are only eighty one votes in the place, but the mayor declares that they will need all these things in Lincoln.—Detroit Free Press.

PASSING COMMENT

Things that Are Not Exactly News but Just as Interesting.

When Mrs. Wallace Vail visited the old shanty in which Jim Clark and his wife eke out their lone existence, and brought them the groceries, clothing and other necessities, there was one package that gave the old fish peddler much thought. It was heavy but not bulky, and proved quite a mystery until it was opened. Inside the package was a quantity of large type, the kind in use in a job-printing office.

When old Jim Clark looked at it, he was not quite sure what he had found. He can't see very well, and the type mystified him. He scratched his head, looked doubtfully at it, and finally referred the package to Mrs. Vail. The type was returned by her to The Press office, with the remark that Mr. Clark could not find any use for it at present. The package of type happened to be in The Press office when the donations for the Clarks arrived. Charles Cook, the veteran night watchman, kindly added it to the heap of donations, and so it traveled up to Stony Hill.

For several days the well-known face of a young man of this city has not been seen about town. He has been in the vicinity, but the happenings of a few evenings ago caused him to dread a meeting with any of Plainfield's police force. He was out one evening when some friends dared him to visit a neighboring chicken-coop and capture several fowls without being detected. While he prepared for his nocturnal visit, several of the party slipped out with the intention of putting up a joke at the young man's expense. They told the owners of the chicken-coop that it was to be raided, and prepared to catch the young man in the coop. He was quicker than they thought for he secured three hens and was just making his way over the fence when they appeared. One of the party opened fire with blank cartridges. The raider tumbled in a heap in his hurry, and then up and bolted without noticing where he went. Now the sound of the revolver had attracted the attention of a policeman who came around the house in time to collide with the young man who had a chicken in either hand and one under his arm. The raider let forth a yell, allowed one hen to escape, and fled. The joke was explained to all but the young man, who is living in the expectation of being arrested any moment.

THEATRICAL.

Current Dramatic Attractions That Plainfielders Can Witness.

"At Jolly Coney Island," the opening travesty of Black Patti's Troubadours' performance, is replete with jolly songs and situations. All the quaint sights one is apt to see at this famous resort is picturesquely reproduced. The scene representing "Coney's Bowery" and "This Way" is wonderfully realistic. In this sketch the company introduce among other features some of the brightest "coon songs" and latest "buck dancing" imaginable. The fun and spirit of this sketch forms a striking contrast to the dignified and artistic operatic olio which brings the performance to a thrilling musical climax. In this final feature "Black Patti" and her magnificent voice easily carries the honors notwithstanding the splendid support which she receives from her talented associate artists. The company will be at Music Hall Wednesday night next

THINGS THAT INTEREST SCOTCH PLAINS AND DUNELLEN.

Brief and Terse Observations Gathered by Alert Press Reporters to be Perused at the Supper Table at Your Leisure

DUNELLEN.

(Special Correspondence of The Press.)

Dunellen, August 20—The borough is to be congratulated upon having such an excellent corps of teachers for the public schools next year, and the prospects are that the schools will make some progress. The enrollment gives promise of being fully up to the standard. The new principal, Leonidas VanSyckle, who comes from Hackensack, has an excellent reputation as a fine scholar and student. He taught at Fort Lee for fourteen years, where he was well liked. Another addition to the corps of teachers will be Miss Flora E. Willguss, of Red Bank. She will teach music and drawing, also the eighth grade, and assist with the third grade. Miss Ada M. Weatherwax, of Cortland, N. Y., has been engaged to teach the sixth and seventh grades, while Miss Carrie Fisher, who has taught in Dunellen for six years, will continue to teach the fourth and fifth grades. Miss Anna D. Lloyd, of Westchester, Pa., has been secured to teach the first, second and third grades. In the Lincoln School Miss Fanny Smith, of this place, will continue as principal, with Miss May O. Fulper, of Flemington, as an assistant. As previously stated the schools will reopen Tuesday, September 6th.

Prof. Whitney and wife, formerly of the borough, have returned to Needham, Mass., after a short stay in town. Mr. Whitney will not teach school next year, as was at first reported, but instead he will take up farming. He recently secured a large and well located farm at Needham, and will devote his attention to it in the future.

It is to be hoped that the people living alone the line of the trolley on North avenue, will possess enough public spirit to see that their property is properly curbed. This should be done inasmuch as the trolley company are macadamizing the street in a satisfactory manner.

Thus far a large number of new electric light poles have been erected in the town and the work of changing the wires will soon be started. Manager Sebring had a good eye when he picked out the new poles, for they are all as straight as can be.

The Dunellen Call very properly suggests that it would not be out of place to have the names of streets put on the corners, where they can be seen. As a rule many small towns neglect this important adjunct.

The Misses. Jamison, of Church street, who have been summering at various places of interest, have just returned from Peekskill, N. Y., and are now enjoying life at South Branch.

There will be no preaching services at the M. E. church tomorrow. It is expected that Rev. Mr. Todd would preach, but he finds that he will be unable to do so.

WESTFIELD.

(Special Correspondence of The Press.)

Westfield, Aug. 20.—The people who came in on the 6:29 train last night were treated to another of those disgraceful fights which are now a common occurence between the hack drivers who have their stand at the depot. John Tobin, who drives for W. H. Barton, accused John Wright, who is employed by A. E. Decker, of stealing a dollar from him while he was asleep in his carriage, and this started the fight. They were both arrested by Constable Chamberlin and taken before Justice Tuecy where a complaint of disorderly conduct was made against them by Charles B. Peddie who had arrived on the train and saw it all. Tobin was fined $2 and costs, which were paid by Township Committeeman Dennis. Wright was able to pay his own fine and they were both allowed to go.

A large number of the property owers of Summit avenue were present at the township rooms last evening when the public hearing on the application of the Westfield and Elizabeth Street Railroad came up. They were all opposed to the Committee granting the franchise on account of the damage it would do their property besides thinking it should not go so near the Public School. A. A. Gaddis, of the company, asked that further hearing be postponed until the next meeting of the Committee which will take place Friday evening, September 2d, and this was granted

The Fourth of July celebration committee held a meeting in the rooms of Hook and Ladder Company last night and reported that they were short $10 85. All bills have been paid excepting the one of $200 for the fireworks and when this shortage is made up it will be paid. Chairman Charles Denman thinks he can collect enough to make up this amount from those who did not contribute.

The following new members have been admitted to membership in the Westfield Club: E. B. Proudfit, Chas. Green, James N. Killeen, E. D. Floyd, J. A. Woodward, E. W. Newkirk, E. R. Headley, E. B. Nimmons, Robert V. Hoffman, S. A. Mallett and W. B. Baldwin.

THE SULTANA WRECK

BONES OF THE VICTIMS RECENTLY EXPOSED BY THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

In April, 1865 Her Boilers Burst and 1,500 Union Soldiers Were Killed or Drowned—River Has Now Undermined the Graveyard Where Recovered Bodies Laid.

The boat lay in this port for several hours discharging a cargo of molasses, and started up the river early on the morning of the 27th. She had proceeded about six miles, being opposite Hen and Chicken Island, when, without any warning whatever, her boilers burst, her hog chains parted and the shattered wreck caught fire. As many as 1,500 soldiers were killed or drowned as a result of the accident, and for four days dozens of floaters were captured every hour or so.

Many bodies were recovered near the scene of the wreck, and these were buried at Mound City. At that time the people in this vicinity cared precious little for Yankee soldiers, though they gave them a decent burial. No tombstones were erected, however, and the graves were not kept green.

When the Sultana's victims were buried at Mound City the impromptu graveyard in which their last sleep was to be slept was far from the river's bank, but the Mississippi, seemingly with a fiendish desire to claim the bones of these victims for her waters to ripple over, as they have rippled over for years the bones of other victims of the same catastrophe, has gradually worn away the ground until now she sweeps by the graveyard with a steady, sullen murmur, and bones and ghastly skulls look down on the water from where they lie, a few feet away.

The wreck of the steamer Sultana, which occurred on April 27, 1865, and which sent a shudder over the entire length and breadth of this land, has been recalled by the action of the Mississippi river, on whose broad bosom the catastrophe took place, and in whose cold embrace hundreds of soldiers went down to rise no more.

The Sultana was a very large Mississippi River packet, which was engaged by the United States Government as soon as the Civil War was ended, to convey Federal troops from the far South to their homes. The steamer took on a large number of troops at Vicksburg, and took on several other smaller detachments on the way up. When she arrived here, on April 26, she had 2,300 Federal soldiers aboard.

Short Sight.

Short sight is very prevalent in cities and countries where education is more highly developed; in rural districts and villages it is rarely met with, and among uneducated people and savages it is practically unknown. The inhabitants of towns and cities have their vision limited by their surroundings, and seldom exercise their sight at long distances. They are also much more given to reading and visiting, so that their children are therefore more liable to acquire that defect, and the grown-up people transmit the tendency to it. Apart from other reasons for its acquirement there will always be found among children a greater percentage of short sight, and worse degrees of the defect in those schools where the desks are low and unsuitable, and the light bad, thus necessitating much more stooping than in those where these things are arranged in accordance with common sense. The percentage of short sight in village schools is small, in higher educational establishments it is great, and in the universities and colleges is very great. In some parts of Germany, where the writer has lived and spent his youthful years in college, there are 50 per cent. of the population troubled with short sight; so that it seems that in a few generations the whole country will become short sighted if the present rate of increase of the defect be maintained. Fortunately for the human race, science generally finds a remedy when the necessity for it arises, and as the defect increased of late years, so also has the knowledge of how to combat it. There never need be a case of short sight if parents and teachers should apply to children before the defect is acquired those regulations that have to be observed afterwards.

Mischief Made by a Muskrat.

A little muskrat caused more trouble in Buffalo the other night than is ever known to have been caused by one of the animals. This particular muskrat succeeded in cutting off the electric light supply of nearly the entire city, and it was an hour before the cause of the trouble was located and removed. With the exception of an isolated district here and there the entire town was wrapped in total darkness. Main street was one long avenue of gloom, broken only by lights in windows by private plants. Everything had been running smoothly at the power station of the Buffalo General Electric company when the startling discovery was made that the water in the boilers and condensers was rapidly going down. An examination of the valve that lets the water in through the big feed pipe that runs out into Buffalo river was made, but the valve was open as it should be. The valves on the boilers and condensers were examined, and they were found to be all right, too. The water in the boilers dropped lower and lower, until finally, in order to avoid an explosion, it was found necessary to bank the fires and shut off the draughts. This done, the dynamos no longer supplied current for the lamps, and the lights went out. The trouble man was called to the station. He quickly located the trouble in the feed pipe. It was cut, and after some fishing around he dragged a muskrat out of the pipe and dropped it on the floor.

FRAUD ON THE KENNEBEC.

Skippers Who Reaped Harvests With Goods Not in the Manifest.

The recent discovery of finding goods on American fishing vessels not down on the manifest calls to mind an incident that happened years ago, the truth of which the writer and some others as well can vouch. The fact that smuggling has been continually going on for years can best be illustrated by the arrival of a fishing schooner at the mouth of the Kennebec with wines and liquors from St. Pierre, N. F. The skipper gave out that fishing was a failure and the craft was hauled into a secluded cove and apparently abandoned. Not so the cargo, for the crew proceeded up the river, where they succeeded in hiring an old decked scow. Returning at night the cargo was transferred to the scow and securely hid beneath the deck, when suddenly afterward the craft and crew conceived the idea of going up river on an eeling trip. The necessary barrels, with all other equipments necessary to a successful trip were put aboard, and the scow, piled high with eel traps, sailed away for Gardiner, where she arrived later and tied up at Clark's wharf in then Pittston. Public curiosity was aroused by the novelty of this new business, and numerous visitors watched the men as they placed and pulled their eel pots here and there, while the captain explained the process and the amount of money there was in the business. After a few weeks of this desultory kind of fishing the craft sailed away, the crew largely enriched by this perhaps original manner of selling a high grade of liquor to parties in the secret, who were all men of distinction and good judges of what they bought frequently in large quantities. Perhaps it is needless to say that the eels were never shipped, but returned to their natural element at a proper season. Most of the men who sought and did enrich themselves in this case I have mentioned are now dead, but the system still remains, and it is indeed remarkable the customs officers have so long been ignorant of the fact.

Sarcey and the Prince.

Francisque Sarcey, the French critic, who is as democratic as he is courtly, and as courtly as he is brilliant, was at Monte Carlo a few weeks ago, whither he had been called to give a series of lectures under the patronage of the Prince of Monaco, says the Chicago Record. After the first of the lectures an officer of Prince Charles' court bore to M. Sarcey a message from his master inviting him to an audience. His Highness was not quite ready to receive his guest, and, to improve the interval before he should be announced, M. Sarcey leaned his head on his hand and went to sleep, when he was awakened by a gentle hand. He thought he heard some one laughing, but was too drowsy to be sure of anything. "The deuce!" he cried, "I quite forgot the Prince. Do you know?" he continued, to the gentleman who had offered his arm, presumably to conduct him to the Prince's apartments, "I would rather go to bed."

"Ah, but, M. Sarcey," replied the other, "I wouldn't for the world oppress you if you need rest. Would you rather defer your call until tomorrow?"

"Not at all," replied Sarcey. "We must at least be civil to the great ones of the earth."

At that Sarcey's escort, who was in fact Prince Charles, burst into laughter and introduced himself. "Ah, Prince," exclaimed the critic, who was in no wise discomfited, "this is treason! You know I am nearly blind. Why did you come to the mountain when the mountain was ready to come to you? Mahomet, at least, gave the mountain a chance."

An Old Watering Place.

The oldest of Virginia watering places, the Sweet Springs, was a select and well known resort before the White Sulphur had become famous. In "the old times" the beauty and fashion of the far south thronged to drink of its sparkling spring, and bathe in its limpid pool. It was then the custom to visit the "White" and take the waters for the benefit of one's health and complexion, and afterwards go to the "Old Sweet," as it was afterwards affectionately called, for the luxury of its bath. Many dyspeptics took the bath before breakfast, following it up with a long walk, but the favorite hour was (and is) about noon. Then friends gathered about the natural pool, the water of which bubbles up from countless springs, enclosed within high brick walls, and, after a plunge in its invigorating waters, partook of the famous Virginia mint-julep. Belles as well as beaux indulged in this practice (about which, however, public opinion has undergone a change, so that the mint-julep is largely a thing of the past. The bath, though, is as popular as ever; it has been compared by some enthusiastic admirer to a plunge in champagne. This exhilarating effect may account for the gradual abandonment of the mint-julep.—Lippincott's Magazine.

Wesley's Home.

John Wesley's house in London, close to City Road chapel, has been made into a library and museum and connexional centre. It contains many interesting relics of Wesley. The little "prayer room" is to be kept as he used it. An endowment fund of $100,000 will maintain the house.

Stores of Diamonds.

It has been discovered that the native African chiefs in the diamond regions have great quantities of valuable diamonds which accumulated years ago. They treasure them as charms, and are unwilling to sell them.

THE FORESTS OF CUBA.

An Immense Amount of Valuable Timber Land In the Island.

Cuba still possesses 16,000,000 acres of virgin forest abounding in valuable timber, none of which is useful as coarse construction lumber, while nearly every foot would be salable in the United States and bring high prices. Cuban mahogany and cedar are particularly well known in the United States. The mahogany is very hard and shows a handsome grain, and is preferred by many to any other variety in common use. The moment Spain drops the reins of government in Cuba and trade relations are re-established with the States there will be a movement, both inward and outward, of forest products which will have a beneficial effect upon the industry of both countries.

First to feel the force of this movement toward rehabilitating Cuba will be the lumbering interests of the South Atlantic and Gulf coasts. Prior to three years ago they looked upon Cuba as an excellent outlet for the coarse and of the mill cuts, and since that market has been closed to permit the prosecution of a most hideous and revolting war, the coarser grades of yellow pine produced at coast points have been marketed with great difficulty and seldom at a profit. It is unfortunately true that Cuba will be unable to realize so promptly from a movement to re-establish her mahogany and cedar trade, for it is claimed by prominent operators that the industry has been so completely crippled by the ravages of war that a period of time running from twelve to eighteen months will be required before logs can be landed at ports in this country. It is hoped that all this may be accomplished without shedding an additional drop of blood. Prior to the war the annual net revenue of Cuba was $80,000,000. With peace restored it would hardly be better than $50,000,000. But under a conservative form of government she would gain strength and prestige from her closer relations with the United States.

Some New Inventions.

Shoes can be displayed to better advantage by means of a pneumatic last, which is placed inside the shoe and inflated to expand it and fill out the upper.

Metallic folding beds are being made with the horizontal bars hinged in several sections to close up and draw the footboard up to the head when the bed is not in use.

In a recently patented automatic wagon brake the thills are mounted on movable rods on the front axle, which slide backward and apply the brakes as soon as the horse holds back.

To indicate when a new bottle has been tampered with a metal ball is hung from the cork by a thread, which breaks as the corks is pulled, allowing the ball to fall to the bottom of the bottle.

Incandescent electric light globes cannot be stolen from a new socket which has an interior metallic projection locking into a catch on the base plate when the globe is screwed into position.

An improved strap for street cars is suspended on a grooved block, which rests on a toothed horizontal bar attached to the side of a car, the grooves preventing the strap from slipping under a sudden strain.

A Pennsylvania man has patented an automatic printing attachment for paper rolls, which has the type set in a roller suspended in a heavy casing, which presses it against the paper as it is unwound.

A handy truck for moving barrels has a gripping plate secured to the front of the truck, provided with a central concave portion, which has teeth along its outer edge to catch the barrel and prevent its slipping.

Bicycles can be identified by a new protective seal, which is composed of a steel case, which covers the ends of a circular link to which it is attached to the tubing, the face of the case containing a name plate.

In a recently patented bottle filling apparatus two tubes are attached to a faucet placed in the barrel or tank, with a valve in the faucet which feeds one tube at a time, allowing the tubes to be alternately placed in a new bottle while the other one is in use.

"If I Had a Million."

Here are some people who have that much a year: Spain pays her boy king $1,400,000 per year, besides $600,000 for family expenses. In other words $2,000,000 a year, and yet her soldiers are away behind with their pay, are poorly clad and fed and Spain is really one of the poorer nations. Compare with that enormous income the income of the president of the United States—$50,000. France's president gets $240,000 a year and all expenses, yet his nation is said to carry the heaviest national debt of any nation in the world. Italy's king receives $2,600,000, while the civil list of the German emperor is $4,000,000. The Czar of Russia enjoys an income of $12,000,000 annually.

Tent Pins.

Tent pins are mostly made of white oak; they must be of tough wood to stand the hard knocks to which they are subjected. They are made in lengths of sixteen and twenty-four inches. Made of hard wood as they are they are yet liable to be broken, and they are also lost. Even in peace the consumption of tent pins is considerable; a manufacturer of tents might carry in stock 5,000 or 10,000 tent pins. In war times the demand is, of course, far greater. Like many other manufactured articles of wood, tent pins are made in the West, in factories in proximity to the forests whence the supplies of wood are drawn.

CHAPTER XIII.

At 8 o'clock it was snowing wildly. The city was like the wraith of what it had been in the morning hours. Footmarks were wiped out as soon as made, and the whirl of the storm filled the town with excitement.

The bell in David Temple's office was rung sharply.

"I didn't know Mr. Temple'd come back," said Pete in dismay, sliding the latest dime novel under a box.

While fastening her veil Anne listened for David's voice. His steady, unaccented tones came clearly to her. He had returned and entered his private office without passing through the editorial rooms. A moment later he came in.

"I thought you'd be gone," he said, pausing beside her. His eyes were unusually bright, a cool color from the storm was on his cheeks. "I'm going out again in a moment and will go up town with you. I just came down to see Farley," and he crossed to the night editor's desk.

Ten minutes later they were on the streets together. The snow stung their faces, settled like a mantle over them, and in capricious skeins half hid the blinking eyes of the crowd they passed through. Shivering newsboys blew on their fingers, crouching under the stairs of the elevated road, and white capped tamale men presiding over their copper cans like magicians over a flame sent their rolling cry from the shelter of doorways.

The trains were crowded at that hour. It was necessary for Anne to take a seat far from where David stood, and she could only see his big shoulders beyond an intervening dozen. By the time her gate came in sight after a difficult walk the storm had reached crescendo, and they were breathless.

"Come up to the fire for a moment," said Anne.

"But you haven't dined?"

"Hours ago. It's almost 9. Come in. I've seen nothing of you for a week."

"Just for a moment, then, if I may. Besides, I want to speak to you of Donald."

And it was of Donald they talked, yet something in David's tone thrilled and bewildered Anne. He had been successful in his interview with Donald Sefain, had flung the first plank across the chasm between them. But content for that did not explain the light in his face, the passionate air in his whole presence. He seemed reveling in unexpressed exultation. With a foolish stirring of the heart Anne was conscious of it and waited.

As he talked he leaned back with eyes half closed. The pose forcibly recalled the first day she saw him, when he had tried to prevent her becoming a newspaper woman, the flung back shoulder and half closed eye, the loosened lock of hair clinging to the forehead and giving a boyish touch to his face. Then he was a stranger, treating her like a too ambitious child. Now he was David, so familiar, so well understood he was like another self, and she loved him.

There was fright in this last thought tonight. She seemed wild and strong, but chained by one invisible thread of her own making. While she listened to David she found herself endeavoring to explain to her pride the voluntary surrender of her heart to this man who did not and never might love her. She thought of the optimism in natural selection and that it might be unreciprocated.

She was only following an old law. Other women had impulsively and silently loved men whose hearts had been closed to them.

She knew that David was indifferent. He permitted few people an acquaintance with his intimate self. He sought none. Yet no man had more friends. Pete in the office, to whom from sheer unconcern he had never spoken a kind word, felt privileged in some mysterious way when commissioned to carry home a parcel for him. Donald, in spite of the untoward circumstances of their lives, loved him with all his heart. It was not strange, then, since David Temple was a man whose magnetism was a positive possession, who owned the passive supremacy which steals from the recorded lives of Napoleon and Dean Swift, that one woman should have come still nearer to him uninvited. She seemed defending her weakness before an invisible jury and was acquitted.

"A splendid chance," David was saying when she gave him her undivided attention again; "a chance not to be had every day. The partnership can be had for an absurdly small amount, you know, because the Englishman who is putting it all sickened in the climate and wants to get home. But Donald, assisted by the good business men still in the company, could make it pay. In Brazil"—

"Brazil? He'll have to go to Brazil?" she said uncertainly.

"You haven't been listening to me." And David leaned toward her. "Where do you suppose they grow coffee, Anne—on Staten Island? Really," he said urgently, "nothing will help Donald like getting away from New York. If it's hard to cut the old associations here, it will be just as hard to form new ones there. At first he would not listen to me, would not let me lend him the necessary money. It was a struggle between us, and I assure you, Anne, I humiliated myself to him."

"Does he want to go now?"

"He wants to try—glad even to stop sketching for awhile. It need only be for a few years. He will give up brain work and uncertain hours for a life demanding physical energy and systematic habits. Did I tell you," he said more softly, "he's to let me send his protege, Joe Evans, to my old nurse in Connecticut? The climate down there would finish the little chap in a wink." He started up and took a few steps up and down. "I never can forget my visit to his rooms the other night and the sight of the sick boy there. Donald is a queer mixture of good and bad, isn't he? He's done what I never could do, been vicious as I never could be, but he's made life heaven for one creature, urged to it by a humanity which I scarcely understand."

He stood before the fire and stared into it. There was a line between his brows, his glance was heavy, and Anne knew he was thinking of himself and what he lacked as perhaps he never had before. He sighed and moved so that his elbow rested on the mantel. When he looked down at Anne, she saw again the light as from a heart satisfied which a little while before had puzzled her.

"Anne," he said in a musing way, "do I seem unlike myself tonight?"

She nodded. She could not move her eyes from his.

"But do I look like a man who has come into a rare inheritance? Do I? Yes, yes," he said quickly, "I want to tell you. You have been so much to me I must tell you now."

He took the chair opposite her and again leaned forward. Anne sat motionless, a heavy coldness weighting her.

"Look at me. I am in love at last, as unreasonably, as hopefully, as if I were 22."

There was a second's pause. To Anne it was the ray between aspiration and chaos, all that was possible and what could never be.

"I told Olga today I loved her, Anne, and she is going to marry me. You and I will be relatives soon," he said gayly and pressed her hand.

There was nothing to tell him. She was cold and in darkness. She remained apparently quiet while her heart seemed cloven by a sword. She said everything he expected of her, some of the phrases quite prettily too. She even laughed while the mirth was dust on her lip and David unreal and terrible to her.

After a long time he went away, and she sat like a dead woman, yet curiously, painfully alive to one thought. She had loved him, and he had passed her by. Olga had won her happiness. The apathy left her, and she sprang up, her eyes suddenly wild. She hated Olga and envied her bitterly, but only for a moment. Through all her pain she recognized an unquestionable fatality. The reason of her failure to draw to herself the man she loved lay somewhere at the large root of things, in darkness, beyond the knowing. Olga's success was just as inexplicable and impersonal. The bitter fact she could face and must accept, but nothing else.

Unconscious of time, she sat still until voices in the hall and a knock at the door seemed to come from a long distance. Nora, half asleep, entered with a letter. A messenger boy in the hall was rubbing his ears with his mittened hands.

Anne opened the envelope without curiosity, but the words aroused her, and pity for something besides herself passed over her face:

MY DEAR ANNE—Can you come to my place as soon as you read this? I'm afraid it's all up with poor Joe, and he keeps talking of you. Do come with the messenger. He won't live through the night. I dare not leave his side.

DONALD.

Anne looked at the clock. It was after 11. She heard the wind shake the window in fury, she saw the snow moved like a tremendous curtain westward, and a groaning stole in from the night. The silent room became suddenly unendurable.

When she stepped from her doorway with the boy, the wind, as if recognizing her affinity by reason of the storm in her soul, welcomed her with frenzy. There was relief in bending her head against the blast, in feeling the flakes sting her face to burning life, the sense of being needed had comfort in it, and the purpose of her errand surmounted for the time the other dull, insistent ache.

The street where Donald lived was in the heart of the business center and mournfully quiet. The lights in high tenements and old fashioned lodging houses flickered on lonely stretches of snow, traffic was muffled, and people passed as if with velvet shod feet.

Anne dismissed the messenger at Donald's door and entered alone. From the many small apartments came sounds of the life within. Through one open transom where tobacco smoke curled she heard a German's voice, raised in argument, roll out, "Bismarck!" In another room a girl was laughing unrestrainedly. Farther away the reiterations of a banjo were like punctuations on the silence.

The meaning of her presence there struck Anne afresh and sharply. One room of this big house was silent, set apart, although no signet mark of blood showed on the door. Joe, the wan picker boy, had become a personage with all preparations made for a mysterious and final journey, and she had come to bid him an impressive farewell.

Nora, half asleep, entered with a letter.

At the head of the stairs she paused. A dread of the room beyond and the scene to follow came upon her, and she half turned away.

But Mrs. Mulligan came down the hall, and under the unsheltered gaslight Anne saw on her face the resigned sorrow of the old.

"It's ye, acushla," she said, with a long sigh. "Well, poor Joe's gone."

She opened the door showing the dim room, Donald at the window, his head bowed, and Joe's spent body outlined on the bed in majestic and eternal quiet.

Donald turned and came quickly to Anne's side. He held her hand in silence for a moment.

"I suppose I shouldn't have asked you to come," he said, lifting the snowy cloak from her shoulders, "but Joe wanted you. Only a few moments after the messenger had gone he died." There was a defiant, unhappy smile on his lips. "His reprieve was short lived, wasn't it? And I had meant to make him happy. I was not permitted, you see. Perhaps I was not fit."

"Don't — don't — Donald" — And Anne, unable to say more, sat down beside the bed.

The room was silent. Mrs. Mulligan had stopped the clock, and the hands pointed to the last moment of Joe's life. The old woman who had so sincerely loved the waif drew the cloth to the sharp chin and stood like a figure of fate, drearily nodding. The boy's face wore the look of fixed appeal with which the dead can disarm even hate.

"A wild night to die!" sighed Mrs. Mulligan, striking her palms softly together. "He was a small gossoon to go so far alone. Poor Joe! Ye'll never hould me yarn for me again. I'll miss ye, 'cushla, sore I'll miss ye." Breaking into sobs, she went out.

"Anne, I want to speak to you."

The words were a breath and spoken over her shoulder. She half turned, when Donald's hand was laid upon her arm.

"No," he said quickly, "don't look at me. Let me say what I must here."

His dark, agonized face was bent above her as she sat in a waiting attitude, her eyes on the silent clock. A lock of hair lay on her shoulder, and Donald's fingers touched it stealthily during a moment's pause.

"How can I say what I want to?" he asked helplessly. "But I needn't say all. You know what you've been to me. Anne, this room holds all my worse than useless life has known—you and what was Joe. His eyes are forever closed, the first whose worship I felt I deserved. You don't know what that meant to me. His look was like a waiting pardon, no matter what my sins."

She tried to lift her hand and speak, but he pressed it back, still avoiding her gaze.

"What I was to Joe," he said, "you've been to me—that and more. The bond between us makes me know that in some dear sense I belong to you—that you will be made glad or sad by what I may become. Well, far away from you in a land where I shall be alone and lonely I'm going to work thinking of you. After tonight I may not see you again for years. When I am fit, I'll come back, and I may say to you then, Anne, what now I must only whisper from shadow and without a hope. I love you. You are more to me than creed or church or prayers, for you've done what these couldn't. And I love you for yourself, apart from this altogether. I love you, Anne. I love you."

His voice faltered. Anne rose and faced him. It seemed as if chords in her soul had been struck harshly that night, but in some insolvable way a wondrous harmony had resulted. The yearning sentiment which Donald had always inspired in her rose to something more. In being hope, desire and strength to him there was a responsibility of joy and pain she could not wholly accept, yet would not repulse. She gave him her hands, her mouth quivering like a child's. Her eyes were all tenderness and confidence.

"I don't deserve a love like this," she said seriously. "How little I deserve it! But I'll remember, Donald."

She sighed and looked at him intently.

"I'll remember all you've said." But when his eyes grew more wistful she looked away.

It was after 2 o'clock when Donald left her at her door and said goodby. She watched him down the street and saw him stand once in the drifting snow and look back.

She went slowly up the stairs and into the sitting room, where the fire had been kept bright. A mocking presence seemed to greet her. Just within the door she leaned against the wall. There was the snow padded window, the curtain drawn back as her hand had placed it. By the fire was the chair in which David Temple had sat. She saw the book on which her elbow had rested as she listened to him.

In the shock of Joe's death and Donald's unexpected words the memory of the bitter hour spent there had been crowded back. Now it started into full life, and apprehensive disgust of the days to come nullified other feeling within her.

"Oh, to forget, to forget, to forget!"

She flung off cloak and hat and sat down at her desk before the window. Her lips were set and seemed to have been brushed with ashes. Her eyes were shut beneath frowning brows. She would forget—she must. She could not bear the days to come unless she did forget.

Before her lay the portfolio holding the pages of her neglected novel. Scarcely knowing what she did, she opened it and laid her hands upon the leaves. A phrase here and there caught her eyes, the name of the characters she had created. A deeper attraction for the work awoke in her, desire for sleep departed, and she felt alive to her finger tips.

She bent over the pages, and her pen went haltingly at first, but by degrees a new desire dominated her, and nothing but the thought and the word born of the thought was real to her. All else had failed. This power in herself was strong and true. Though all other delights forsake her, this never would.

Her cheek was gray, and the light had gone from her eyes, whose lashes were stiffened with tears. But she was no longer unhappy. The drifting mists of that strange dawn fled under the full sunlight and found her still writing.

CHAPTER XIV.

Seven months had passed between David's marriage in April and the foggy afternoon when he and Olga with some other hundred souls arrived in New York on board the Lucania.

Dr. Ericsson was at the wharf to meet them. They were to dine that night en famille at the old house in Waverly place.

"Anne can't be with us," said the old man regretfully as the carriage took them up Broadway. "Her old home in the country is without a tenant at present, and she's taking a rest there. She's been working too hard, too steadily, night and day."

"She's a fool," said Olga from her corner, where she sat wrapped in furs to the nose. "She'll be used up in five years."

David felt his heart grow warm at the mention of Anne's name. The old life would be delightful again. He had lost many ideals during the long honeymoon and now longed for work, the rush of The Citizen's rooms, where discussions on life's verities shot to and fro like a weaver's shuttle. He longed for a sight of Anne at her corner desk with bent profile or cheek resting in her hand. His marriage should not alter the friendship which had been in its way more satisfying, as it surely was rarer, than love. A comrade of a pretty, clever woman was the best gift a man could have in life. And he knew Anne would be glad to have him back. She had missed him, for she chose few friends, and none had been to her like him.

"Tell me about Anne," he said eagerly, while he gazed with pleasure at the familiar street scenes framed in the carriage windows. "She's well, isn't she?"

"Oh, yes, indeed!" said Dr. Ericsson, with a bright smile. "Why shouldn't she be? If, as they say, a woman thrives on admiration, she's had quite enough to turn that dark tressed head of hers. You know about her book."

"No. Is it finished? You don't mean she's had her book published? She did not write that bit of news. I call it sly of her."

"Perhaps she doubted its merit, its reception. She doubts no longer. There are plenty of books chucked at the public, but seldom one like hers. Everybody is recommending it to everybody else."

"This is great news. Do you hear, Olga?"

But Olga was asleep.

"Morgan did a good thing for himself when he got her for The Planet, didn't he?" asked Dr. Ericsson. "You'll miss her on The Citizen."

"What do you mean?" asked David. "I don't know what you're talking about."

"But you knew Anne was no longer with The Citizen."

"No, I didn't."

"She wrote you ten days—two weeks ago."

"I didn't get the letter, then." And David sat back, making no effort to hide his disappointment.

After learning the particulars he was silent. He could not realize Anne was gone, and with her to a great extent the influence in his life he desired and loved in the purest sense. He longed to see her again that night. There was much he wanted to talk to her about. He wanted her to come down a room and welcome him. He wanted to hear her bright account of the multitude of incidents which had happened during the months he had been away. She had a pretty trick when talking of bringing her fist down upon her knee in the most gentle way that had always reminded him of a flower striking its head against a wall—he wanted to see that, and her uplifted face, and to hear her quick laugh. He had felt a similar but less intricate craving for a chum at school after the division of the holidays.

The feeling strengthened during the night, and long after Olga had gone to her first land sleep on a bed that didn't wabble he found himself treading the stairs leading to The Citizen offices. It was close upon midnight. He had not been expected until morning, and his coming made a sensation. In a twinkling he was in the midst of the old life, finding at that unexpected moment a score of questions to decide and the usual turmoil singing in the air. He flung himself into the work, his disappointment about Anne almost forgotten in the earnestness of the hour.

But in the early morning, with the wet, first copy of the paper in his hand, he stood before her deserted desk. A sense of loss crept coldly over him. Would he never see her sitting there again?

CHAPTER XV.

The old Temple mansion on lower Fifth avenue seemed to wink surprise from its windows at the changes which had taken place within its walls for months before and weeks after its master's return. Staircases had been reversed, rooms halved or multiplied, windows made over and the furniture of many generations removed to make room for the treasures Olga had brought with her from Europe.

When completed at Christmas time, it was as beautiful as rare rugs, china and genuine antiquities could make it.

Since her earliest memory Olga had never been given a penny to spend without the accompaniment of a caution to use it to the best advantage, as there were few to follow. Later her insatiable need of luxuries beyond her reach had been gratified by the mounting up of bills, but the unpleasantness of debt had followed and eaten half the pleasure. As David Temple's wife she found herself for the first time able to command money, and she spent it. Luxuries became needs, fashionable rivalries troubled her, and she lay awake devising competitive extravagances. It was her ambition to be not only the beauty of her set, but a famous beauty and the most talked of woman of her time. Celebrated belles of the past had found a place in history either by their splendid gallantries, wit or by the originality of their caprices.

The age she lived in did not view the first with the palliative wink belonging to the days of Charles II and Louis XV, the second was beyond her; but a startling outlay of money by a beauty of good position could create a heroine in this money worshiping time.

"You are splendid," Smedley Joyce said to her, surveying her with monocle held up. "You need splendor. You're the very one to set the pace in society. We have no social successes here worth mentioning unless I except myself. But you can become leader and attract rivals. That sort of thing gives verve to society. The day will come when American society will not be the vapid thing it is now, and even self complacent, nontraveled France will at least have heard our names. You are beautiful, young, rich and a capital actress. Use your gifts well, startle by your originalities, make a feature of the drama in the drawing room, spend all the money you can command in a way that will create notice—do these things, and you will be a success."

Olga laid the lesson to heart. Her country house on the sound, purchased from a fallen millionaire, soon outdid in cost and display her town house. Her next craze was for horses, and she had stables built with stalls of oak and trimmings of copper. A chic Marie Antoinette boudoir on the upper floor was the most bizarre touch, and a small musicale given there attracted the reporters of society gossip.

She produced at her own house an old comedy of sufficient frankness to create a sensation among her familiars and make the curious of humbler status ache for a sight of her. She made sensational hits by unique methods of bestowing charity. She became one of the most talked of women in New York.

David lived with her, watched her. Every day he learned something new of the shallow, self centered nature masked by a loveliness which despite his reasoning subdued him still. He could have checked her extravagance, controlled her. He preferred to do neither, for he knew that in becoming her master her fear of him would have to be the weapon in his hand, her secret hate the result.

"What do you mean?" asked David.

His fortune was a splendid one. The actual money spent, great though it was, troubled him little, but Olga's insensate desire for spending helped to reveal her to him. Her vanity, which she took no pains to hide, was a continual affront.

They never quarreled, seldom disagreed. Olga was affectionate, soft, gentle as of old. No man could be insensible to her charm. But David divined how quickly the amiable smile would have changed to stolid dislike had her whims been interfered with. She went her own way serenely, no soul in her life, none in her kiss, loving nothing in the world save her own white and perfect body.

David was conscious of these truths, yet chose not to see them too clearly. He remained willfully dull sighted. He did not dare to think, decide, accept. Why fight the irremediable? Why plunge his mind in shadows? Why face the fact that in the most serious relation of life he had committed an amazing piece of folly? Rather let him accept Olga as she was, not the woman of his impassioned fancy. Let him demand only what she could give and learn to subdue his hunger for an existence she could not be part of nor understand. Let him refrain from fathoming the muddy shallows of her soul, by degrees need her less and draw around himself the comfort of an irresistible indifference. Better so for the peace of his life.

But sometimes a memory would trouble David Temple and leave his heart sad. He would think of the night he had heard the pale single whisper of the damosel who watched from heaven for her lover, and he would remember how in that moment his heart had grown large with joy as he looked at Olga's face. It had really been but the stir of the upper waves of passion, and he had fancied the sea depths troubled, but from that moment's ache and rapture he had known what love might be in a life when it staid.

Anyone Good Enough for a Bishop.

Bishop Lawrence, of Massachusetts, tells a good story on himself and President Eliot, of Harvard. When Phillips Brooks was elected Bishop a few years ago, President Eliot met Dr. Lawrence, who was then dean of the Episcopal Theological School, at Cambridge, and said to him: "The Church has made the greatest mistake of a lifetime. Brooks was the pivot around which we revolved in Boston: now you have spread him all over the State. Any one would have done for Bishop." Years after, when Phillips Brooks had gone to his reward, and Dean Lawrence had been chosen in his place, he met President Eliot in the street again. The latter was warm in his congratulations. "My dear Bishop," he said, "I must congratulate you. The Church couldn't have made a better selection. I thought you should have been the choice when Brooks was chosen."—Philadelphia Ledger.

CAROLINE ISLANDS.

POSSESSIONS OF SPAIN WHERE PERPETUAL SUMMER REIGNS.

They Stretch About 2,000 Miles From East to West — Thermometer Rarely Goes Above 90 Degrees—The Natives Are Semi-Savages and Warlike.

If the United States should obtain control of the Philippine Islands, it would then be only a question of a short while until the Caroline Islands pass into American rule. The Caroline Islands over which Spain now holds sovereignty, stretch about 2,000 miles from east to west, and though near to the equator, and in a climate of perpetual summer, the thermometer ranges from 74 degrees to 87 degrees through the year. Within the group there are five islands, of basaltic formation, some of them having high mountains from 2,000 to 3,000 feet high. These are Kusaie, Ponape, Ruk Yap, and Pelew. Kusaie and Ponape have been called the "Gems of the Pacific." For over thirty years the micronesian mission has flourished in the islands, island after island having been visited by Christian teachers, and no one ever visiting there, ever saw any sign or ever had the remotest thought that any European nation claimed sovereignty there. There were no Spaniards on the islands, no Spanish vessels in the waters. The natives were absolutely independent and their chiefs were not even asked to recognize any authority outside of their islands. The Caroline Islanders are elaborately tatooed, but their clothing is of the slightest. The characteristics vary somewhat on the various islands but most of the people are savage and warlike. While not noted for cannibalism, it is said that on some of the islands there is not an adult who has not tasted human flesh. In 1888 more than thirty different islands were occupied by native Christian teachers trained under American missionaries; the people were Christianized; liquor and tobacco were banished from the islands and "the Ten Commandments" became a code of laws. There were established forty-seven churches, with 4,500 members and fifteen native pastors. Such was the condition of the islands in 1888 until a question of territorial rights was disputed by the European powers because of Spain's enforcement of her claim of sovereignty. The matter in dispute was referred to the pope for arbitration who in his discussion gave the Marshall Islands to Germany, the Caroline Islands to Spain, and the Gilbert Group to England. After that a Spanish governor, six Roman Catholic priests and fifty Spanish soldiers were sent to Ponape. Since then no American missionary has been allowed to remain at Ponape. The Micronesian missionary boat has been forbidden to touch at any point of the islands except at the Spanish harbor. Recently, after years of delay the Spanish government has paid $14,500 for the American mission property destroyed. Spanish vessels seldom appear in the Ruk archipelago or at Kusaie and they have no difficulty on these islands.

Other Lands Than Ours.

Russia is busy at the west as well as at the east. She is improving her harbor at Vladivostock and taking possession of Port Arthur and Talien-Wan and completing her great railroad thither. At the same time she is pushing toward the Atlantic ocean, too, and preparing to establish a great ice-free port thereon. We have hitherto told of the renaissance of Archangel and the opening of a railroad connecting that ancient city directly with Moscow and all Russia. That is an important step. But it is not enough. For Archangel is near the inner end of the White sea, and that sea opens into the Arctic ocean. What is wanted is a port on the Atlantic, or at least on the Arctic, near the Atlantic, and that is exactly what Russia is now endeavoring to secure. The first step is the opening, or reopening, of the old port of Kola. That is on the Murmanian coast, well up toward the Norwegian frontier. At that point the Arctic ocean is practically always navigable, instead of being for months choked up with ice, as is the White sea at Archangel. And it is 500 miles nearer the Atlantic than is Archangel. It has the disadvantage of being much further away from Moscow and St. Petersburg, and not connected with them by river or railroad. But the enterprise that runs a railroad across Siberia can be trusted to build one across Finland and Lapland. Large appropriations have been made from the imperial treasury for the improvement of the port of Kola, or rather of Ekaterina, a little lower down on the river, and that place will doubtless soon become a considerable center of commerce.

Compensation for Accidents.

A new law adopted in Italy requires that every employer shall, at his own cost, provide for his workmen compensation for all accidents the consequences of which last more than five days. The compensation under the law is as follows: If there shall result from the accident disablement of a complete and permanent nature the compensation shall be an amount equivalent to five times the man's yearly wages, but in any case not less than $600. This amount is, as a rule to be invested in a life annuity for the benefit of the injured workman.

Around Mt Rainier.

This mountain is the grandest in the United States. It is more than 15,000 feet high, is covered with ice and snow, has beautiful parks and noble forests at its base, and is much frequented by camping parties, tourists and mountain climbers.

This afternoon the Arlington A. A. will meet the Riverdale Field Club at the Crescent Oval. The game will begin at 3:30 o'clock.

Hays, the crack catcher of the Riverdale Field Club, is an old classmate of Neely Collins, the left fielder of the late Plainfield Crescents. They both attended Fordham College at the same time and played ball together.

The management of the Riverdale Field Club has been patiently waiting during the last two games to see Westervelt go up into the air and allow them to substitute Warren MacLaughlin in the box. Westervelt didn't, however, but instead has been pitching a wonderful game. He kept Orange down to three hits, a great performance considering her fine batters.

The Cuban Giants, the real thing, have been scheduled to play at the Crescent Oval with the Riverdale Field Club Labor Day afternoon. The Cuban Giants are now the strongest team of colored players in the country and will make a great showing. A few of the original players are there and the additions are all great ball players. In the morning of Labor Day the Riverdales will play at Woodbridge against the famous "Browns."

The game between the Riverdales and the Orange A. C. has placed the former right in the van. The Orange management was more than satisfied with the game and wanted immediately to arrange another game. Of course, Manager Haley wanted Orange to come to Plainfield, for such a game would be a great attraction. It seems probable, however, that the two teams will meet again at Orange. The date will probably be the first Saturday in September. It may be possible though to arrange another game with Orange in this city later in the season.

kinsville at 9:45 o'clock.

The city boat "Glen Island" came down to meet the fleet bearing the Mayor and other municipal officers. The address of welcome was made on board the flag-ship and at 10 o'clock, amid the blowing of steam whistles and the booming of guns, the ships weighed anchor and started toward the city.

The city is simply swarming with sight-seers, many of whom have assembled at the river front to watch the passing of the warships. There are many guests of distinction here, both officials from Washington and of the State.

Secretary of War Alger, Secretary of the Treasury Lyman and his wife, Secretary of Agriculture Watson, and Governor Pingree, of Michigan, arrived in Jersey City this morning in a private car to attend the naval celebration. Attorney General Griggs, Postmaster General Smith and Secretary of the Interior Bliss arrived earlier in the day.

CAMP MEETING.

Great Preparations for the Services to be Held Tomorrow.

Great preparations are being made at the camp meeting in Netherwood for the services tomorrow which will be among the last of the camp meeting. Bishops Halliday and Clinton and ex Governor A. J. Warner, of Alabama, will be present tomorrow at the services and will speak. They will talk at the afternoon and evening services. Another feature of the services tomorrow will be the singing by Martin's Double Quartette. It is a local organization, but is composed of colored men who have a knowledge of music above the average. They have sung together many times and can render some of the old camp meeting tunes in a very pleasing fashion.

Last night there was a goodly attendance in the grove, where Rev. Dr. J. H. Calbert made an address. The meeting tonight will be an interesting one.

AMERICAN CLOTHESPINS

Used About Everywhere on the Globe Where the Wash is Hung Out to Dry.

Wherever the wash is hung out to dry, all the world over, it is more than likely to be pinned on the line with American clothespins. Americans sell clothespins practically everywhere—all over Europe, in South Africa, South America, Australia and elsewhere. Some clothespins are made, for the supply of local markets, in Sweden and in Scotland, but they are big and clumsy pins, twice the size of the Americans, and whittled out by hand, and American pins are sold in both these countries in competition with the home production.

Clothespins are made chiefly of beech and of maple; some are made of tupelo wood. They are made entirely by machinery, counted into boxes, containing 720 each, by machinery, and the boxes are nailed up by machinery. It might almost be said that blocks of wood fed to machines at one end come out boxed clothespins at the other. They are made and sold wonderfully cheap. There are two grades of clothespins; firsts and seconds. First grade pins can be bought for thirty-five cents a box.

The production of clothespins is enormous, millions of boxes annually. The consumption in this country keeps pace with the growth of the population, and great numbers are exported. Even people in the trade wonder what becomes of all the clothespins.—New York Sun.

Wonderful Russian Jewels.

A whole guide book devoted simply to the Hermitage could give no sort of idea of the barbaric splendor of its belongings. Its riches are beyond belief. Even the presents given by the Emir of Bokhara to the czar are splendid enough to dazzle one like a realization of the "Arabian Nights." But to see the most valuable of all, which are kept in the emperor's private vaults, is to be reduced to a state of bewilderment bordering on idiocy. It is astonishing enough, to one who has bought even one Russian belt set with turquoise enamel, to think of all the trappings of a horse, bit, bridle, saddle-girth, saddle-cloth, and all, made of cloth of gold and set in solid turquoise enamel; with the sword hilt, scabbard, belts and pistol handle and holster made of the same. Well, these are there by the roomful. Then you come to the private jewels, and you see all these same accoutrements made of precious stones—one of solid diamonds; another of diamonds, emeralds, topazes and pearls.—Ladies' Home Journal.

If said company shall at any time fail to comply with any of the requirements of this section, the work or repairs hereinabove specified may be done or made by or under the direction of the said committee on streets, and to their satisfaction, and the expense thereof shall on demand be paid by said company to said city; provided that the said committee on streets or a majority of them shall give at least ten days notice in writing of the intention to do such work or make such repairs, said notice to be served upon any officer or employe of said company who may be found at their office or depot.

Section 4. The said company and its officers, servants, agents or employes shall not, nor shall any or either of them be allowed to shovel, throw or place any snow, ice or slush along the side of said track or tracks in any street or streets in such manner as to obstruct other public travel therein; but, when moving said snow, ice or slush from said track or tracks the said company or its officers, servants, agents or employes shall cause the same to be immediately leveled between the said track or tracks and the gutter line on each side thereof unless the fall of snow shall have been too heavy to make it practical to level the same as aforesaid; in which latter case the said company shall pay its pro rata of the expense of the removal of said snow. Upon violation of any of the provisions of this section, there shall be incurred a penalty of Ten Dollars for every city block in which any such violation shall take place, but said penalty shall not aggregate more than One Hundred Dollars in any one day; said penalty to be paid to the city by the said company or by any of its said officers, agents or employes so offending for each and every offence.

Section 5. That the rights and privileges intended to be given by this ordinance to said company are subject to all limitations, provisions, terms and conditions set forth and contained in sections 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 13, 14, 16, 17 and 18 of the ordinance of the city entitled "An ordinance locating the tracks of the Plainfield Street Railway Company and regulating the construction and operation of the same and granting permission to said company to use electric motors as the propelling power of its cars" approved April twenty-seventh, 1891, to the same extent and with the same effect as if said sections were re-enacted in full as part of this ordinance.

Section 6. That the gauge of the tracks to be laid hereunder shall be four feet eight and one-half inches. That all the cars of the said company shall be similar to those now in use by it or such as shall be approved by the Common Council of said city. They shall be lighted by electricity and properly heated in winter. Said company shall use upon its cars the Climax or other noiseless gearing and equipped cars with proper bells or gongs and said cars shall be run at a speed of not more than ten miles an hour. No salt shall be used by said company on any part of its tracks. For violation of any of the conditions of this section there shall be incurred a penalty of ten dollars for each offence and ten dollars additional for every day that such violation shall continue, not exceeding one hundred dollars on any one conviction.

Section 7. The cars to be operated or run upon the extension of the railway of the Plainfield Street Railway Company hereby authorized to be constructed shall be equipped with fenders of the pattern approved by the mayor of the city, and so attached to the cars as best to protect persons and vehicles using the streets and persons riding on the cars from injury.

Section 8. The said company shall build or construct the extension hereby authorized with turnouts and switches in the manner aforesaid and put the same into complete operation for the transportation of passengers on or before July 1st, 1899, and upon failure so to do or upon failure or neglect to operate the same as aforesaid all the rights, powers and privileges and every one of them the said company, their successors and assigns, under and by virtue of this supplemental ordinance shall thereupon cease and determine and this ordinance shall be null and void so far as the grant of any such rights, power and privileges to said company is concerned and in either of such cases the Common Council expressly reserve the right to cause the said railroad or any part or parts thereof, so constructed, to be removed from said street or streets or any of them and to sell and dispose of the material thereof by public auction, and, after paying all the expenses of such removal and sale and of repairing the said street or streets and of restoring the same, nearly as possible to its or their original condition, to pay the balance of the proceeds of such sale to the said company or its successors or assigns, provided, that no notice of such sale shall be required to be given, other than an advertisement signed by the city clerk, and published in any one or more newspapers printed and published in said city.

The time during which the said company shall be delayed in the prosecution of its work or in the operation of its road or in any section thereof by injunction or other legal proceedings in the courts of New Jersey, or the Federal Courts in New Jersey, shall not be included within the period within which the said extension are to be constructed and put into complete operation.

Section 9. All tracks of the Street Railway Company now laid or hereafter to be laid, are to be copiously watered throughout their entire length and for the space of two feet on each side thereof, twice in each day, from the 15th day of May to the 1st day of October in each year; once before 11 A. M., and once after 2 P. M., and in case of the failure of the Street Railway Company so to do, to the satisfaction of the Street Commissioner or the Street Committee, said Company shall pay to the Treasurer of the City of Plainfield the sum of $20.00 per day for each and every day such failure shall continue or exist; such payment to be considered as liquidated damages for such default.

Section 10. The said company shall for each and every mile of street occupied by its tracks laid under the provisions of this ordinance, pay or cause to be paid to the collector of taxes of the city of Plainfield for the use of said city the following sums, to wit: For the year beginning January one 1899, One hundred dollars a mile; for the year beginning January first 1900, One hundred dollars a mile; for the year beginning January first 1901, One Hundred and twenty-five dollars a mile, the said payments to be made each and every year on or before the last day of each and every year.

For the years succeeding that beginning 1901 the said company shall pay at the same rate as for the year 1901, provided that when the gross receipts in any one year from the entire section within the city of Plainfield and the Borough of North Plainfield shall equal or exceed Eighty thousand dollars, then for that year and annually thereafter the said company shall pay annually to said city collector for the use of said city five per cent of the gross earnings of said company and said gross earnings shall be construed to include all earnings of said company, and full proportion on all earnings on through traffic to be calculated according to the proportion between the entire length of the journey and the number of miles travelled within the limits of the city of Plainfield or the Borough of North Plainfield or both as the case may be. That to enable the city to ascertain from time to time the amount of gross earnings of such company the books of the company shall be open to inspection by the Finance Committee of the Common Council or such other person or persons as the Common Council for that purpose shall designate.

The payment provided for in this section shall be in lieu of all license fees for cars whether provided for in prior ordinances or not.

Section 11. That the tracks and cars of said company shall be used for the carrying of passengers only; that no freight shall be carried by said company or over its tracks and that no luggage other than hand luggage actually carried by passengers shall be carried or allowed upon the cars of said company, or any other cars passing over said tracks. Nothing herein contained, however, shall prevent the company from carrying the U. S. Mail. That cars shall not be run in trains of more than two cars over any of the tracks of said company and that all cars shall stop upon being signalled by any foot passenger at any street corner past which said tracks are or shall be laid and passengers shall be freely allowed to board said cars or alight therefrom at any street corner, and said company shall cause the cars to come to a full stop and sound the gong or bell immediately before turning any curve or crossing such street or streets as may be designated by the Common Council on road now constructed or to be constructed. Any violation of any of the provisions of this section by said company or any of its employes shall be subject to a penalty of Twenty dollars fine for each and every offence.

Section 12. That in case the said company shall lease its tracks or any section of the same, or sell, or assigns its franchise, or attempt so to do, said company shall cause to be inserted in any such lease, deed, bill of sale, assignment or other transfer a stipulation and agreement and condition that the same is made subject to the provisions of this ordinance, and that the lessee, vendee, assignee or other person to whom such lease, conveyance, assignment or transfer may be made or attempted to be made in accepting the same agrees to bound thereby and to conform thereto and will in turn insert a clause similar to that required by this section in case of any lease, conveyance, assignment or transfer thereof to be made so that no persons, or corporations shall acquire any rights in the premises except subject to the same terms and conditions herein provided.

Section 13. That said company upon the final adoption of this ordinance and before exercising any of the rights and privileges granted hereby shall as a condition precedent file with the city clerk of the city of Plainfield a contract to be executed by said company and duly approved by the corporation counsel, wherein said company covenant and agree with the inhabitants of the city of Plainfield to abide by and perform all the matters and things herein, on the part of the said company required to be observed, kept and performed; that it will at any and all times hereafter, fully indemnify and protect the city of Plainfield of and from any and all suits, actions and proceedings that may be brought and maintained by any person or corporation for, on account of, or by reason of the adoption or maintenance by said company, its successors or assigns of said electric system or anything connected therewith or any act of omission or commission by said company, its successors or assigns or any of its agents or servants at any time or times and shall whenever requested by said city fully defend any and every such action, suit or proceeding.

Section 14. That said company shall also at the same time hereinabove specified for filing said contract file a bond to the city in the sum of Twenty thousand dollars to be approved as to form by the Common Council and corporation counsel of said city, conditioned for the full and faithful keeping, observance and performance of the terms and conditions in this ordinance and in a separate contract with said city of Plainfield to be duly executed by said company's officers contained on the part of this company to be kept, observed and performed. And in case the condition or terms upon which said company is granted permission to locate its tracks and maintain and operate its road or any of the terms or conditions of the said contract are violated the city reserves the right to revoke the permission herein granted, to remove the tracks of the said company and all the constructions made in the streets of the city by said company, its successors or assigns.

Section 15. The company shall file with the city clerk within thirty days next after the passage of this ordinance their acceptance of same and contract of conditions attached under their corporate seal and signed by their president of the terms and provisions, restrictions and regulations hereof and every one of them and in default thereof it shall be understood and held that they decline to accept the same and thereupon all rights, powers and privileges to them granted thereby shall forever cease and be at an end in the same manner and with the same effects as if this ordinance had never been passed.

Hence goods of summer fashion are to go before August 31st. We'd rather have the cash than to carry over the goods, besides we want the room for fall stock.

LOST THEIR NERVE FOR ONE INNING.

Then the Riverdale Field Club Scored Six Runs.

REST WAS HARD FOUGHT.

THE HOME TEAM DEFEATED THE ARLINGTONS 7 TO 1.

The Nines Were Evenly Matched But For One Inning When the Visitors Were "Hobsonized"—Lots of Talking in the Game — Westervelt Pitched Well—A Fair Crowd Was Present.

"Hobsonized" was the term that Will Smith coined to express the delightful fashion in which the Riverdales handled their rivals in baseball from the Arlington Athletic Association Saturday afternoon. There was one inning of it and the rest of the game was as close as the most ardent crank could have desired. As to that one inning, the advice of Billie Fox, the giant second baseman of the Arlingtons, was good. "Forget it," said he, "and remember the Maine." All of which was quite patriotic considering the naval demonstration that was in progress at New York then. In brief, the Riverdale Field Club defeated the Arlington A. A. by a score of 7 to 1.

It was the second appearance of the Riverdales at the Crescent Oval as a Plainfield team. The naval parade was a big rival and carried away many of their patrons, so too did the excursion to Asbury Park. There was, nevertheless, a fair crowd present.

Now one thing there was that made the game specially pleasing to management and audience. That was the return of the rooters. Never, since baseball has been seen at the Crescent Oval, has there been heard such weird whoops and sirenic yells that came forth from time to time. The old cranks were out and they made themselves heard. Now there always has been plenty of applause, but not of the good old-fashioned kind that made the days of the old Crescents so memorable.

Two facts were evident at the beginning of the game. They were that the visitors could talk as well as play ball. From the first-baseman to the manager and the bat-boy, they all united their voices in a grand chorus for the benefit of the team. If a kick was made, it came so united that it fairly dazed the umpires. And as for rooting, the players kept up a string of running comment that was startlingly funny.

To hear Dobbins, the genial catcher of the Arlingtons, talk from the side lines as coacher, was worth going miles.

"You can't throw the ball straight," he emphatically told Harry Westervelt. "You! you! I mean you! he shouted as he jabbed his finger in the direction of the Riverdale twirler and jumped into the air in his excitement.

As to the game itself, it was good, barring perhaps that one inning, and the teams seemed well matched. In the first inning the visitors filled two of the bases and sent a man home only to have him put out at the plate. Another man came in on a grounder which made the third out and so didn't count.

After that it was nip and tuck until the fifth inning. The Fox opened the inning for Arlington by a grounder to "Reiny" who threw him out at first. A clean hit by Clough landed him at first. Hollywood came up. A wild pitch sent Cough to third. Then Hollywood sent a fly to Fred Smith. Dillon came up and three strikes were called on him. Hays dropped the last one. He had it in a moment, however, and Clough started for home. Hays looked at clough and made a moment to throw to third, then he drove it to first to catch Dillon. He delayed too long, however. Wood fumbled the throw and both runners were safe, Cough scoring. A hit by Higgins was fielded in time to catch Dillon at the home plate.

A hit by Reinacker, a stolen base and then a sacrifice by Easton, and singles by Fred Smith and Hays brought in the first run for the Riverdales, Reinacker scoring. In the sixth inning, the Riverdale boys started in for blo od. It was then when they "Hobsonized" the Arlingtons.

Westervelt opened with a hit, to be forced out on Hardy's infield drive. Romig batted safe and sent Hardy to third and stole second himself. Fox fooled Wood's grounder and Hardy scored. A double by Reinacker scored another run. Easton was hit by the ball and filled the bases. Then Fox juggled Fred Smith's hard drive and Wood scored the third run. A long hit into right field by Hays sent in two runs while Smith slipped round to third and scored on a passed ball. Will Smith and Westervelt ended the inning. Six runs were the result.

Then the visitors steadied up and played a hard game for the rest of the time. Neither side scored after that, although both sides tried hard.

The Riverdales played an almost errorless game. Easton ran clear over the bank and became so tied up in the high weeds that he fumbled a long fly. Wood dropped Hays' slow throw to first in the fifth inning, but it is doubtful if the ball was there in time anyhow.

Harry Westervelt again pitched a remarkable game. At the last, when the Arlingtons did their best to rattle him with their continual chaffing, he did magnificent work, striking out a number and holding the visitors right down. A word should be said for the fine throwing of Hays to second which resulted in catching several attempts to steal.

The individual scores were as follows:

CULPRIT VOWED MURDER

TO WHOM? BEDBUGS HE SAID.

But the Police Thought They Were Meant, So Poor McGearry Goes to Jail for Four Months.

It was the creeping and the crawling things in the cell and not the police that he vowed to murder. Such was the statement of John McGearry to City Judge DeMeza this morning. But the Judge did not believe it. The officers say that McGearry shouted that there would be murder when he was out of jail.

Patrolman Myers found him in the West End with anotner man, named John Taylor. As they passed Myers Mac cried:

"Come on back; we can do him now."

"You're crazy," answered Taylor, and that saved him a fine.

Myers told the Judge that McGeary was an old friend of Hughie O'Donnell and had often threatened to lay for Myers if he was the cause for the arrest of Mrs. O'Donnell. Other accounts of Mac's performances were given.

The Judge suspended sentence on Taylor, but MacGearry was fined $50 and sent to jail for 60 days. As he has no money that means four months.

HAS SIX YEARS OF WORK.

MISSIONARY WHO WILL GO TO CHINA.

Miss Glenk Has Mastered the Chinese Language and Will Go to the Flowery Kingdom Next Month.

Miss E. Margaret Glenk, of Long Island City, N. Y., formerly a well-known church-worker, left Saturday for High Bridge. Miss Glenk has been studying for the past three years to be a missionary in China, and has particularly well-fitted herself for the work. She has learned the Chinese language and has an excellent acquaintance with the history, manners and customs of the people of the Celestial Kingdom.

Of late Miss Glenk has been making a tour of New Jersey, speaking to the Epworth Leagues in the State with a view of interesting them in the work. She spoke at the First M. E. church last Wednesday and was listened to with much interest. Friday evening, she made another interesting talk under the auspices of the Epworth League of the Grace M. E. church.

Miss Glenk leaves next month for China, where her duties as a missionary will occupy her there for six years before any leave of absence. During her short stay in Plainfield, Miss Glenk looked up a number of her old friends and bid them farewell before starting on her long journey. She has many of them here, all of whom wished her a pleasant time and a successful trip across the Pacific.

Clarence Sutphen, of West Second street, begins his vacation today.

"MONEY OR YOUR LIFE"

WORDS THAT A BICYCLE RIDER HEARD ON A LONELY ROAD.

James Miner Held Up By a Gruff Acting Man on the County Road—He Used His Fists With Good Effect.

James Miner, a stout colored man living on West Fourth street, was held up Saturday night on South avenue, between Fanwood and Netherwood, and had he not used his hard fists to good advantage might have suffered badly at the hands of the highwayman.

Miner is a wheelman and gives lessons in riding and managing a bicycle.

Saturday night he rode to Fanwood about 9 o'clock, and gave a lesson there. He left for home about 11:30 o'clock. He was riding one wheel and "leading" the other, and was going at a good clip. When near Jack Benner's roadhouse he was startled and almost frightened out of his wits to see a man step out from behind a telegraph pole, seize hold of his wheel, and at the same time call out in a hoarse voice, "Money or your life."

Miner says that he slid off his wheel as soon he could and with the words, "All right," struck the would-be highwayman a blow which felled him to the road bed. Miner then gave him a parting kick or two, and mounting his bicycle road on as fast as he could, fearing that the man might have some pals in the bushes who would come to his rescue.

Miner says that the fellow looked like a tramp, was tall and thin, and had a smooth face. His clothes were shabby. Miner had about $2 60 in money about him, which he saved by his quick work with his fists.

A PROMISING LAD DEAD.

Luther Compton Succumbs to a Sudden Hemorrhage of the Stomach.

Luther Compton, the eighteen-year-old son of Myers Compton, of the borough, died Saturday night after an illness extending over a period of six weeks. Compton was a faithful employe of J. H. Leggett, the druggist, and had been with him for three years. The funeral will be held tomorrow afternoon at 2:30 o'clock from the Washingtonville chapel. Interment will be in Hillside.

Compton was taken ill over a month ago, and since then has had a complication of diseases. Mr. Leggett, who was much interested in the lad, sent a nurse to the house a week ago, and from that time till Saturday night he showed imbrovement.

Saturday night Compton was taken with a hemorrhage and expired. Compton was a quiet lad and had many friends. He was an attendant at Washingtonville chapel.

THE "DON'T CARE" PEOPLE.

Robert E. Speer Devotes a Smart Talk on a Missionary Subject.

Robert E. Speer, of Elizabeth, a well-known and enthusiastic Christian worker and speaker, addressed the men's meeting at the Y. M. C. A. yesterday afternoon at 4 o'clock. As additionaly features there was singing by a choir of mixed voices, and a vocal solo by Councilman Wm. N. Runyon. Mr. Speer spoke of the irresponsibible view taken of spiritual things by the world, and of several needs of the world. He said that so many people had a feeling of "don't care," and "Its none of my business."

"Not long ago," the speaker said, "I attended a missionary meeting in this State, and at that meeting one of the richest men in the country was present. During the meeting the leader of the meeting exhibited some views of the suffering masses in the foreign fields. Most everyone who looked upon the picture expressed a feeling of sympathy, but when the richest one of them looked at the photos I waited to hear what he would have to say, and was pained to hear him remark 'Ain't them funny looking folks?' He didn't care and was not interested. The view of the world that Jesus took is good enough for men, and we can all afford to take that view."

Small Chimney Fire.

A small chimney fire broke out Saturday afternoon last at 4:15 o'clock at the home of Fred Dunn, of Sandford avenue. Miss Dunn, the daughter, was the only member of the family home and she sent word to fire headquarters. A hose carriage was sent to Mr. Dunn's house and in quick order the fire was put out. The damage was trivial.

Says He Acted in Self Defense.

Harry Eaton, of Grant avenue, was arraigned this morning on the charge of quarrelling and fighting on Grant avenue. He told a straight-forward story about the matter and claimed that he had merely acted in self-defence. His case was laid over until the others could be arraigned.

THE WARSHIPS AT ANCHOR.

A Busy Morning for the Sailors on the Fleet in New York Bay.

New York, August 22.—The fleet of Rear-Admiral Sampson anchored at Tompkinsville, S. I., continued to attract much attention today. It was a busy morning on the vessels, for the crews were washing down decks and cleaning the ships.

The thousands of visitors to the warships yesterday left much dirt behind them, and this all disappeared before the water used by the sailors. The fresh supplies were being loaded on the vessels again today. The same boating parties were about the vessels, but visitors were not allowed while "house cleaning" was in progress. Many "jackies" who went ashore on leave and stayed over their time limit, returned this morning.

Word was received at the flagship New York that Admiral Sampson had left his home in Glen Ridge to go to Washington, in accordance with the orders received by him. It is not known on Staten Island now how long the war-ships will remain off Tompkinsville.

Miles to Leave Porto Rico.

According to a despatch from Ponce, Porto Rico, Gen. Miles has decided to return to the United States, Gen. Brooke remaining as Military Governor of the Island.

The Peace Problem.

Madrid, August 22.—El Correo, the organ of the ministry, says: "The Cuban question may yet be the occasion of serious incidents, as may also be the question of internal policy, which may raise incidents that it is difficult to foresee."

AN UNEXPECTED MARRIAGE

JAMES H. CRANE WEDS MISS GRANT.

Went to Westfield Yesterday Afternoon in a Quiet Way Where the Nuptial Knot Was Tied.

Two of Plainfield's young people, Miss May Flora Grant, of LaGrande avenue, and James Henry Crane, of Carlton avenue, were quietly married yesterday afternoan at Westfield, by Rev. Mr. Ketcham, of the Congregational church. The young couple were unattended.

Miss Grant for some time was soprano soloist in the First Baptst church choir. The groom is the second son of Rev. Arthur Crane, the evangelist. The groom is employed in the New York office of the Prudential Life Insurance Company.

Mr. Crane has been boarding at McVey's Hotel for about a month past, and both he and Mrs. Crane will live there for the present.

A Press reporter called at the bride's former home this morning, but Mrs. Grant refused to talk about the marriage. A member of the family was seen, but would disclose no information about the marriage. Mrs. Crane, the groom's mother, admitted that the couple had been married, but referred the reporter to the young husband who had gone to New York on an early train. The bride was out all morning, and when finally seen at dinner this noon, in the hotel, seemed resolved also to keep secret all the facts about the marriage, and said Mr. Crane would see the reporters tonight.

RUN DOWN BY A WHEELMAN

I. W. Stout the Victim—Was Walking Along a Side Path Between Lincoln and Bound Brook.

(Special to The Daily Press.)

Lincoln, August 22—I. W. Stout, the well-known contractor of this place, was run down by a reckless bicycle rider Saturday night and received injuries that will force him to take a vacation for a few days.

Mr. Stout was walking along the side path between Lincoln and Bound Brook. It was about 8:15 o'clock when he reached the new road through East Bound Brook, where it was very dark. Mr. Stout kept on the side path on the right of the road.

Suddenly he was struck from behind by what he know was a bicycle. He remembers no more until he came to his senses, bleeding from a dozen wounds on his head and face. He looked for the wheelmen, but the latter had kept on without stopping to see whether he had disabled Mr. Stout or not.

Mr. Stout walked to Bound Brook where he had his wounds dressed and later returned to his home. Judging from the number and nature of the bruises, the bicycle rider must have been travelling at a pretty fast pace.

SAFE HOME FROM WAR.

LIEUT. ELY, OF SHAFTER'S ARMY, ARRIVED IN PLAINFIELD TODAY.

He Was Not Expected But His Welcome Was a Rousing One—Was in Charge up San Juan Hill—Twice Attacked by Fever.

There is great rejoicing at the home of Thomas B. Brooks, of Rockview avenue, today. The cause of it all was the arrival of a man wearing the natty uniform of the United States regular army and with face bronzed by continued exposure in the tropical sun. Lieut. Frank D. Ely, of the Thirteenth Infanirv, U. S. A., re turned to his wife after being reported missing and passing through the stirring times in the campaign against Santiago de Cuba.

Three years ago Lieutenant Ely wedded Miss Brooks, daughter of T. B. Brooks, of Washington Park. They then went to live at the officers's quarters on Governor's Island until the war came and Lieutenant Ely was among the first to be ordered to the front. His wife then came to this city to remain at her old home in his absence.

During the time he was at the front, Lieutenant Ely was promoted from second lieutenant to first lieutenant. He was with the Thirteenth Regulars and took place in the famous charge up the San Juan Hill. He went all through the campaign against the city of Santiago and fell a victim to the fever. It was before that that he was reported missing, but his family afterwards received word that he was still alive and well.

He suffered from two attacks of the dreaded fever but fought them off and returned to Montauk Point with the rest of the command. On his arrival there he applied for a leave of absence and was granted one for ten days. He left the camp this morning and came right through to Plainfield.

His wife had no idea of his coming so soon. When he walked in this afternoon, shortly before 2 o'clock, there was as stirring a welcome as the soldier husband could desire.

When seen by a Press reporter on his way home, the Lieutenant said that he was all here and had passed through the campaign without a scratch. He spoke lightly of the fever that threatened him.

Lieut. Ely looked well and was exceedingly tanned. His uniform looked spick and span as if he was coming from the parade ground rather than a hard and rough campaign. He is a tall man, well proportioned, and his blue uniform becomes him well.

A JEWISH WEDDING.

Barant Block Takes a Hoboken Girl for His Helpmeet.

Barant Block, manager for M. Abrams, a West Front street shoe dealer, and Miss Annie Goldberg, of Hoboken, were married last night at 9 o'clock in the Jewish Synagogue on West Front street. Rabbi Fine performed the ceremoney, which was followed by a generous collation and a dance which lasted until the early morning hours.

The groom is well-liked among the Jewish community in this city and the wedding was a large one. The bride was dressed in white silk and carried white roses. She wore a veil. Mr. and Mrs. A. Becker, from Hoboken, and Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Block, of New York, stood up with the couple.

The couple now are living at 232 East Fourth street, where they will reside for the present.

COURTESY AND KINDNESS IN HEROES

Graceful and Deserved Tribute From the Pulpit for the Warriors.

Rev. Charles Dunn, of Freeport, Ill., who preached yesterday at the First Baptist church, gave excellent sermons, morning and evening. His morning sermon, "Unity in Diversity and Strength Adorned With Beauty," was full of interest and deep thought. His reference to the conduct of our late heroes, who had added to their strength and power the sweet graces of courtesy and kindness was most opportune and pleasing. His exhortation to build character on the strength of the Lord Jesus, with the graces of Christian character for its adornment was most impressive.

Operation on a Soldier.

Dr. Zeglio, of Somerset street, will today perform an operation on Frank Vosseller, of this city, to remove a trouble attendant upon the growth of a fistula, which was removed while the patient was in the regular army in the south.

Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Addis, of Northampton, Mass., are the guests of Mr. Addis' brother Health Inspector William Addis, of this city. They went to New York to witness the naval parade Saturday, and on their return they will spend a few days here.

WANT TO BE MUSTERED OUT

VOLUNTEERS ANXIOUS TO GET HOME.

They Set Up a Howl Against the Proposition of Going to Cuba for Garrison Duty.

(Special to the Daily Press.)

Pompton Lake, August 22.—An item appearing in The Daily Press a few days ago in which it was stated that the Third and Fourth Regiments were to be mustered out but the men hoped to be retained to do police duty in Cuba, Porto Rico or Manila, caused an impromptu expression of the present feeling among the privates.

One of the Plainfield boys in Company H read the item to a number of comrades and he says "you should have heard the howl that they set up against it."

The private says that The Press has been misinformed as to the true facts. They want it distinctly understood they enlisted to fight the Spaniards, and not to do garrison duty. Now that the fighting is all over they want to be mustered out as soon as possible. One of the soldiers says that "the officers were not over anxious to go to the front while the fighting lasted, but now that it is over they are very anxious to stay in the service and they are responsible for all such reports as was printed in The Press recently."

HIS VISIT IS NOT WANTED.

ALLENTOWN'S BAD MAN IN THE TOILS.

A Convicted Burglar Found Wandering About in a Suspicious Manner by Patrolman Higgins.

William Cole, ex-convict, and altogether one of Allentown's most disreputable citizens, arrived in Plainfield last night on a freight train. This afternoon he departed on a passenger train at the expense of the city. He was also furnished with a chaperone to escort him to the limits of the county jail at Elizabeth where he will sojourn for a month.

Cole and his old partner, George Leslie, arrived in the eastern end of Plainfield. Cole says that they laid down under a tree and went to sleep. When they awoke, Cole says that he started off alone. He could not explain why he did it; guessed he must have been asleep.

The police have a theory of their own. Patrolman Higgins found Cole wandering about the city early this morning and locked him up. They believe that the two pals separated to look for a good "crib" to "crack." They are now watching for Leslie.

Basking Ridge Won.

The game between the Stirling and the Basking Ridge teams in the race for the pennant was played at Stirling Saturday afternoon and proved to be a rattling good game. Richard Rogers was in the box for the Basking Ridge aggregation and kept the Stirling batters guessing, allowing them only six hits, two of them being scratch hits. The features of the game were the two-base hit of Carman Sutphen, the home run of Dick Rogers, and the good fielding of Walsh. The score by innings was as follows:

	1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9
Basking Ridge	0	0	0	0	8	0	2	0	0	—10
Stirling	2	0	0	0	2	1	0	0	1	— 6

The standing of the league is as follows:

On Board the Oregon.

Theodore Roder, of this city, was among those who went to New York yesterday to see the battleships. He was aboard the Oregon, and was an eye-witness to the scene of where women extracted bristles from the pig "Blanco," who was taken from the Spanish ship Vizcaya, and kept them as souvenirs.

2,000 PEOPLE HEARD THE "SWAMP ANGEL."

A Great Crowd at the Camp Meeting Yesterday.

DR. WARNER WAS CAUSTIC.

NOVEL VIEW OF RELATIONS OF WHITE AND COLORED PEOPLE.

Dr. Warner, Who Once Ran For Governor of Alabama, Said That the White People Had Made the Colored People What They Are and If They Didn't Like It They'd Better Try Again.

Yesterday was a great day at the camp meeting grounds. The crowd was simply enormous and there were present several prominent speakers who proved a great attraction. It was by far the most successful day of the camp meeting. The attendance for the day numbered up into thousands and that of the evening must have been close to two thousand people.

The chief attraction of the day was the "Swamp Angel," Rev. Dr. Warner, secretary of the Church Extension Society. Dr. Warner was Republican candidate for governor in Alabama at the last election. Of all the speakers who have addressed the services in the grove this year, there was none more original or entertaining than Dr. Warner. He was not ashamed of his race; on the contrary, he was proud of it. He took a decidedly novel view of the relations of the white and colored people. In his address of the afternoon, he told the white folk that they had made the negroes what they were, and if they didn't like it they had better try again. Meanwhile they were responsible, having Christianized the negroes and taken away their little wooden gods of Africa, to see that the negroes had a place to worship. His appeal was answered by a large collection.

Rev. Dr. P. H. Huebert also spoke afternoon and evening and made two eloquent talks. He will deliver a lecture, "The Light Turned On," tomorrow evening in the grove.

One of the pleasing features of the services yesterday was the singing of Martin's Jubilee Singers, a double quartette arranged by the Martin brothers. The colored people knew many of the good old jubilee songs which they gave in delightful fashion. "Roll, Jordan, Roll," was a special favorite with the crowd and half the audience unconsciously joined the singers in swaying their bodies in time with the music.

It has been decided to continue the camp meeting another week owing to the rainy weather of the last week, which almost prevented any services being held. Next Sunday night the camp meeting will be closed after the fashion of those held in the south, when the worshippers all rise up and march around the camp singing.

A THREE WEEKS' CRUISE.

A Party of Plainfield Boys to Turn Jolly Jack Tars.

For the next three weeks Barnegat Bay will be the scene of the exertions of a party of young men from this city who will cruise in that vicinity. This morning at an early hour, Walter B. Rittenhouse, of East Sixth street; George A. Horne, of Willow avenue, and James A. Stafford, of Grandview avenue, left for Bay Head, N. J., where they will start in the yacht "Teal," for a three weeks' sail down Barnegat Bay and through the neighboring inlets.

The yacht is completely equipped for cruising and has a large cabin. The young men took with them a quantity of equipment, fishing tackle and provisions. They will be their own cooks and navigate their yacht without any help. They will make Beach Haven their headquarters and will there receive their mail.

The yacht is one of the speediest in the bay, winning in her class at the regetta last year. She is almost new. Besides the American flag which will float constantly from the mast head, the young men took along a number of pennants, the gifts of their fair friends, each of which bears suitable initials on it.

Henry B. Drake, of Duer street, and Charles B. Morse, of Franklin place, will join the cruising party at a later date and remain with them until the return, three weeks from now.

—Hugh McDonald's new house on Park avenue near Cedar brook, is rapidly nearing completion. When finished the new house will be quite an improvement to that neighborhood.

—One medical case was discharged from the hospital yesterday. At present seven patients are being treated at that institution.

CONQUERING HEROES

Patriots from Many States Greet Returning Warships.

A THRILLING SPECTACLE

The Conquerers Return After Five Months, Absence in Cuban Waters. The Booming of Cannon and Cheers from a Million Throats at Their Coming. Magnificent Ovation from Tompkinsville to Grant's Tomb.

New York, Aug. 22.—The conquering battleships have returned. Saturday morning, after an absence of five months in southern seas, the North Atlantic squadron again appeared off Tompkinsville, and how glorious was the homecoming. There was one stranger in the fleet whose proud achievements have made her name famous, the battleship Oregon, who came from her far off Pacific home to meet the enemy.

The six mighty battleships which had performed such wonders in naval warfare were apparently unscathed and looked as bright and new to the casual eye as when they sailed away, while the ships of the enemy lie shattered and wrecked off Cuban shores.

The Homeward Voyage.

Promptly at 10 o'clock on Sunday morning, August 14, the New York signalled to go to sea, and the Oregon, nearest the entrance, moved out. The Brooklyn followed, and as she passed the Badger, the Vixen, the Massachusetts and the Oregon, the men of those ships lined up on deck and cheered vociferously. When the New York passed the column on her way out to take the lead her band was playing "Ain't I Glad to Get Out of the Wilderness," and as the ships caught the air there was applause.

It was decided to run at eight knots an hour, the Indiana being incapable of sustaining a greater speed, and with the New York leading, the big ships headed eastward. At 6 o'clock Cape Maysi, on the extreme east of Cuba, was sighted, and at 7 o'clock the column of ships headed to the north. At 7.30 o'clock the land for whose freedom American bravery had been tested and American blood shed, slowly faded from view.

So the fleet that for nine long weeks had aided and watched the progress of freedom, took last leave of Cuban shores. Monday morning found the fleet in sight of some of the smaller islands, but away from Cuba and in the Windward passage.

The Indiana had developed a nine knot speed and greater progress than expected had been made.

On Tuesday the fleet passed in view of the island where Columbus made his first landing. The Indiana early in the day signalled that she had broken her starboard condenser, and after she had spent three hours fixing it, she had to go to work for a similar length of time on the port condenser. Despite the delays, one-half of the distance had been made at Wednesday noon, the rate of 200 miles a day having been accomplished. With the exception of the Indiana the fleet could have made eleven knots an hour, the maximum speed of the Iowa; and the Massachusetts, Oregon, New York and Brooklyn could have made thirteen knots, but Admiral Sampson decided to keep them all together.

Wednesday afternoon the Indiana got up a speed of nine knots, and from that time until Sandy Hook was reached the men in her boiler rooms and engine rooms did splendid work. The trip was by no means made a simple excursion home. Besides the daily routine, there were fire and collision drills on all the ships, and active work done in painting and repairing. The weather was fine, and rounding Cape Hatteras, usually so stormy, there was a calm, hot day.

Thursday and Friday were uneventful, but very pleasant days. Saturday, at 7 a. m., running by Scotland light, the navy yard tug brought out an order for the fleet to proceed up the North river to Grant's tomb, fire a salute and return to Tompkinsville to anchorage.

There was nothing studied or formal about the heroes as they came up the bay and along the classic Hudson to the tomb of the silent soldier and back again to the anchorage off Tompkinsville. It was such a spontaneous and tremendous outpouring of patriotic enthusiasm as the millions who shared in it will never forget. The time for making arrangements had been very brief, only three days having been given to the work.

The mayor of the city boarded the flagship New York and in a brief address to Rear Admiral Sampson expressed, so far as words could express a feeling so intense, the thanks of the country for the skill and devotion of her sailors. The rear admiral responded briefly, and the warships, which had never come to anchor, continued slowly up the Hudson river until they came opposite the granite pile within which sleeps an immortal of the nation. Here the guns of every ship, fresh from the victories but just now accomplished, belched forth the national salute to the hero of battlefields over which the tangle of thirty years and more springs heavy and thick. Then, slowly and majestically, the ships returned to their anchorage off Tompkinsville. That was all, but a nation's heart beat was behind it.

It was such a celebration as New York, and, indeed, this country had never seen. It was not so much the sight of the ships themselves that induced profound emotion among the multitudes who saw and cheered them as the thought of what they had done and what they left behind them on the shores of Cuba. It was New York's first opportunity in many, many years, to welcome its returning and victorious champions at sea, and the heart of the city, and through it the heart of the nation, was stirred beyond words. New York has before now welcomed her returning soldiers in royal style, but on Saturday there came into her harbor a fleet fresh from the performance of glorious deeds, the like of which, in many points, the world has never seen before. That is the principal reason that Saturday will not be forgotten.

The day was perfect. There was just the least suggestion of autumn in the air. The sun shone brightly all the morning. The heat was tempered by a gentle breeze. There were no serious accidents. The programme was carried through exactly as scheduled, and nobody was debarred from a view of the memorable spectacle, while through the veins of every man, woman and child who loves a hero (and who does not?) the blood leaped and bounded like a bloodhound in leash. Why shouldn't it have been a great day?

It would be interesting to know just how many people saw the returning warships as they steamed up the bay and up the Hudson river. There must have been millions of them. And yet, tremendous as the multitude, little uncomfortable crowding. This is doubtless accounted for by the great length of the naval parade. Staten Islanders could see the ships without coming to Manhattan. Thousands of Broklynites were equally fortunate. From the Jersey shore the splendid spectacle was equally as visible as from the western shore of Manhattan island. Riverside park was thrown open, and it is estimated that 150,000 persons were accommodated on its grassy slopes.

On the water, however, there was such a gathering of craft of all sorts that it is perfectly safe to say that its like has never been seen here before. From the moment the hull of the flagship New York was discovered looming up away down through the Narrows, until long after the entire fleet dropped anchor off Staten Island in the afternoon, the harbor and the rivers were alive with craft of all sorts, sizes and descriptions, from mudscows to trans-Atlantic liners.

Thirteen Guns for Sampson.

A fleet of tugs and steam yachts scudded down through the Narrows to escort the fleet, and with this mosquito convoy the big fellows ploughed grandly along at the speed of eight knots, which speed they held all the way to Claremont. Fort Hamilton and Fort Wadsworth began the day's saluting with thirteen guns for Rear Admiral Sampson. When the Narrows were passed, the battleship Texas, flying the brand new flag of Commodore Philip, sounded her salute of thirteen guns, and from the flagship New York came the answer of eleven guns for the newly made commodore, so long known to his worshipping crew as Captain Jack Philip.

The steamer Glen Island, bearing the mayor and the reception committee, came up about this time, and Mayor Van Wyck and a special committee were transferred on the police boat Patrol to the flagship, where the mayor delivered the address of welcome and Rear Admiral Sampson made his response. Meanwhile, the flagship had signalled to the Texas to fall in line at the rear, and the order was obeyed. The warships proceeded steadily without coming to anchor at any time. First came the flagship New York, flying the Stars and Stripes, as, indeed, did every vessel in the line, and from the mainmast the broad blue flag of the rear admiral, with its two white stars. Rear Admiral Sampson himself stood upon the bridge. Then came the battleship Iowa, and upon her bridge the grim-faced officer who is known and admired throughout the country, as Fighting Bob Evans, could be plainly seen. Following her came the Indiana, then the Brooklyn, the flagship of Rear Admiral Schley. No rear admiral's flag was flying, as according to naval etiquette, when two flag officers of equal rank meet the flag of the senior is the only one shown. The Brooklyn loomed high above the water, and her graceful lines and three tall stacks caught every eye. The battleship Massachusetts followed closely, and then came the Oregon, which with the Brooklyn ran down the fleet and formidable Cristobal Colon, and drove her a wreck upon the southern shore of Cuba. The Oregon attracted especial attention, not only on account of the wonderful record made on her trip around Cape Horn and in the battle of Santiago, but because she had never before entered the port of New York. The Texas, whose captain, now Commodore Philip, amid the roar of battle and in the presence of death uttered the memorable words: "Don't cheer, the poor devils are dying," brought up the rear.

In a Maze of Pleasure Craft.

The entire fleet was now so surrounded by a seemingly inextricable mass of tugs, rowboats, sailboats, steam yachts and excursion steamers that it was difficult to see it well at any great distance. At the same time the air was full of one great, gorgeous and hilarious medley of sound. On nearly every steamer was a band. "The Star Spangled Banner" was the only thing played, but nobody excepting those persons who stood next the players could tell what was being played. Every steam whistle on the bay opened up its brazen throat in one long whoop of delirious joy and exultation. So tremendous was the racket that when Castle William let go its salute as the New York came abreast of the fort, puffs of smoke were the only things that told folks ashore that the salute was being fired. It was a pantomime salute. But if the ears were filled to overflowing with the gallant sound, the eyes could not appreciate at once the scene. In the center was the long line of slowly moving warships, the graceful cruisers and the low lying and deadly battleships, all of them clad in their grey war paint and looking much as they did when they went into action on that fateful third of July. None of the warships bore any decorations other than the Stars and Stripes, the signal flags and the rear admiral's and commodore's flags. They looked grim and menacing, even within the shores they had gone forth to defend.

Andree Not Heard from in Alaska.

Victoria, B. C., Aug. 20.—Swedish Consul Ward has received a letter from Dr. Nordenstjold at Dawson, informing him of his intended return alone. The other members of the party will remain two years longer, if necessary. There is no foundation for the story that Andree had been heard from.

London's Lord Mayor Not Coming.

London, Aug. 22.—The contemplated visit to the United States of the lord mayor of London, Lieutenant Colonel Horatio David Davies, which had already been postponed, is definitely abandoned owing to the continued illness of the lady mayoress.

The undersigned, having been appointed a commission to determine the details of the capitulation of the city and defences of Manila and its suburbs and the Spanish forces stationed therein, in accordance with agreement entered into the previous day by Major General Wesley Merritt, U. First—The Spanish troops, European and native, capitulate with the city and defences with all honors of war, depositing their arms in the places designated by the authorities of the United States, remaining in the quarters designated and under the orders of their officers, and subject to the control of the aforesaid United States authorities until the conclusion of a treaty of peace between the two belligerent nations. All persons included in the capitulation remain at liberty, the officers remaining in their respective homes, which shall be respected as long as they observe the regulations prescribed for their government and the laws in force.

Second—Officers shall retain their side arms, horses and private property. All public horses and public property of all kinds shall be turned over to staff officers designated by the United States.

Third—Complete returns in duplicate of men by organizations and full lists of public property and stores shall be rendered to the United States within ten days from this date.

Fourth—All questions relating to the repatriation of the officers and men of the Spanish forces and of their families and of the expenses which said repatriation may occasion shall be referred to the government of the United States at Washington. Spanish families may leave Manila at any time convenient to them. The return of the arms surrendered by the Spanish forces shall take place when they evacuate the city and when the Spanish army evacuates Cuba.

Fifth—Officers and men included in the capitulation shall be supplied by the United States according to their rank with rations and necessary aid as though they were prisoners of war until the conclusion of a treaty of peace between the United States and Spain. All the funds of the Spanish treasury and all other public funds shall be turned over to the authorities of the United States.

Sixth—This city, its inhabitants, its churches, its educational establishments and its private property of all description are placed under the special safeguard of the faith and honor of the American army.

MERRITT.

No News from Dewey.

Acting Secretary Allen, after the Merritt dispatches were received said that nothing had come from Admiral Dewey. It is supposed that a merchant ship brought the Merritt dispatches from Manila to Hong Kong, as the navy department is not aware of the arrival at Hong Kong of a dispatch boat.

There is considerable difference of opinion as to the axact significance of the terms of capitulation as cabled by General Merritt, but the best opinion obtainable construed the language to embrace all Spanish possessions in the Philippines and not Manila alone.

While the preamble specifically cites the functions of the commission to be to determine the details of the capitulation of the city and defences of Manila, and its suburbs, and the Spanish forces stationed therein, it is pointed out that the word "suburb" is an elastic expression, and the language of article 1, stating that the Spanish troops, both the European and the native, capitulate "with" the city and defences, goes to emphasize this construction.

This is the view expressed by war officials and considered in this light goes to confirm the press dispatches stating the capitulation involves the whole Philippines. One unusual provision is embraced in the reference to the return of surrendered arms, the article providing for the return when the Spanish evacuate or the American army evacuate.

In Doubt About Dewey's Ships.

San Francisco, Aug. 22.—A dispatch from Hong Kong says: "Consul General Wildman has requested of the Hong Kong authorities permission for the ships of the American fleet now at Manila to be allowed to dock and repair here. The question presents such serious complications that it had to be submitted to the British home government for an answer. Meanwhile the harbor police ordered the gunboat Zafiro, which arrived here with dispatches from General Merritt and Admiral Dewey, to leave British waters within twenty-four hours. The government is much distressed at the situation."

We are running a laundry with the most improved methods and appliances. We use pure water and good soap. We are using two things that are not commonly used in laundries—care and intelligence. If you have found a laundry that pleases you perfectly, we have nothing to say to you. If you have any reason to be dissatisfied, we would like to give you a practical demonstration of our way of running a laundry.
Tell us where and when to call for your work, when you want it delivered and let us know any particular thing that you would like to have done with it.
We want you to understand that we are running this laundry for you, and that your wishes are to be regarded in every particular.
We also have just completed arrangements for doing family washing in a satisfactory manner by the dozen or week. Please call at office for further information.

The Clearing Sale of Shirt Waists.

With the close of July comes the greatest price-cutting—the most attractive values ever offered. The remaining stock is divided into two lots, 49c. and 75c., former prices ranged from 75c to $1.50. There's not 200 waists in the entire assortment, so we advise an early call for the best selection.

Sailor Hats and Untrimmed Hats 49c.

This means that each and every hat, irrespective of former price, will be 49c. Of especial interest should the price be, as none have been less than 75c, and the styles offered are all of this season's production.

Men's Negligee Shirts 59c.

Sounds cheap, but the hundred or more shirts that go on sale have been selling at 75c., 85c. and $1. The patterns are all new and desirable, the kind that you would like. Clearing time is here, and the new price, 59c., will be the means of their quick disposal.

Men's Summer Underwear 20c.

Nearly 600 pieces gauze underwear to be 20c. This is ordinarily the best 25c underwear sold, but 20c will be the clearing price.

SAGASTA'S INTERVIEW DISLIKED.

The President's Instructions to the Peace Commission Will Be Clear Cut.

Washington, D. C., Aug. 22.—The secretary of state spent Saturday at the White House with the president. The published interview with Premier Sagasta, in which the latter is reported to have stated that the present condition of affairs between this country and Spain is "not peace, but a suspension of hostilities," and the remarkable dispatch from Havana, reporting six questions that the Spanish commission expects to discuss with our military commission, formed the principal theme of conversation between the president and secretary.

These questions suggested from Havana as a basis of discussion are considered by the administration as being too ridiculous for serious consideration, namely, "as to the form of government to be established in Cuba."

A prominent official of the state department in referring to this matter said: "Our commission goes to Havana for the purpose of arranging for the evacuation of the island of Cuba by Spanish troops and volunteers, for the establishment by the United States in its own way of a stable government for the island when the Spaniards have departed.

"This in brief is the work that the commissioner has laid out for it. Simply this and nothing more, and the men whom the president has appointed to represent him in Cuba and Porto Rico will see to it that his wishes are carried out on this line.

"It is well to bear in mind, however, in this connection, that orders have been issued to the commandant of the Brooklyn navy yard to rush forward without delay the work of repainting and putting in first class condition the four great battleships, Iowa, Massachusetts, Indiana and Oregon. The orders are explicit. All other work upon smaller craft is to be suspended and nothing is to interfere with the work on the battleships. The administration does not intend to be caught napping, and those four mighty war craft are to be ready in short order for any emergency that may arise. It is a polite notice to Spain that if she wants any more of the same sort that she has already received we will be ready to give her a second installment of Manila and Santiago."

SPAIN'S PEACE COMMISSION.

Names of Men Who Will Serve on the Important Board Announced.

London, Aug. 22.—The peace commission will be composed of Senor Leon y Castillo, the Spanish ambassador to France; Senors Moret and Merry del Val and General Cervera.

London, Aug. 22.—The Madrid correspondent of the Sunday Times says: The country is still without official news of what is happening in the colonies. The only intelligence the public receives is contained in a few meagre press telegrams which have been allowed to pass the censorship.

Great surprise and indignation have been produced by the news of the attack upon and fall of Manila. Nothing is known as to the conditions that led to the surrender of the town. Agitation is growing among the independent classes without distinction of politics.

Serious rumors concerning Cuba are current, and cablegrams are said to have been received from General Blanco saying he fears the volunteers will incite the Spanish and Cuban population to revolt against the peace conditions.

The battleship Pelayo and the armored cruiser Emperador Carlos V have been ordered to cruise along the northern coast for a time, landing the Santiago troops at Vigo and Santander. The evacuation of Porto Rico will begin in September, but it is not expected that the embarkation of the Cuban troops will be commenced before December.

Making Manila Hemp.

Every engineer knows what Manila hemp is, but few are aware that it is the product of a species of banana, which is cultivated in certain localities in the Philippine Islands. The plant, called by the natves "abaca," throws up a cluster of sheathing leaf stalks to a height of 20 or 30 feet, which spread out at the top into a crown of huge, undivided leaves. When it is three years old, it is cut down, and the stalks are torn into strips. These strips, while still fresh, are drawn between a knife and a wooden block, and the soft cellulose matter is removed. The fiber is then hung up to dry in the open air until it is fit for use. Each stalk gives about a pound of fiber, and two natives will turn out about 25 pounds a day. The inside fiber, which is thin and weak, is used by the natives for making articles of dress. The familiar Manila rope is made from the fiber of the outer layer, which is hard and strong. The whole supply of Manila hemp practically comes from the Philippines, and the United States consumes 41 per cent of it. Last year this country took 417,473 bales out of the 825,020 bales exported, Great Britain coming next with 385,182 bales. The continent of Europe took 22,373 bales.

All Was Not Well at Eight Bells.

Dr. Field, who was the examining surgeon for the Naval Reserves while the recruiting was being done in New Orleans, had many a good story to tell of recruits in the service. A good one he tells is of a German who was walking his post and calling the hours as is required. He called "seven bells and all's vell." The next call, however, was a variation. It was: "Eight bells and all is not vell; I haf droppit my musket oferboard.—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

Contented as It Is.

"I regret that I lost my temper, this morning, Harry," she said.

"I don't," he replied sweetly, "provided you never find it again."—Philadelphia North American.

FOUR HUNDRED MILLIONS.

The Expenses Less Than at First Estimated.

Washington, D. C., Aug. 22.—Expenses of the war against Spain will prove to be considerably less than is generally supposed and will not approximate the billion dollar mark.

"When the accounts made necessary by the war between the United States and Spain are settled," said Assistant Secretary Vanderlip of the treasury department, "it will be found that the war has cost us a great deal less than many people have figured it would. All talk about war expenses reaching a billion dollars are the veriest nonsense and cannot be substantiated either by facts or figures. It is more likely, however, that the expenses by the treasury department on account of the war with Spain will be inside the four hundred millions, which was set apart by Congress for carrying on the war to the end of the present year. Indeed, there is a probability that even this sum will not be found necessary in the event of peace being finally declared.

"Another matter to be taken into account is that the money appropriated by Congress has been a great benefit to the country in doubling the number of vessels in the navy as well as materially improving and strengthening the coast defences of the United States Expenses must necessarily run on for a while about as heavy as though the war were actually in progress, because we cannot disband the army at a moment's notice inasmuch as we do not know that the war is absolutely at an end. All that we have to bank upon is the signing of the protocol, but that is by no means a treaty of peace. Consequently we must be prepared for any emergency that may arise while negotiations are pending.

"I should say that expenditures on account of the army and navy will be as great until the first of October, at least, as if the war was actually in progress, although there may not be much powder burnt in the meantime. One of the greatest items of expense during the present war has been for ammunition, particularly for the navy, which shot away a good many dollars in those battles and bombardments in which it was engaged. When the war broke out we were very poorly provided with ammunition of every kind, and it was necessary to buy large quantities and pay good prices for them. Of course there is a great deal of ammunition that has been ordered which may not be used, but it must be paid for even if it is only carried in stock. Next to ammunition I would say the question of transporting forces and supplies has been one of the most costly features of the war, and this item of expenditure is likely to be greatly augmented when the troops are mustered out and transported to their homes in the various cities.

Frightful Railroad Wreck.

Sharon, Mass., Aug 22.—A local train from Providence, on the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad, due in Boston at 7.45 p. m., last evening, while standing at the depot was wrecked by an express train from New Bedford, and it is reported that between 30 and 40 persons were killed, besides many injured.

Canton, Mass., Aug. 22.—Word was received here at 7.30 last night of a fearful wreck at Sharon, on the N. Y., N. H. and H. road and an urgent request was made for physicians and undertakers' wagons. All the physicians in town, as well as three undertakers and their wagons, were immediately dispatched to the scene. The surrounding country has been aroused and a large quantity of sheets, bedding and rude hospital supplies were sent from this town to Sharon. The details of the accident are not yet known, but it is believed to have been one of the worst that has ever occurred in this state.

It is said that the train due at Sharon at 7 o'clock was 20 minutes late, and while standing at the depot was crashed into by the express. The rear end collision has almost completely wrecked both trains.

Direct from Manila.

Manila, Aug. 21, 12.40 p. m.—The cable that was cut by Admiral Dewey shortly after his arrival here has been repaired and Manila is now in direct communication with the outside world.

The city remains quiet. The American officers are at present busily engaged in getting a government established. There has been considerable delay owing to the fact that it was necessary to get further instructions from Washington.

General MacArthur has been appointed military commandant of the walled city.

Forty Six Killed at Manila.

Hong Kong, Aug. 22.—A dispatch from Manila, dated August 18, says the total number of killed on the American side during the attack upon and capture of Manila was 46 and wounded about 100. The Spanish losses were 200 killed and 400 wounded. The fire of the Americans did practically no damage to the town or to the non-combatants. The Americans had considerable difficulty in keeping the insurgents out of the city, only admitting those who were without weapons.

Spain Wants Our Captives.

Washington, D. C., Aug. 22.—Military authorities are surprised to learn that the Spanish government has notified the secretary of the navy that it was willing to transport the Spanish prisoners of war back to Spain provided they were unconditionally released. Assistant Secretary of the Navy Allen says that our government has no intention of agreeing to any such proposition; that we will be willing to release the Spanish prisoners under parole, but under no other condition.

Morocco's Sultan Not Dead.

Tangier, Aug. 21.—The Sherifian foreign office declares that there is no foundation for the report of the death of Mulai-Abd-el-Aziz, the sultan of Morocco, who it was rumored a week ago had died at Marrakosh.

Lawton Wants Cavalry.

Washington, Aug. 22.—It is announced at the war department that General Lawton has requested that a detachment of cavalry be sent to him in the island of Cuba.

MARCHING WITH MILES

Troops Well and the General Well Pleased With Affairs.

COMMISSION TO MEET SOON

Great Indignation Against Spaniards for Crimes and Outrages Against Natives of Porto Rico. A War of Retaliation Threatened. A Town Burned by the Natives.

Ponce, August 21.—General Miles returned to his headquarters here Saturday. He was greatly pleased by the appearance of the troops at the front. He witnessed target practice by the soldiers and was present at a flag raising at General Wilson's camp this morning, which was accompanied by music and cheers.

While at the front General Miles communicated with General Macias regarding the depredations committed between the lines. General Macias replied courteously and they jointly agreed to apprehend the offenders near their respective lines. General Macias said the Spanish troops would begin retiring shortly.

The commission for Porto Rico will meet as soon as General Gordon can reach here. It is believed that the existing turmoil will cease upon the evacuation of the island by the Spanish troops.

Alarming reports of threatened outrages continue to pour in, but none of them was confirmed.

The heavens in the direction of Yacuo and Juana Diaz appeared to be ablaze last night, and half a dozen big fires have been reported, but no details have been received. The fires were probably the work of natives engaged in destroying Spanish property.

A small riot occurred here Saturday adjoining General Miles's headquarters, but the disturbance was quickly quelled, Colonel Clouse of Gen. Miles's staff dispersing a howling mob of Spaniards by flourishing his revolver.

A war of retaliation against the Spanish residents of the island within the American lines is threatened—retaliation for the horrible outrages committed by the Spanish troops at Ciales, where over eighty persons are said to have been macheted. The revolting details of the butchery of men and women and nameless mutilations have stirred a cry for vengeance.

Early this morning the natives burned the town of Cota, seven miles from here. The Spanish residents fled for their lives. Throughout the surrounding country the Spaniards are terror stricken and are appealing to the Americans for protection.

The shops kept by the Spaniards here, which were opened after the signing of the protocol, have been closed again through fear of the rioters.

Yesterdays edition of two papers which hysterically demanded vengeance and the expulsion of all Spanish born residents was suppressed by the military authorities, who are doing all that it is in their power to do to allay the fears of the Spanish inhabitants.

Captain Evans, the provost marshal, with two companies of the Nineteenth infantry at his command, has doubled the provost guard, but the military have difficulty in preventing individual cases of persecution.

The natives who are fomenting the trouble are of the lowest class and many of them are criminals. Over 25 of the ringleaders in the disturbances have been arrested.

CONDITIONS AT SANTIAGO.

Lighter Loaded With Troops Sinks in the Bay.

Santiago de Cuba, Aug. 20.—This afternoon the steam lighter Laura struck a rock near the steel pier and sank in ten feet of water. At the time of the accident she had on board 630 men of the Third Michigan regiment, who were on their way to the transport Harvard. No lives were lost, but an exciting scramble for the shore took place, in which many of the men fell in the shallow water.

The Harvard will leave to-morrow. The cruiser Prairie arrived this afternoon and will be used as a transport.

General Shafter and the sick soldiers who are under the care of physicians, will leave on Monday on the transport Mexico.

The civil authorities of San Luis, the western terminus of the railroad, report acts of rowdyism and theft, and the insulting of women by members of the battalion of the Eighth Illinois regiment (colored), which is stationed there. The people assert that all discipline is ignored. The chief offenders have been imprisoned.

The embarkation of the Spanish troops at Santiago will be finished tomorrow.

PRINCE BISMARCK'S WILL.

His Fortune Said to Be 20,000,000 Marks

Berlin, Aug. 22.—A Dantzic paper publishes an outline of Prince Bismarck's will.

The paper asserts that the estate amounts to 20,000,000 marks, although it was sworn to at 3,000,000 marks.

Count William Bismarck inherits the Pomeranian estate, with the exception of Rhinefeld, which Prince Herbert Bismarck gets.

Prince Herbert also receives the valuables deposited in the Bleichroders bank, estimated at 1,000,000 marks, for which he pays Count William 300,000 marks.

Countess Von Rantzau receives 900,000 marks, and each of Count William's three daughters gets 100,000 marks.

First Mail Sent to Spain.

New York, Aug. 22.—The French line steamer La Normandie, which sailed from her pier at the foot of Morton street at ten o'clock Saturday, carried the first mail to leave this country for Spain since the formal declaration of war. There were two sacks of letters and one sack of papers for Madrid, two sacks of letters and one sack of papers for Barcelona and three sacks of letters and one sack of papers for the north of Spain.

Subscribers leaving the city for the summer season can have The Daily Press sent to their new address by notifying the buisness office. The address will be changed as often as desired. "Home news" will prove most interesting while you are away.

Down With The Tramp.

Civil government having failed to solve the problem of driving the tramp from off the face of the earth, or even certain sections of it, the women of New Jersey have undertaken the job. Nutley is the scene of the endeavor. and the work of eliminating the tramp from the floating population of that town is represented in the imposing title of the Ladies' Home Protective Association. It is a well-known fact that the genus hobo depends for existence upon his ability to impress the housewife with a pitiable tale of woe and a subsequent "hand-out" of cold victuals. Deprived of that, the tramp would become a rare specimen of the American citizen.

The Nutley women have issued a circular in which attention is called to the large number of idle men who are to be seen in the township. The circular says that while the men are apparently in quest of food and clothing, their real object is to steal whatever they can.

In order to discourage the strangers, the members of the society have agreed not to feed or give clothing of any kind or allow it to be given at their doors, unless the applicant is recommended by some responsible person living in Essex county. Each member also agrees to notify as far as possible other members of the association and the proper authorities whenever the tramps solicit food or clothing at their doors. The members are confident of ridding the township of the tramp nuisance.

Plainfield for Voorhees.

It doesn't require a very close observer of political affairs to see that Plainfield Republicans are to a man in favor of Foster Voorhees being the nominee for Governor at the approaching State convention.

Naturally, being a Union county man, the Acting-Governor and nominal Senator has a strong pull on the friendship and support of the G. O. P. in Plainfield for sectional reasons alone, but beyond that no one can gainsay the statement that Voorhees is far and above any other Republican politician in personal popularity in this city.

Of course, the chance of making Mayor Fisk State Senator to succeed Voorhees in the Legislature has its element of strength in the support of Voorhees, but even without any direct honor coming to Plainfield as a result of the latter's nomination for the high office it is almost certain that he would be the most popular candidate for Plainfielders.

The Worth of a Child's Life.

The Rhadamanthus of a New Jersey court, Judge Gummere, has been made the target of widespread criticism, not to say attack, on account of the charge he gave in a recent litigation. The case was a trial for damages against a railway company, and the matter at issue was the valuation of a child's life. The judge declared to the jury that, according to the law, damages could only be assessed on the basis of the actual financial damage the loss of the child had been to the father, not on any punitive grounds nor yet by any sentimental measure. Of course there can be no absolute justice in such a case, and the best possible is only a proximate rule. Many children remain expense to their parents rather than advantage, viewed as a matter of arithmetic. Even in the case of working children the ameliorated factory laws have greatly reduced the financial aid which they give to the family. In the affair referred to Judge Gummere decided that the jurors would be justified in valuing that assistance at $1.

The torrent of popular animadversion appears to have been misdirected. It should have been aimed against the law, not the interpreter; the legislature, not the judge. If such matters are made questions of court assessment, sentiment must be completely banished from any consideration in balancing the scales of justice. From the standpoint of sentiment no money damages could possibly compensate a parent. Wounds to the affections, amounting sometimes almost to heartbreak, cannot be measured in terms of gold and silver. In going to any court for compensation the parent deliberately puts himself out of the realm of emotion and sentiment and confesses that he remits for the advantage of the defendant any influences flowing from these powerful springs. When he chooses dollars and cents as the measure of value, he defines the sole basis from which the problem must be treated. This thought appears to have been confused in the minds of many who have been made indignant by the words of Judge Gummere's charge. It should not be stigmatized as the measure of the value of a child's life. It is the answer which the cold blooded law gives to those who seek to draw balm from it in a cold blooded way.

An Odd Situation.

The hostility of the English and Dutch in South Africa has bred many an interesting imbroglio, in some cases leading to battle and bloodshed. But the dilemma now agitating Cape politics, while it does not involve war with the Boer republic, is a queer complication, full of important consequences to the whole future of South Africa. It is not dissimilar in its elements to that political condition of suffrage power existing in America before the civil war which gave a preponderance to the south in congress for so many years by making the slave population the basis for an increased representation.

As things now stand in the Cape Colony it takes about half as many votes to elect a representative to parliament in a Dutch district as it does in an English district. When the division of seats was made, it was a fair one, but as the rural districts, where the Boers have the majority, have grown slowly and the towns and cities, where the English are ascendant, have advanced in wealth and population rapidly the just ratio has been completely upset. The Boers, who always vote against English interests and in sympathy with the wishes of their fellow Dutchmen in the neighboring republics, have so far fought successfully against a redistribution of seats. The forthcoming election will probably settle the question for the English side, but create a most passionate ill feeling, which may lead to dangerous consequences. The same anomaly as to distribution of political power exists even today in some of our own states in America. For instance, a rural hamlet in Vermont with seven voters sends as many representatives to the legislature as does Rutland or Montpelier, both goodly cities.

"Love makes time pass, and time makes love pass," says a satirical proverb. In the case of conjugal love, when, if it has not passed, it has become threadbare, there is nothing to put gloss and nap on it so quickly as occasional judicious absence. It is consistent with the spirit of Hamlet's reflection on the callousness of the gravedigger, "The hand of little employment hath the daintier sense."

Massachusetts has snubbed Canada. The Boston fathers have raked up a statute under which the Highland cadets can only join the coming Scottish gathering at the Hub by dispensing with broadsword and targe and musket. This is only tit for tat. A year or two since the Montreal authorities perpetrated a similar prohibition at the expense of a company of American militiamen.

Sarah Bernhardt is about to visit India at the invitation of a prominent native potentate, where she hopes to do some tiger hunting. Should "Stripes" become the hunter instead of the hunted, as he sometimes does, he will have a fatter tidbit than the divine Sarah would have proved when a French caricaturist dubbed a picture of the actress and her lapdog "A dog watching a bone."

WHAT THE SHEARS FIND.

Editorial Comment From Other Papers of Interest in Plainfield.

No one is criticizing the engineers who will have charge of the proposed boulevard. Time enough yet. But it might be well if they would exercise that same conservatism and respect for public sentiment that characterized the engineer of the county roads, F. A Dunham. Every engineer isn't as careful as he was; and care is needed.—Westfield Republican.

* * * *

Plainfield's Council is flying in the face of public sentiment by trying to balk the progress of the Kean trolley line across Union county. The people want this road, and it were well if the Plainfield Aldermen thoroughly understood this fact.—New York Press.

PASSING COMMENT.

Things that Are Not Exactly News but Just as Interesting.

A down east editor has drawn up some game laws which he wants adopted. The following is a summary: Book agents may be shot from October to Sept. 2; spring poets from March 1 to June 1; scandal-mongers from April 1 to Feb. 1; umbrella borrowers from Aug. 1 to Nov. 1 and Feb. 1 to May 1, while every man who accepts a newspaper two years and upon being presented with his bill says: "I never ordered it," may be taken on the spot without reserve or relief and buried face downward in dust and ashes.

THEATRICAL.

Current Dramatic Attractions That Plainfielders Can Witness.

"The Black Patti Troubadors" arrived here this morning and will rehearse in Music Hall until their performance Wednesday evening. Mme. Sisiretta Jones, known to the world as "Black Patti," will stop at the Revere House.

* * * *

The highest tokens of approval mark the performances of "Black Patti's Troubadours." The company has met with a royal public reception wherever it has appeared, and its performances are said to be a revelation. The stage idea is a very happy and novel one. In the first part rollicking fun accompanied by up-to-date singing, dancing prevails, and in the operatic finale "Black Patti" lends her glorious voice in the rendition of one of the most attractive musical schemes ever offered to a public. This embraces reminiscences from "Faust," "Carmen," "Trovotore," "Bohemian Girl," "Maritana,'" "Daughter of the Regiment," Lucia," "Rigoletto" and "Tar and Tar-Tar." It is a happy medley of the best selections of the grand and comic opera magnificently sung by fifty artists, clothed in beautiful costumes and surrounded with appropriate stage effects. The company will appear in Music Hall Wednesday night.

Views of the Naval Parade.

There was a host of photographers, both professional and amateur, on the Hudson river and in New York bay Saturday. Of all the sets of photographs there obtained, it would be difficult to obtain a nicer one that the views taken by Eugene Richard. He was stationed on the pilot house of a large steamer where he had an uninterrupted view of all the warships and obtained fine photographs of them all.

PLAINS AND FANWOOD.

(Special Correspondence of The Daily Press.)

Scotch Plains, August 22.—Two Newarkers had a war of words on the corner of Westfield and Park avenues last evening, about 6:45 o'clock. Both were drunk and the trouble was caused by an argument as to who was the driver. One claimed he was more able to drive because he was not as drunk as his friend. The friend took this as an insult and insisted upon going home in the train His companion finally prevailed upon him to ride and the row was over, but not until the neighbors had heard some choice language. If Scotch Plains had a lockup the town's people would not be obliged to endure so many free fights, as a lockup would act as a check and one night in the cooler would make such people give Scotch Plains a wide berth.

WESTFIELD.

(Special Correspondence of The Press.)

Westfield, August 23.—The Westfield base ball team was in good trim on Saturday and for the second time this season defeated the team from the Riverside F. C., of Newark. The visitors put up a fine game but the home players were too much for them and won by a score of 11 to 3. The Westfield team was strengthened by Lederer, of Plainfield, at second base and Stimets, of Woodbridge, at short stop. Both played in excellent form and took every ball that came their way. McLarty, of Plainfield, was in the box and he struck out seven men and allowed only four safe hits to the Newarkers.

WARSHIPS REPAIRED

THE WORK OF FIXING THEM UP DONE "WHILE YOU WAIT."

The Vulcan Is A Floating Machine Shop, Fully Equipped To Repair Any Damage Done to Sampson's Fleet—Carries Tools and Machinery Worth $300,000.

The queerest vessel in the United States navy, if not, indeed, the queerest afloat, is the aptly named Vulcan. She is literally a floating machine shop, thoroughly equipped with all the tools and appliances to be found in any shop ashore where the work of repairing machinery to vessels is done. She may not win as much popular glory as her armed sisters, she may not present so gay an appearance, and she may not do such deeds of daring, but she has her mission to fulfil, and she will not be found wanting.

The real heroes of war are not always to be found on the quarterdeck. Did you ever think of the men buried away down in the stifling bowels of the ship, the men who see nothing of the battle, but upon whose efforts the action of the ship entirely depends? That's the way it is with the Vulcan. Her labors will probably be unpraised and unsung, but they will be none the less valuable for all that.

Her mission is to remain with the fleet and repair any damage that may be done to the other vessels. For this work she is thoroughly prepared. Her equipment includes nearly a hundred tons of tools and machinery valued at $300,000.

If you have ever visited a naval repair shop and can imagine the scene transferred to shipboard, you can get a fairly good idea of what the Vulcan looks like. There are plate bending rolls and punching and shearing machines that can bite through an inch of solid steel. There are lathes for turning castings of nearly any size, there are planers, drills and milling machines of compass enough to meet almost any demand, and there are blowers to supply the several forges and to draw foul air from between decks and send it through the ventilators above. She can even make small rapid fire guns.

There are pipe cutters, bolt cutters, forges and grindstones, and a good sized cupola for the melting of sufficient metal to make a heavy casting. A supplemental electric plant has given excellent lighting facilities throughout the ship, but principally in the workshops situated on what is termed the third deck.

There are also evaporators and distillers of a capacity equal to a daily output of quite ten thousand gallons of water, several times more than the needs of the Vulcan could demand. She has two steam cranes, with ten foot arms that will lead to the hoisting drums amidships and to the cranes to the hatches. These cranes are specially designed for removing weights from the men-of-war and for transferring machinery to the disabled ships. And, lastly, there is a magnificent little foundry for manufacturing castings up to a certain size.

Of course, skilled men are required to perform the work of repairing machinery, and the best machinists and mechanics in the service have been assigned to the Vulcan to perform the work for which it has been fitted out, and this brings to light a condition of affairs quite as unique as is the ship herself. There is no mechanical plant in the country that admits of such a variety of accomplishments as this one. The variety of departments gives the Vulcan more chief petty officers than any other ship known. A dozen such officers is the usual complement for a war ship, but the Vulcan, out of her entire crew of two hundred men, has ninety-two men who have the right to wear double breasted short coats and officer's caps.

No vessel that has yet started out for war has carried such a large complement of well-trained and educated men. The repair ship has on board some of the finest engineers in the country, and among the number is a Providence millionaire and a college professor, who entered the service of their country as soon as it was known that the United States was to have a floating machine shop.

Chief machinists, expert boilermakers, moulders, brass finishers and electricians; copper-smiths, carpenters, joiners, ship-wrights, plumbers—all have the rating of first class petty officers. The Vulcan's captain is Lieutenant Commander Ira Harris who has been general manager of the Chicago Drop Forge and Foundry Company, and of like concerns in Kansas and Cleveland, O.

The chief engineers are Gardiner Sims, the head of the Armington & Sims Engine Works, of Providence, R. I., who has thirty of his best mechanics aboard, and Professor Aldrich, of the University of West Virginia, one of the best electrical experts of the country. Frederick C. Neilson, son of Medical Inspector John L. Neilson, United States senior medical officer at Charlestown, is an assistant engineer. The leading mechanics have quarters in the old passenger state rooms, and will live very comfortably.

Officially the Vulcan is described as an engineer's repair ship, but Engineer in Chief Melville, who was responsible for her purchase and transformation, sets the mind at rest as to her position in the navy by calling her a floating machine shop. The Vulcan was formerly the merchant steamer Chatham. Shortly before the war commenced Engineer in Chief Melville recommended to the department that two vessels be acquired which could be transformed into engineers' repair ships and attached to the North Atlantic and flying squadrons.

EQUIPPING THE ARMY MULE.

Packing Is a Science and the Man Who Is an Expert Can Make Money.

Most of the army mules in Cuba were fitted with the Mexican aparejo, which is to be preferred to the saddle with "tree and sawbuck."

It consists first of two or more thick felt blankets, folded large enough to nearly cover the mule from shoulder to rump. Over this is placed a huge pair of leather bags united by a broad band of the same material, the cavities stuffed with soft hay.

This is girthed to the mule by a cinch nearly a foot in width, which is drawn as tightly as possible by a strong man, pulling with both hands, and with a foot against the animal's ribs to give him a greater purchase. On each side of the spine the articles to be carried are placed and lashed by a rope about fifty feet in length, which has at one end a broad webbing belt to pass under the belly as was done with the others. Another "squeezing" is given and the rope is crossed in different directions over the load, tightened at every crossing, and finally fastened in a knot loosed by one pull.

"Packing" is a science, and as such commands good wages. I have known a "chief packer" to be paid a salary of $150 per month on the frontier, and his services were worth the money paid. The duty is taught to cavalrymen as part of their drill, and many of the soldiers become very expert at it. At a pack drill of the Ninth Cavalry a few days before it left Montana one company packed its mule in 1 minute and 54 seconds, and others were but little slower.

Thirty mules generally constitute a "train," and are managed by three men. They are trained to follow a bell, worn by a horse, white preferred, as being more readily seen. They are not confined in any way except when first put into the train; then, any straying from it is punished very severely and Mr. Mule soon learns his place and that it is best to keep it.

Each man with the train carries a diamond-shaped leather blind with leather cords attached to the ends and knotted together. If a pack becomes disarranged two of the men lead the mule out of the trail, blindfold him with this blind, rearrange his load, remove the leather and allow him to rejoin his fellows. He is never struck when started, and pack mules are never misused by good packers.

The Bird of Freedom.

The American Eagle voiced his sentiments on the 4th of July, 1776, in the great and only Declaration of Independence, but he did not take shape for several weeks after that day. Immediately after the declaration had been read to the Continental Congress, meeting in Philadelphia at that time, a resolution was passed creating Benjamin Franklin, John Adams and Thomas Jefferson, all well-known gentlemen, to be a committee to prepare a seal of the United States. On the 10th day of August they reported, bringing in a combination consisting principally of a Goddess of Liberty, a Goddess of Justice, and an Eye of Providence with a very small and insignificant eagle in one corner of the device. Incidentally also on the device was the legend, "E Pluribus Unum." Although the eagle at this time was not much of a bird, it still seemed to the Colonial Congressmen that something was wrong with the report of the committee, and the seal had such a bad effect that the report was laid on the table, where it stayed until 1779. In March of that year it took a fresh start with a new committee, but nothing was done until 1781, when among several designs submitted was one from William Barton of Philadelphia, who made the eagle prominent, and described the bird as emblematic of sovereignty. Another design was furnished by Charles Tomson, secretary of Congress, and the last design, and the one finally adopted, was endorsed "Mr. Barton's improvements on the secretary's device," which made some changes in Mr. Tomson's designs, and this was adopted June 20, 1782, at which time the great American Eagle made its first and genuine appearance in the history of the great republic he is under a perpetual engagement to scream for.

Bright Spars Disappearing.

Bright spars, that is to say, unpainted spars of wood, are fast disappearing from the deep-water ships of the world, for the reason that such ships are no longer built of wood, but of steel, as are also their lower masts, and often their top mast, and, it may be, their yards, too, up to and including their topgallant yards, and these are always painted. There is a four-masted British ship now lying at a South street wharf whose only bright spars are her topgallant masts and jigger topmost. Excepting her royal yards all the rest of her spars, bowsprit, lower masts, topmasts on the three forward masts, and all her yards below her royals are of iron and all painted. Her royal yards are of wood, but these are painted too.

Clear Grit in the Navy.

If there is any one thing that the Cuban war has proved up to the handle it is that our navy is clear fighting grit all the way through. Never once has it failed under any test. Not an officer or a man has flinched from any danger, but many have wept because others were sent to face death without them. Dewey daring the torpedoes at Manila. Bageley dead in the attempt to do a battleship's work with a little egg shell of a torpedo boat at Cardenas, and Hobson throwing his life like an old coat into the channel at Santiago were merely types of our whole naval service. Every man in the fleet wanted to go with Hobson.—New York Journal.

THE NAVY'S MINIATURE SEA.

A Great Tank in Which Models of New Warships Are to Be Tested.

Close to the waterfront at the gun factory in Washington the first experimental tank for the navy is being rapidly completed, and by the time bidders have submitted proposals for the construction of the big battleships and monitors recently called for it will be ready to test miniature models of paraffine and wax representing the proposed new additions to the country's fighting strength on the sea. There is no tank in the world equal to this one in size, equipment, and completeness of its electrical devices. It is longer and wider than the best owned by foreign countries, and covers an area of water fully capable of floating some of the largest torpedo boats. It looks like an immense natatorium, and, in fact, would make an excellent one.

The plan of having a big tank, housed over, with brick sides and concrete bottom, in which little models of all new ships to be built for the navy should be tested, was suggested some years ago by Chief Constructor Hichborn, who had noted the excellent results obtained in Great Britain and France by testing designs of new ships before their actual lines were decided upon by constructing small models and having them towed through the water at given rates of speed. The resistance offered by the models to the water formed a basis on which close estimates could be made of the probable speed of the actual ships when in service, and faults in designs could be readily detected and corrected before the vessels were completed. Two years ago congress appropriated $100,000 with which to build a tank, and under direction of Constructor Taylor the work has so advanced that it will be available in a few weeks.

When a new vessel is to be built, a model is made of it about eight feet long, care being observed to have the lines accurately moulded. This model is made of wood and covered with a mixture of paraffine and wax, to give it a smooth surface. Running the entire length of the tank, several feet above the water, is an electrical trolley apparatus, to which the model is attached and by which it is drawn through the water at certain fixed speeds. The waves created and their character are noted, and the disturbance caused abeam and the general effect produced on the water by the vessel are closely watched. Where defects are apparent, the designs of the proposed vessel are altered to correct them and by this means the constructors can estimate accurately just the amount of steam power required to send a vessel of a certain displacement and design through the water at a given rate of speed. Models are now being made of the three new battleships, which will be the first tested in the new tank. It is expected that some valuable lessons will be learned from the experiments by which improvements may be made in the plans of the ships.

The Secretary of the Navy.

The navy of the United States struck the first blow in the war for Cuba's

SEC'Y JOHN D. LONG.

Freedom and it was a blow which amazed the world. Later the battle of Manila Bay was equalled by the utter destruction of the Spanish Fleet off Santiago de Cuba. John D. Long, ex-Governor of Massachusetts, is Secretary of the Navy and to him goes glory as well as to Dewey, Sampson and Schley.

Ensign Powelson.

Ensign Powelson, of the St. Paul, the young officer whose expert evidence was an important feature of the Maine Court of Inquiry, has distinguished himself again. Mr. Powelson commanded the gun which disabled the Spanish torpedo boat destroyer Terror, recently, by one of the most remarkable shots in the naval history of the war. His gun also fired the shell from the St. Paul which exploded directly over a Spanish cavalry force on shore, scattering them in all directions. Ensign Powelson, when war was declared, was transferred, at his request, and that of Captain Sigsbee, from the Fern to the St. Paul.

Reflections of a Bachelor.

No man with a full beard knows what it really means to blush.

Some women never know when their husbands' wives need a change.

When a man quarrels with a girl and doesn't want her to make it up he begins to call her "my dear child."

The first time his wife cleans house every man makes up his mind that if she ever tries it again he will leave her.

As long as a girl has time to remark about men having nice names she hasn't given up all hope of getting married.

Of the total population of Bombay, which is nearly a million, the greater part is crowded into an area of four square miles.

CHAPTER XVI.

MY DEAR DONALD—You want me to tell you just where I am and how I look whenever I write to you—a habit, by the way, which may make me very conceited.

Well, then, it is a wet Sunday, but soft and hazy as wet June days are. The windows are open and the big tree outside drips a burden of rain tears. The sky is all mist, with the blue only a little way beyond. I have had a lazy morning and now after a cold plunge and a cup of tea I am sitting in a white morning gown and my hair hangs down my back in a long plait. Are these details satisfactory? I have a big bunch of roses in the copper bowl you gave me, and the bell of the French church is calling the people to worship. Oh, it's good to be at peace with everything created! Hours like this are the heaven of my week. Woman is a luxurious animal, and when she spends six days with discipline and routine as I do she is very apt to go to pieces on the seventh. Behold me, then, today degenerate, not going to church, not improving my mind, not in a stiff collar and guiltless of a hairpin.

The new Planet gets on famously. I have a little room and a big desk all to myself. Proofreaders and others "confer" with me. Think of it. I feel quite a personage, Donald, but I think my expression is not changed in consequence. I go to the office every day and leave at about 3. Generally I write on my new book until dinner. Of course this programme is frequently changed. I go out a good deal and have met lots of people who simply suggest "copy" with every turn of the head, created for no other purpose, I'm sure, than to have me write about them. Yes, I am still a "student of life." Will you never stop teasing me about that phrase? How often I think of the queer sights we saw together when you were directing my instruction. Didn't we enjoy them, Donald—that old Russian exile—I can hear his violin now—the first time I saw The Citizen's presses going like mad, the nook in the degenerate back street where we had tea and speculated about Paris?

You see what your command to talk about myself has done. I have talked of nothing else. Did you get the papers I sent about the dinner and cotillon at Olga's? I can't tell you how beautiful she looked. Why, by the way, do you think David isn't happy? Why shouldn't he be? He has married the woman he loves and is able to surround her with the luxury she requires to be content. Perhaps he would prefer not to be the husband of a society beauty on whom the lens is always fixed. In fact, I know Olga's display must jar upon him. But he is wise enough to know that no life holds all. If he loves her, the rest is mere detail. If he doesn't—well, I don't know, Donald. David is a man to hide well what he wishes to hide and have an inner life without a hint betraying it. They act in society as do all people with a proper idea of form—pay not the slightest attention to each other. Let us hope the tone of David's letter to you was only the result of a passing mood.

And now to talk of yourself. I hope you are keeping well and feel more happy now on that sleepy plantation. I feel so happy when you write with courage. Try not to be homesick. The sketches you sent are beautiful, and you are right to keep up your sketching.

You are unfair to say I don't miss you. I do indeed, and think of you often. Write a happy letter next time. I'll look for it. Tell me more about the business and don't be disappointed if you can't make money as fast as you'd like. You are sure to win if you are patient. With good wishes from my heart,

ANNE.

CHAPTER XVII.

A money panic not wholly unlooked for fell upon the country. Railroads went under, stocks fell, banks failed, and in the depression ruin was written after prominent names. Others, while holding an apparently unchanged position, had lost heavily and expected the worst.

David was one of the latter. By August he found himself but a little way from the edge of disaster. The calamity stunned him. He thought of his uncalculated expenditures, of Olga's insatiable demands. After seven sleepless nights he went to Newport, where, unmindful of her empty country house on the sound, Olga had rented a cottage. They had an interview on the big terrace fronting the sea. By this time they had reached the condition of dull domesticity when they saw each other,

"It seems immensely stupid to let your affairs get so muddled," she said.

as seldom as possible, and had interviews. David was tenderly considerate. He went into the most tiresome business details trying to simplify them and make her understand. She scarcely listened. He knew that by the expression of her quiet eyes. He urged the need of economy. She shrugged her shoulders with a tolerant smile, but offered no resistance when he spoke of selling the country house on Long Island and the eccentric stable. Secretly she was tired of them both.

"It seems immensely stupid to let your affairs get so muddled," she said in her soft voice, "but you'll pull out all right. Men always do."

"You don't understand, Olga. This is no passing breeze. We are in the midst of a storm, and how it will end God alone knows. The Citizen is safe. I am the heaviest stockholder there, and if the worst comes I can sell my interest."

"But the worst won't come," she said slowly and looked up at him from under her shady hat with an expression not unlike hatred.

"You'd better face what might be now. I hardly know where I stand."

He spoke coldly. He was antagonized by her tranquil selfishness when he remembered his nights of suspense.

"But you'll come out of it all right," she quietly insisted. "Fortunes go up and down. Other men have been in awkward places lots of times, but they have managed to escape unhurt, and you must do the same. Bertie Ogden was telling me only the other day that when things were lively in Wall street and some men failed it was the time for others to seize the opportunity and make money. He said it was like vultures battening on a wounded bird. Suppose you batten a little, David? Or are you too conscientious? I wish I understood business. I'd tell you what to do."

She stood up and shook out her mauve, lacy skirt. He saw she was pale to the lips. After the kiss of greeting she had not touched him or spoken one word of comfort or courage. And he hoped for these things still from her, though since she bore his name she had taken no pains to cheat him.

"One needs money to seize the chance of standing in a fallen man's place," he said, trying to be patient. "What if I have none? If I paid our tremendous debts which a few months ago it seemed only consistently fashionable to accumulate, I'd have scarcely anything but my interest in the paper left. Do you quite realize now where we stand? Do you know what it costs to live as we've been living? I've been very generous with you, Olga. You can't say I've denied you anything even when I should perhaps."

"Generous?" she said, her eyelids falling insolently. "I don't like that word. It's out of fashion between husbands and wives. When you married me, half of all you had became mine. I spent it as my right. If you'd interfered, you'd soon have understood that I held this view."

She looked frivolous and winsome as she stood in the soft light striking a long stemmed rose against her skirt as she spoke. David felt a mixed sensation of tenderness, pity and amusement seize him at the thought that the right to her husband's purse was the only advanced problem Olga had been interested enough to attempt to solve. Despite the crisis of the moment and his sore heart, he was disposed to question her further. He leaned forward, letting his elbow rest on his knee, and, seizing the head of the rose she toyed with, held her so.

"But I don't agree with you," he said quietly.

"Oh, I suppose you'd have doled me out dollars if you dared and made me keep an account," she said. "Perhaps that's your view."

"No. As I said before, although you do not like the word, I am generous. I would give you half my income, or more perhaps, but your right to it I deny."

"I can't argue with you. I only know what I think."

"Can't you tell me why you think it?"

"Well, I married you. I've given up my freedom for you, made your life mine; therefore everything you possess should be equally mine," she said insolently.

"But in becoming my wife do you make me your debtor?"

"Well, something of that sort."

"My dear Olga"—and David looked at her with wise and tender eyes—"you are not the first woman who has made that mistake. Just consider the matter from a reasonable point of view."

She looked out at sea, her face expressing rebellion and unbelief.

"Marriage should be a bond bringing as much happiness to a woman as to a man. I asked you to marry me because I loved you. I supposed you came to me as gladly for the same reason. Had I thought otherwise nothing under heaven would have made me accept you as a wife. I didn't want a sacrifice, I didn't want to buy you, and if either of these things has happened I may count myself a wretched man. Therefore at the beginning we stood equal in love. Loving each other, we married. We were unequally mated in regard to fortune. It was all mine. Do not misunderstand me. I was glad it was so. But why should half what I personally possess become yours when a third or a fourth is more than enough for you to be extravagant upon? Perhaps because you think you've made me happy? Weren't you as happy to be with me? Or perhaps because you gave up your freedom to share my life? That should be no loss if you loved me, dear. Besides, loving you, didn't I gladly surrender a wider liberty? That equal division as a right of which there's been a great deal said lately ought, in my view, only to exist under two conditions."

"I am curious to hear what they are," said Olga scornfully.

"Where a man of fortune is mad enough to buy a woman as his wife, aware that she has no love for him"—

"Well?"

His fingers stole up the flower stem until they clasped hers wistfully.

"Or where a woman becomes a mother," he said very softly. "Olga, the woman who accepts and makes beautiful this responsibility might rightly command not half, but all her husband's fortune, though she had been a beggar maid and he a king. They are not equal there. Then she has sacred rights. She becomes a divine mystery. Then he might well worship her. His heart's blood should not be too dear to spend for her. Do you understand me, dear?"

She suffered his fingers to cling to hers while she continued to look at the sea. There was prayer in the hand clasp. He was trying to read her thoughts. Her bosom stirred a little under its laces, her eyes were almost tender and doubtful. But a shade settled upon her beautiful face, and with it came decision. The rose fell from her fingers.

"You go to extremes, David," she said, with a tolerant smile. "When we have children, later—some time or other—I won't ask your heart's blood nor want to be considered a mystery. I'll be content with a yacht or a house in London or something thoroughly practical, as you'll see. I'm going to drive. Will you come?"

"No, I must go back to town tonight."

"Then we've finished about this tiresome money business?" she asked, lifting a pair of long gloves from the back of a chair.

"We have if I've made you understand our position," and he passed his hands over his face in a distracted way.

"You really mean we're in danger of beggary?" she asked, with sudden passion. "Do you mean that?"

"Must I go over it all again? Don't you believe me? Don't suppose I'm trying to terrorize you. What I say now is the simple truth, and I'll say it clearly, leaving out all the technicalities of a business explanation. In the present crisis more than half my principal has depreciated to almost nothing; a good deal has been lost. Suppose the rest goes?"

He faced her. His lips were set in a line of endurance, around his eyes were the haggard traces of care, the thick lock which fell over his forehead had a grayness which aged him. It seemed to him that had she been capable of even a little pity she would have come to him, taken his face in her hands and kissed him.

She pursed up her lips and considered a moment. When she spoke quietly, there was concentrated meaning in her tones.

"I shouldn't like to be poor again. I don't think I'd take that condition of affairs calmly. It seems to me I'd do something reckless; I don't know what."

She went to him and clasped her arms, bare to the elbow, around his neck.

"Do you love me at all still?" she asked earnestly. "You don't love me as you used to do, but do you love me at all?"

He bent his lips to her wrist, and a terrible sadness came into his eyes.

"I love you, dear. I want to save you from pain."

"Then don't become a poor man, David. Don't, in God's name! Do anything to get the money back," she said, moved out of herself for the first time. "I've had poverty all my life, all my life. Oh, how I loathe it! Yes, I loathe it! You think me selfish. I know you do, and I am. But I wouldn't really harm you or hurt you if I can have an easy life and not the gall of poverty again. I'm not a great woman, nor a particularly good woman, but I think if I were robbed of this life"—and she looked into the rich, dim rooms—"I might be a hard, bad woman. Save me from that in saving yourself!" And she clung to him. "Save me, David! Promise you will!"

"Save me, David! Promise you will!"

"I promise," he said in a tone which set her apart from him.

As he crossed the terrace to the open window he trod on the flower lying between them.

CHAPTER XVIII.

It was the evening of election day. Broadway was a jumble of American types moving under a light fog, which made every street lamp a star in a veil.

From the windows of the street car in which Anne sat she saw straggling processions giving enthusiastic party cries, politicians on the corners and ragged boys racing past with barrels and shutters which were to blaze later in splendid impartiality, no matter which side won.

It was after 6 o'clock, and she was on her way to The Citizen with a "special" on a timely topic David had asked her to write. She could have sent it down, but the idea of going to the old place on this wild night when Newspaper row was a seat of war had been persistently with her all day. The building in the upper part of the town where she now spent her days was quiet and had a rarefied editorial flavor. It was not as dear as these slimy, crowded streets with offices as confused as anthills in nearer neighborhood to the sky. Limelight and the smell of grease paint will awaken numbed longings in the mind of an actor who has forsworn the buskin, and the same fascination drew Anne to The Citizen tonight for a taste of the old life which had the savor of salt.

It was a critical day. When she left the car and made her way among the crowds around the city hall, she became aware of conflicting excitements in the air. There were packed masses gathered early to wait for the first election signal lights on the big buildings. There were others pressed against the great newspaper barracks where bulletins in black capitals told of unexpected and appalling failures and fortunes lost. It seemed to Anne that the confused noises of the warring earth must at last besiege heaven as a sob.

At the entrance of The Citizen building an electric light as fierce as the politics of the paper blazed upon the moving crowds. It fell upon many faces, all earnest, strained, or preoccupied, and on one as familiar to Anne as her hand. David was among the number coming down the muddy, stone hall, and she made her way toward him.

But a second glance brought her to a standstill. She read consternation and despair in his changed face. As he pushed his way toward the door without a glance either side she waited in anxiety till he should reach her and she would know what grief had altered him. But his eyes met hers blankly as he passed on without a word.

Anne hesitated, gazing at the angle where he had disappeared; then an irresistible desire to hear him speak forced her back to the street. She followed him, the "special" forgotten in her hand.

He was suffering from some shock, and fear made riot in her thoughts. Confused ideas of unhappiness in his home, disaster, the death of some one dear, the loss of faith, crowded one another in her mind as she hurried on through the mist, her eyes upon him.

She noticed that nothing attracted his attention, not the raucous cries of newsboys, the arrest of a thief or the bulletins heralding disaster. Inhabited by a storm which drew his thoughts inward, he walked with unseeing eyes. And Anne followed him, conscious only of the ache in herself and the desire to be near him. So they swept on, two atoms in the human stream, now in shadow, now in light, until Newspaper row was left well behind and the big bridge was reached.

Anne understood the feelings which had urged David here. It was the solitude which a lighthouse lends above a snarling sea. The city lay beneath a pall of vapor. Light came hazily from the peaked shadows of houses, seeming from this height the pitiful abode of earth grubbers. Searchlights from towers, crimson lamps on street cars far below, wavered on the fog, and the adagio of human life sweeping upward was an unsyllabled moaning as if from the heart of a giant Tantalus.

When the street scenes were left behind and the river raced beneath the bridge, the voice was the same as the city's in another key. Wave slipped into wave with sighing, and the water torn by churning boats gushed in a rippling minor.

In the shade between the towers David paused. He stood with folded arms and looked back to where the lights on The Citizen building flamed like great stars. The pallor of his face, the contracted brow, the long look full of dejection, told of absolute surrender to despair.

Anne watched him, while passersby eddied between them. She longed to slip her hand into his, to know she was desired and necessary in his life. Her throat ached, her heart went wildly out to him. But all desire to make him conscious of her presence left her. He had come there to face his grief alone. He had no need of her. She turned away and left him to his implacable thoughts, the solitude and night.

THE BARON WILLIAM ROTHSCHILD.

Adheres Strictly to Jewish Customs—He Hasn't Much Use for Christians.

Baron William Rothschild, the present representative of the great family of bankers in Frankfort, is a very eccentric man. He is a recluse. He lives within himself, and does not seem to enjoy the society of his fellow men. His habits are those of an anchorite. No monk of the middle ages was more scrupulous about his religious duties or more abstemious in his diet. Baron William observes all the Mosaic injunctions. He takes his own cook and cooking utensils wherever he goes, and has his food prepared according to the strictest Jewish regimen. He will never sit at the same table with a Christian, nor partake of food from which a Christian has eaten. He is always very courteous, and even deferential in his manners, but if he is in the same room with a Christian who is standing Baron Rothschild will sit down. If the Christian sits down he rises. In the plain little office where he receives those who have business with him there is only one chair. The entire furnishings of the room would not bring $5 at auction. He has the same desk and other furniture that was used by his father and grandfather. He has worn the same hat for nearly a quarter of a century, and it is said that he buys a new suit of clothes every fifth year.

This is not due to parsimony, because Baron Rothschild's residences are numerous and palatial, he has a host of servants, fine horses and carriages, and his family fare sumptuously every day. He is very generous, and gives to several men of his race more money every year, as a charity, than he spends for his own comfort. His wants are few. It is his pleasure to live simply, and he enjoys his own society more than that of other men.

Another of Baron Rothschild's peculiarities is to conceal his benevolence. He is said to give away a great deal of money, but if the man who receives it ever mentions the fact so that it comes to the baron's ears, he is not likely to get any more. His contributions to general benevolence are always anonymous or pass through the hands of the rabbis.

WON HIS LEAVE OF ABSENCE

It Had Been Refused But He Got It By a Perilous Exploit.

There is a young soldier from Binghampton in Captain Hitchcock's company of the First Regiment, New York Volunteers, at Governor's Island, who won a much desired leave of absence one day in a novel way. This young soldier wanted to go over to New York for two days in the worst kind of a way. Some friends from home, whom he hadn't seen since he marched out of Binghamton with his company nearly two months before, were coming down for a visit and had invited him to spend the time with them. As he hadn't had any leave either at Camp Black or at Governor's Island up to that time, he felt sure that there would be no difficulty in getting it then, and, accordingly, he put in an application for forty-eight hours.

In just one hour he got his application back, marked "Refused." There was no explanation of the refusal, and the young soldier was disgruntled about it and went off to sulk.

The next afternoon there was a heavy windstorm. It blew great guns on Governor's Island, and many things that were not secured were blown out into the bay. The most serious damage done, however, was the snapping of the halyard on the big steel flagpole on the parade ground and the sudden descent to the ground in consequence of the American flag. Officers and men regarded this as an evil omen, and, despite the fact that the wind was still blowing a gale, they ran out on the parade ground to rescue the flag and see what could be done toward fixing the broken halyard.

"I want a man to shin up that pole and fix that rope," said the officer of the day, who was one of the Lieutenants of the company. "Who will do it?"

The first half of the flagpole was solid enough, but up toward the top it was bending in the wind like a slender branch of a tree. It was a smooth climb, too, and it was evident that it would take a pretty good man to make it, and a pretty strong one to hang on after he reached the top. For a moment after the lieutenant called for a volunteer there was silence. Then a soldier stepped forward and said he'd make an attempt.

There was a burst of applause from the others as he tied the end of the rope around his waist. No one who heard him doubted that he could make the climb, as he had served six years in the navy before joining the National Guard. Half way up, the soldier stopped and yelled down that he couldn't go any further.

"The wind's too strong," he shouted. "I can scarcely hold on now."

"Come down, then," cried the Lieutenant.

When the soldier reached the ground the Lieutenant turned to the men and said:

"Will any other man try it? We must fix it, boys, for the flag can't fly until we do."

Two or three men said that they would do it willingly, if they could, but they were sure they couldn't climb a quarter of the way up. Then the young soldier, who had been sulking because his application for leave had been turned down, stepped forward and said:

"Lieutenant, I made application for forty-eight hours' leave yesterday and it was refused. I want that leave badly, and if you'll promise to get it for me I'll make a stagger at this job. I never shinned up a smooth steel pole, but I have climbed trees, and think I can do this job."

"I can't promise you the leave," said the Lieutenant, "but I'll promise to do my best to obtain it for you."

"That's satisfactory," said the soldier, and a moment later he was going up the pole, the end of the broken halyard tied around his waist. He went up very slowly, resting every few feet and finally reached the top. His companions below were too scared to applaud, for the top of the pole was bending first one way and then another in the gale, and it looked as though the young soldier might be blown from his perch any second.

But he wasn't. He was earning that much-desired leave, and he succeeded in slipping the end of the rope through to the pulley block and bringing it down with him. Then he was allowed to haul up the flag himself, while the other soldiers cheered him. Thoroughly exhausted, he went back to his quarters, where, an hour later, an orderly handed him a paper, informing him that, on the recommendation of Lieutenant Blank, seventy-two hours' leave of absence had been granted to him by the Post Commander, Colonel Barber.

The Minister's Mistake.

As a minister and a lawyer were riding together, says the minister to the lawyer:

"Sir, do you ever make mistakes in pleading?"

"I do," says the lawyer.

"And what do you do with mistakes?" inquired the minister.

"Why, sir, if large ones, I mend them; if small ones, I let them go," said the lawyer. "And pray, sir," continued he, "do you ever make mistakes in preaching?"

"Yes, sir; I have."

"And what do you do with mistakes?" said the lawyer.

"Why, sir, I dispose of them in the same manner as you do. A long since," continued he, "as I was preaching, I meant to observe that the devil was the father of liars, but made a mistake, and said the father of lawyers. The mistake was so small that I let it go."

BARCELONA HARBOR.

ONE OF THE MOST ACCESSIBLE AND BEAUTIFUL IN EUROPE.

The City is Old, Very Old—Its History Goes Back into Tradition, Which Declares Hercules to Have Been Its Founder.

One of the most accessible and beautiful harbors of all Europe is that of Barcelona, the chief seaport of Spain. Its magnificent port has long made it the principal embarking center of the kingdom for troops destined to serve in distant waters and lands. From this point were shipped the thousands of youths, who found death, not glory, in Cuba; and here she is now gathering her soldiers and manning her warships preparatory to sending them forth to defend her trans-Atlantic possessions. Barcelona, the quiet, the beautiful, is being quickly transformed into a noisy, bustling military center, haunted by sad-eyed women.

The city is old, very old. Its history goes back into tradition, which declares Hercules to have been its founder. In the time of the Carthaginians it first became of importance. The Romans conquered it and made it great. In the ninth century the city was ruled by a Christian chief, with the title of Count of Barcelona, which was afterwards merged into that of King of Argon. During the year 985 it was captured by the Moors; but reconquered not long after. The city now became very powerful. It divided with Italy the commerce of the world. It ruled the Mediterranean. Barcelona became a name powerful in Europe. The great of the world sought its gates; and wealth, learning and luxury made their homes within its walls. Ferdinand and Isabella loved the city; and here, in 1493, they received Columbus after his famous voyage.

For a time Barcelona was the capital of an independent kingdom; but, during the reign of Louis XIV and Philip V it was captured by the allied forces of France and Spain, sacked, burned and robbed of its independence. In the War of Succession, in 1795, the city was taken by Lord Peterborough, one of the famous sieges and captures in history; but on the return of peace was again restored to Spain. Napoleon, in 1808, sent Duhesme, with 11,000 men as a pretended ally, who entered the city and took possession of its citadel. When Napoleon fell Barcelona once more came under Spanish rule, where it still remains.

Barcelona is the least Spanish of all the cities of Spain; and the most cosmopolitan. Spain, Catalonia and France have each stamped a portion of its character on the city. The resultant is not the highest type of humanity. The people are noisy, turbulent and riotous. They are proud, selfish and fickle, becoming easily discontented and always ready, at slight provocation, for a riotous demonstration against the government. Should a revolution occur in Spain Barcelona would be among the first to fly the red flag. It is distinctly a commercial city, the most enterprising and flourishing in Spain. It possesses immense shipbuilding yards, iron works and hosts of other manufacturers. It is the Pittsburg of Spain; yet its blue skies are unclouded and the purity of its air untainted by black smoke and vile fumes. Its people are on the hunt for the "almighty dollar," and, apparently, they find it, for while Spain has been growing poorer Barcelona has become rich. The typical Spaniard is too proud to be a trader; but the citizens of Barcelona have none of this false pride. They will do anything to make money; and the result is they hold the purse strings of Spain.

Barcelona is beautifully located on the shores of the blue Mediterranean. On one side is the magnificent harbor, filled with shipping from all parts of the world; and on the other gently undulating hills and back of them the wild ruggedness and grandeur of the mountains. The air is ever clear and pure. The sunrays are dazzling in their brightness; ut hot, sometimes very hot. The vegetation is of luxuriant growth, and fruits and flowers beautify the scene and make fragrant the air. To live a month in Barcelona is apt to give birth to the wish to dwell there always.

The streets are often narrow and dirty; but always interesting. The Rambla is the most famous of the thoroughfares of the city. It is to Barcelona what Fifth Avenue and the Boulevard is to New York. Here are the most important public places. It is the pet promenade of the people, the gathering place of whatever is most pleasant, polite or picturesque in the life of the city. The Rambla runs from the sea in a northwesterly direction; and, unlike our streets, the middle part is given up to foot-passengers, with a carriage way on each side. Along its entire length grow two rows of stately trees, making a cool walk even on a hot day. On feast-days a flood of people flow up and down the Rambla. Another beautiful promenade is the Muralla del Mar or sea wall. This gives a delightful view of the harbor and the mediterranean. The streets of Barcelona are fast becoming modernized and losing much of their picturesqueness.

To the traveler the most interesting part of Barcelona is its churches; and of its churches the cathedral is by far the most notable. Indeed, some writers place the Cathedral of Barcelona above St. Peter's at Rome, above the churches of all other countries, in its uplifting influence. The beauty and refinement of its architecture, the softness and perfections of its coloring and details—the harmony of the whole, appeal to the soul as no other church does. The building was begun six hundred years ago, and to-day it is not completely finished

AMONG THE STEPPERS.

There was a fair-sized crowd of people at the track of the Plainfield Driving Association last Saturday afternoon, when one race furnished the programme for the afternoon. The horses in that race were D. Darby's "Sunday," W. A. Coddington's "Sam B," and J. Wesley Johnson's "Barney Williams." Mr. Johnson's horse won the race, capturing both the first and second heats in 2:29¼ and 2:28¼. The other horses made a fair showing, but did not seem to be in it with the winner.

A Chinese essayist thus describes the American people: "They live for months without eating a mouthful of rice; they eat bullocks and sheep in enormous quantities; they have to bathe frequently; the men dress all alike, and to judge from their appearance they are all coolies; neither are they ever to be seen carrying a fan or an umbrella, for they manifest their ignorant contempt of these insignia of a gentleman by leaving them entirely to women; none of them have finger nails more than an eighth of an inch long; they eat meat with knives and prongs; they never enjoy themselves by sitting quietly on their ancestor's graves, but jump around and kick balls as if paid to do it, and they have no dignity, for they may be found walking with women."—New York Tribune.

RAILROADS IN SPAIN.

Total Mileage Equal to One of Our Western Companies.

There is not much celebration of anything in Spain this year, but if there was, she might celebrate the semi-centennial anniversary of the opening of the first railroad in that kingdom. In 1848 the Barcelona Railroad, so called, extending eighteen miles from Barcelona to Mataro, was opened to traffic. Mataro is a small town on the Mediterranean northeast of Barcelona, and these eighteen miles of road constituted at that time Spain's only contribution to the railroad mileage of the world, the neighboring country, France, having at the same period a railroad mileage of 1,500 and Great Britain 3,000. Since then there has been a slowly intermittent increase of what is sometimes grandiosely called "The Railroad System" of Spain, two obstacles to the development of which have been the unbusinesslike methods of the inhabitants and enormous engineering difficulties. Spain has been wholly denuded of forests at the headwaters of rivers, and as a consequence there are frequent overflows, carrying with them railroad bridges, trestles, and embankments to the constant peril and annoyance of passengers.

There are now in Spain 7,550 miles of railroad, less than one-third of the number in Great Britain, France, or Russia, and less than one-fourth of the number in Italy. The relative insignificance of the Spanish railroad "system" appears best in comparison with American railroads, a single line, the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy, having an aggregate mileage of 7,400, owned, operated, or controlled, or nearly as much as all the railroads of Spain combined. Spanish railroads are proverbially slow, the rate of "express" trains being twenty-five miles an hour and of way passenger trains from twelve to fifteen. They seldom run on scheduled time, and it is the testimony of all travellers that they never make connections. The amount of baggage allowed each first-class passenger on a Spanish railroad is sixty-six pounds, but the railroads are not responsible for its loss, nor are their officials responsible for its identification. The charges on Spanish railroads are remarkably high, being at the rate of 5 cents a mile on first-class trains, and 3 cents a mile on second-class trains, about double the American average.

The railroad lines of Spain were built partly by private capital, partly from the proceeds of governmental subsidies. These subsidies have amounted to over $200,000,000 (1,000,000,000 pesetas). Although the railroads of Spain are directly under the control of the Government, and although about one-third of their construction was paid by the Government, they are owned by private companies, and about three-fifths of the stock of the Spanish railroads is owned in France. French investors have gradually absorbed the securities, which, sold at a depreciation, pay a high rate of interest. French and English engineers supervised generally the construction of Spanish railroads, but the "stations," or terminal facilities of the companies are the products of domestic industry, as any observant but forbearing traveller will admit.

The railroads of the United States carry in a year about 600,000,000 passengers, and they transport about 800,000,000 tons of freight. There are 33 per cent. more tons of freight carried than there are individual passengers. The Spanish railroads, despite the inferior facilities which they offer to travellers, depend more upon passenger than upon freight traffic, carrying in a year a much larger number of passengers than they do tons of freight. In 1897 the Spanish railroads carried 27,000,000 passengers, but they carried only 12,000,000 tons of freight.

The difficulties of passenger traffic on Spanish railroads are enhanced in some particulars which are rather amusing than serious. Passengers are expected to arrive at the station at least half an hour before the train leaves, in order that sufficient allowance may be made for the dilatory proceedings of the railway officials. During part of each day (and in some cities the larger part of each day), the railway stations are closed and the ticket offices do not open until an hour before the time scheduled for the departure of the train, closing a quarter of an hour before it is due.

The hapless tourist, in compliance with Spanish railroad custom, must have his ticket before he is permitted to enter the waiting room, and as this ticket must be bought fifteen minutes, at least, before the train starts and as the train may be anywhere from an hour to three hours late, his opportunities for reasonable complaint are numerous and are not diminished by knowledge of the fact that he is paying more for his ticket, according to the distance travelled, than is the rule on American or English railways.

One peculiarity of railroad travel in Spain is to be found in the fact that employees of the railroad company are entitled, as a matter of right, to the best seats, even regardless of the tickets sold passengers. In what is sometimes called "cheap" railroad travel in Spain many of the passengers ride on the roofs of the cars, but whether it is to enable them to see the country to better advantage or to enjoy greater comfort and better ventilation is not known. In some Spanish railroad stations, notwithstanding the meagreness of their accommodations, an admission fee is charged, similar to a theatre, it being the theory of some of the Spanish railroad officials that the eagerness of some persons to find solace on the wooden benches of railway stations is an item of available revenue not to be disregarded.

THE WEAKNESS OF CHINA.

The Emperor Weeps as He Signs Disgraceful Treaties.

No army has invaded China since the Japanese retreated. No fleet has shelled her ports. There has been no rebellion in any province. The Emperor is as absolute as ever, the organization of his Government is quite complete, his counsellors are those he has always trusted, his people are submissively loyal, but the life of the whole is apparently suspended. Any Power asks anything and it is unwillingly conceded, the energy to offer even passive resistance, to sit still and await the will of the superior Powers, is apparently absent. The Emperor weeps silently as he signs disgraceful treaties, but he signs them. His counsellors rage as each demand is presented, but they advise acceptance. His army flits from port to port at the bidding of each foreign invader, apparently without an idea of firing a shot. His people, 300,000,000 of peasants and artisans, who have held together for 3,000 years, who are individually brave, industrious and efficient, look on quietly, striking no stroke, making no cry, deserting, yet worshipping their imperial lord.

They are beyond measure proud, but their pride does not stir them to action. They hate the invaders as Indians hated Spaniards, but their hate gives them no energy. They possess resources even for war almost without limit, but they accept passively the dictation of the owners of a few ships. They do not even rise in magnificent incohorence as the Peruvians did, and try to crush the invaders by mere numbers, but look on passively as if the terrible scene going on, which makes even the greedy invaders from the outside lament, were no business of theirs. Nothing like it in history, says Mr. Balfour; there is nothing like it in fiction or in verse, for no imagination, once stirred to exert itself, could dream of such passivity. It seems incredible even to men who know Asia, and make them doubt whether the impression on their minds is not a dream from which there will be a rough awakening. China, said M. Hanotaux, with the grim humor of the French litterateur, "is a corpse, the stench of which will poison Europe;" but it is not a corpse, there is the miracle of it. China is a living being, in appafent health, from which the soul has temporarily departed.—London Spectator.

A PLAINSPOKEN DRESSMAKER.

Her Blunt Remarks Not Always Enjoyed by the Patrons.

There is a certain dressmaker in a New England village who always finds customers in spite of her lack of tact. Though she innocently offends one patron after another she does not lose them. Her ruffles are too even, and her biases too far above reproach. Here is a specimen of her conversation while she "fits" a customer.

"I guess I'll cut this a little mite lower. You've got a real pretty neck." Then, when the customer unconsciously bridles with satisfaction, she adds, "It's your one good point." She goes on snipping and pinning. "There!" she exclaims, standing off to view the effect, "That's what I call a lovely back. Your's is a little bowin', but I make allowances when I cut!" The customer begins to feel herself a monstrosity, but her innocent tormentor continues, "Why, I never saw that dimple in your wrist! How nice that is!" Hope revives, but only to sink again. "But I guess I won't make the sleeves any shorter for that. You see your hands are pretty good size, and a fall of lace would help to cover 'em." So the ordeal continues, and the customer feels that she has reached the lowest notch of humility. Only as she is leaving does she pluck up courage to ask,—

"What do you think of red velvet for my new evening dress?"

"Lovely! Only I'd get a dark velvet for a lady your age!"

A Familar Topic.

"Well, well!" exclaimed Mrs. Corntossel. "I ain't seen anything about that big Chinese Wall before in several years."

"Where do ye see anything about it now?" inquired her husband, looking over her shoulder.

Mid-Summer Clearance.

The enemy of the shoe trade is the carrying over of stock from year to year until it gets clear off style. It deceives customers. It disgusts clerks. It turns profit into loss. Hence goods of summer fashion are to go before August 31st. We'd rather have the cash than to carry over the goods, besides we want the room for fall stock.

Every man, woman and child can be interested in this sale, as shoes for everybody is our business.

FAITHLESS LOVER MUST ANSWER GRAND JURY.

Justice Mosher Decides in Favor of a Jilted Sweetheart.

DRAKE GOT MONEY WRONG

HE SAYS MISS CASSIDY GAVE IT TO HIM WITHOUT PROMISES.

But He Couldn't Explain Away a Certain Letter Which He Had Written to the Complainant, Asking for $25, so the Justice Held Him to Await the Action of the Grand Jury—Bail Furnished

It was a case of love at first sight on the part of Maggie Cassidy towards Edward Drake, according to the latter's story yesterday afternoon in Justice Mosher's court. Drake sat npon the witness stand and tried to impress upon the court that Maggie had given him different sums of money from August, 1896, to January, 1898, aggregating in all $125.25, and had given them out of pure charity and a desire to be benevolent.

Maggie is a buxom Irish girl who is employed as servant in a Mercer avenue home and Drake is a young brick maker, who was married to Miss Anna Belle Snyder by Rev. T. Logan Murphy at the rectory of the church of the Holy Cross Thursday afternoon. The couple's honeymoon was cut short an hour afterwards by the arrival of Constable Rockafellow with a warrant for the bridegroom's arrest on a charge of obtaining money under false pretenses from a former sweetheart, Miss Maggie Cassidy.

Drake's hearing was set down for yesterday afternoon at 4 o'clock. Long before that hour the court room was crowded, and spectators stood in the hall, so anxious were all to hear the testimony to be given in this novel case.

The hearing was a disappointment o many, for the case was hurried through, and no se nsational testimony was given. Miss Cassidy, the complaining witness, came into court accompanied by her lawyer, W. S. Angleman, and a friend. Miss Cassidy is plump and speaks with a broad Irish brogue. She was dressed in a pink figured lawn trimmed with red ribbons, and as she sat beside her counsel, cast many a look at Drake, her past lover, who sat opposite. Mrs. Drake, the four-days-old bride was also present. She sat in the rear of the court room and looked demurely at her pink fringe as Miss Cassidy told how Drake used to adore her and obtain these various sums of money from her with honeyed words about some building lots he wanted to buy.

Miss Cassidy had kept account of all the alleged loans, which she said were made upon Drake's promise to marry her, and had her accounts in court. The papers showed that in August, 1896, she had loaned Drake $10. This, she explained, he wanted to buy a watch with. September 9th, a few days afterwards, she had recorded a loan of 25 cents. December 27th Drake had borrowed 10 cents, and January 25th and 29th had borrowed $25 each time. There were other alleged loans, but the charge was brought on only one, $25 given to Drake Jan. 20th last.

Maggie said that she met Drake nearly three years ago. He kept steady company with her, she said, and they were to be married in October. This money loaned, she claimed, Drake wanted to pay on the lots he had purchased near Grant avenue. She said Drake had never told her he wouldn't marry her, and that she had waited until Friday to bring the suit against him because she had no reason to doubt him until he really was married to some one else. Drake called frequently at the house, she said, sometimes as often as four times a week.

Drake's story was an entirely different one. He claimed that the girl was infatuated with him, followed him about, and when he had no work in the winter time, pressed her money upon him, "to do what he wanted with."

Drake admitted taking the money, and never paying it back, but maintained that it was all a free gift. He could'nt explain how a girl receiving $14 a month as wages, could bestow $125.25 on him in eighteen months time, and consider it all as a gift.

One time, he said, she gave him $10 to take her out for a trolley ride, and didn't want the change back. Other sums, he claimed, were given him for other purposes, sometimes it would be a quarter, sometimes only a dime. To prove that Drake had made no secret of his approaching marriage to Miss Snyder, he produced a copy of a Plain-

SOMERSET WILL BE HEARD.

OCEAN COUNTY TAX ASSESSMENT.

Counsel for the Freeholders Will Now Have a Chance to Present Evidence if He Chooses.

(Special to The Daily Press.

Toms River, N. J., August 23.—The State Board of Taxation met here yesterday to take testimony in the complaint preferred by the Board of Freeholders of Somerset county that the assessors of Ocean county had undervalued real and personal property in their assessments.

All the assessors of Ocean county were summoned and sworn as to their methods of assessment, but the only breeze raised was when N. B. Robbins, assessor of Lakewood township, was questioned in regard to George J. Gould's assessment of $100,000 on real estate and $200,000 on personal property. Major Lentz got the assessor to admit once that he understood Gould to be worth from $15,000,000 to $20,000,000, but the assessor qualified the statement immediately by saying it was only a rumor. However, it brought out the fact that Gould belongs to the village fire company, for which he is given an exemption of $500 on his valuation.

The Board adjourned the case to give the counsel for Somerset county an opportunity to present evidence if he chooses.

SUIT TO RECOVER A NOTE.

Charles Kane Makes Executors of Dead Sister's Estate the Defendants.

Charles Kane, of Philadelphia, and Michael Ettinger, of Cottage place, are brothers-in-law, but are on such terms at the present time that they have gone to law over a note for $100, which Kane claims he gave Mrs. Ettinger during her life time.

Mrs. Ettinger is dead and several weeks ago Kane, through Codington & Swackhamer, brought suit in Justice Mosher's court against the widower for the recovery of the loan. Councilman Walter L. Hetfield defended Ettinger and secured a nonsuit for his client on the ground that Kane should have sued Ettinger and Michael Coyne jointly, as executors of Mrs. Ettinger's estate, not Ettinger alone.

Another suit was brought accordingly and the case was tried yesterday at 10 o'clock. Both Ettinger and Coyne were sued and the trial lasted until noon, when court adjourned for luncheon and to allow Justice Mosher to take John King's deposition. Mr. King was a witness for the defense and was too ill to leave his home on West Second street. He only testified that he, as an insurance agent, did all his business with Mrs. Etttinger, not with her husband. The parties then went back to the court room and finished the case at 4 o'clock, Justice Mosher reserving his decision until Monday morning.

TROUBLE AT A BRICK YARD.

Eastwhile Partners and Friends Take Their Troubles to Court.

There is more trouble at the brick yard at Berkley Heights. The erstwhile partners and friends, Mararoni and Varette, speak no more. Each runs a separate kiln now and is entirely independent of the other. Mararoni's existence has not been a peaceful one of late.

Last week three of Mararoni's men started suit against Mararoni to recover wages alleged to be due. The suit was started in Justice Newcorn's court. Then Mararoni had Billie Cremo Bimbo arrested on the charge of inciting men to riot. The other two men who sued their employer were Carmino Ruso and Antonio Gaita.

Yesterday Bimbo was arraigned before Justice Kelly in Summit. Mararoni tried to make out that Bimbo had attempted to persuade his men to stop work and threaten him. Bimbo was represented by H. C. Runyon, of this city. The complaint was dismissed.

Bimbo was immediately re-arrested on the charge of assault and battery preferred by a Frenchman named Francisco. He was held in $100 bail for his appearance before the Grand Jury.

Meanwhile the suits in Justice Newcorn's court will come up for trial next Friday.

PLAINFIELDER ABROAD.

REV. DR. W. C. SNODGRASS WRITES OF HIS ENGLISH TRIP.

Tells of Visits to Interesting Places—Was at Bosworth Field—Saw the Home of the Author of "Pilgrim's Progress."

Rev. Dr. W. C. Snodgrass, pastor of the First M. E. church, is now in England spending his well earned vacation and recuperating for the active work of the winter. He has written to the Daily Press an interesting letter telling of the incidents of his trip. The letter was written from London, August 10th. He says:

"We had a long but delightful voyage and many of the passengers expressed regret when it ended. The six days I have been in England have been spent in visiting places I had not seen before and in visiting some points which one wishes to see more than once.

"On the way up from Liverpool I visited Nuneaton, the 'Milby' of George Eliot's 'Scenes in Clerical Life,' and called on the vicar of the parish in the very study which the story has made famous. I also visited the battlefield of Bosworth in company with a gentleman whose ancestors fought there. Then I went to Northampton and visited Queen Eleanor's cross.

"From there I went to Bedford, John Bunyan's town, and saw many things which make Bunyan more real to me than before. Hitherto he has been to me something more than a name. Hereafter he is a real man. I have been in the house he occupied in Elstow, have stood on the site of the Bedford jail, now destroyed, have seen a door from that infamous old building, and handled various articles that Bunyan once owned. The pastor of the Bunyan church, the sixth from the great dreamer, showed me many courtesies.

"All the Englishmen I have met are rejoicing over the American victories and the prospect of speedy and honorable peace. I have had the rare privilege of hearing Lord Salisbury and a number of other peers speak in the first debate on the vaccination bill in the House of Lords.

"Very truly,
"W. C. Snodgrass."

ROAD TO INN LIGHTED.

Owners Place Lamps to Illuminate the Way to the Popular Hostelry.

The road to the Mountain Park Inn from Somerset street is no longer in darkness. Ten oil lanterns with powerful reflectors now make it light enough for anyone to pick their way up or down with ease. The lighting of it marks the end of a fight between the owners of the Mountain Park Inn and the property owners in that section and the township committee.

Every day in the spring, summer and fall, there are many who pass up and down the hill in daylight and dark. The woods that boarder the road on either hand make it dark indeed unless there is a full moon to give its kindly illumination. For three years, efforts have been made to get the township committee to light the road but they have steadily refused.

Now the owners of Mountain Park have tired of waiting for the township committee to act in the matter and have gone ahead. A series of posts have been planted along the drive and large lamps placed on them. Every evening an attendant from the Inn comes down and lights them and keeps them in order during the night.

CLAMBAKE TO OPEN CAMPAIGN.

County Committee of the Republicans Arrange an Outing.

(Special to The Daily Press.)

Elizabeth, August 23.—The Union County Republican Committee held a special meeting Saturday afternoon to make arrangements for an active opening next month of the fall campaign. It was decided that in view of the success that attended the first annual outing and clambake given by the County Committee last year at Neptune Heights, Avon-by-the-Sea, to hold another there September 13th, to which all the leading Republicans of the county, together with all the party workers, will be invited. This will be really the opening of the Republican campaign in Union and the gathering will give the leaders a chance to exchange views and also to consult the ward and township workers.

INSURGENTS DON'T STOP

BLANCO REPORTS THAT CUBANS STILL ATTACK HIM.

Cabinet Council Last Night Give Him Power to Repel Advances—A Spanish Complaint Comes Over From Manila.

Madrid, August 23.—At the Cabinet Council held last night Gen. Correa, Minister of War, read a telegram from Captain-General Blanco in which he informs the Government that the Cuban insurgents continue attacking the Spanish everywhere. In consequence of this report the Council instructed Gen. Blanco to resume an offensive attitude toward the insurgents only.

Admiral Manterola, Chief of the Spanish Marine in the Antilles, was chosen to replace Admiral Pastor y Lyndero as one of the Spanish Commissioners for Cuba.

The Council agreed that the suspension of the constitutional guarantee shall not be applicable to electoral purposes. The Queen Regent will sign the decree promulgating this decision today.

General Jaudenes cables from Manila complaining that the Americans have monopolized every available housing place, and the Spanish soldiers are obliged to sleep in the churches. The necessarily great overcrowding resulting from this causes fears of an epidemic. General Jadenes describes the men as literally lying in heaps.

HUSTLING FOR CONSENTS.

An Important Part of the Work of the County Trolley Scheme.

(Special to The Daily Press.)

Elizabeth, August 23.—The Elizabeth City Street Railroad Company has begun an active canvass for the consents of property-holders on Westfield avenue and streets in Elizabeth to construct a trolley line between Elizabeth and Plainfield, for which right was accorded to John Kean, by the Union County Board of Freeholders, for $250,000 The county is to widen the avenue, which work will cost all the money received and probably more. The canvass for consents has proved highly satisfactory, and it is believed that the actual work of the county in widening the road will soon commence, when the laying of rails will quickly follow.

In the meantime bids are being asked for material. When completed, the new road or boulevard will be one of the finest thoroughfares in the State. It is expected, however, that the county will have to contend with a number of suits for damages by dissatisfied land-owners, those in Cranford being particularly aggressive.

A Big Clambake.

A clambake will be held at Mountainside Grove this evening. It will be preceeded by a trolley party starting from the North Avenue station at 6 o'clock promptly. The affair has been arranged by a number of the representative business and professional men of the city. The car will be gaily decorated for the occasion The party is to be photographed at 7 o'clock on Johnston's Drive. Then the party will adjourn to the grove for the clambake which is promised to be a famous event.

Addressed the Red Men.

Great Junior Sagamore William Newcorn, of this city, went to Stewartville, N. J., Saturday afternoon and evening where he attended the Harvest Home of Ioka Tribe of Red Men. There were several thousand people present. In the evening he made an address on Redmanship. Great Prophet Peterson, of Camden, was also present.

SUPPORTS MANY TONS.

FLOOR IN WING OF LIBRARY BUILDING GIVEN A SEVERE TEST.

Three Tons of Pig Iron was Piled on a Space Two Feet Square, But the Floor Only Sagged 1-32 of an Inch.

The new wing to the Public Library is rapidly nearing completion. When finished it will be the most completely fire-proof structure in the city and of sufficient strength to easily carry the load of valuable volumes intended for it.

This morning the concrete floor was tested as to its ability to withstand any strain put upon it, and the results of the test were more than satisfactory to Building Inspector T. O. Doane. The floor is something new made by the Columbia Fire-proofing Company. The floor is primarily supported by 8-inch steel beams, resting on brick piers. There are 6-inch cross beams to which steel rods are fastened every 15 inches. About this a special concrete is laid 3½ inches in thickness.

At the test this morning three tons of pig iron was heaped on a space two feet square in the centre of one of the panels, 5 feet by 8 feet, 2 inches. A rod was so arranged as to show the slightest deflection. With all that load the floor only gave a hair's breadth. Architect Evarts Tracy estimated it at 1 3-2 of an inch.

Then Inspector Doane, Architect Tracy, The Press reporter and several workmen climbed on the heap adding 821 pounds to the weight. The weight per squrae foot was 1,705 pounds. All dwellings are supposed to have floors to withstand a pressure of 75 pounds per square foot, in store houses it is 150 pounds. It is estimated that the floor of the library will support a weight of 250 to 300 pounds per square foot. The test showed its ability to carry five times that amount. The floor is also absolutely fire-proof.

CHANGES IN DRY GOODS STORE.

Woodhul & Martin to Make Numerous Changes in Arrangements.

Woodhull & Martin, the dry goods men, have begun a general overhauling of their West Front street stores, preparatory to making several changes in the arrangement of their goods this fall.

The suit department in the rear of the store has been moved, and in its place will soon be found a grand display of lace curtains. Rods will be hung and on them the curtains will be spread to the best advantage. Most of the changes will be made in the store formerly occupied by Doane & Edsall. The elevator has been taken out and the stairs leading to the cellar removed.

This store has been used for house hold furniture, but now will be given up to notions, kid gloves, hosiery, etc. All the small wear will be found on this side of the store. New counters will be built and several new lines of goods exhibited. The firm have decided to put in traveling bags, satchels, trunks, etc., and a complete stationery department. Other lines will be decided upon later.

CHURCH WELL LIGHTED.

Electric Lighting System in First M. E. Church Now Completed.

The wiring of the First M. E. church is now practically completed. Sunday evening the church was illuminated with electricity for the first time and all the congregation present was greatly pleased with the decided improvement in the manner of lighting. The three-wire system is used. The church is now the only building in the city in which that modern system has been used. The wiring was done by Walter B. Rittenhouse, of this city.

The organ was greatly improved by its cleaning and general overhauling. Power for the organ is now furnished by a water motor which is a great improvement over the old hand power heretofore used.

PRIVATES LONG FOR HOME.

BUT OFFICERS ARE WILLING TO STAY.

Third Regiment Men are Becoming Disgusted With Their Life in the Army.

(Special to The Daily Press.)

Pompton Lake, N. J., August 23.—A rumor to the effect that the Third Regiment will proceed to Sea Girt on Wednesday is being freely circulated in camp. The officers pretend to know nothing of it, but do not seem inclined to talk about it. The staff, with the possible exception of one, and nearly all the line officers are yet ready and anxious to remain in the service of Uncle Sam, but a number of the men, especially the married ones, are just as anxious to go home. The single men, with few exceptions, are ready to join the provisional regiment and are yet hopeful of hearing the birds sing in Cuba, Porto Rico or the Philippines.

The enormous fines being imposed for absence without leave has caused some members in Company I to get up a protest, and unless the fines are more lenient they threaten to take the matter to Washington.

A member of Company L. for a second time going on French leave, was yesterday fined ~~$20 and~~ sentenced to ten days at hard labor.

GET OUT OF MY COURT."

Justice Mosher Summarily Fires a Complainant Who Had a Weak Case.

"Get out of my court, and don't you ever come inside of it again unless you are brought here on a warrant," were the emphatic words with which Justice Mosher dismissed John Vantella, a complaining witness against Willie VanNest, a fourteen-year-old boy, last night. Vantella accused young VanNest with stealing a knife valued at 75 cents, but was not able to prove his case, and VanNest was discharged.

Vantella is a shoemaker living on West Fourth street. Thursday night VanNest went to his shop to have a shoe mended. Vantella says that when VanNest left the shoe he took with him the shoe knife.

Vantella's only witness to the alleged theft was his nine-year-old daughter, whom Justice Mosher refused to allow to be sworn, and the shoemaker's case fell flat. Law student Willie Sweeney represented VanNest, and made a strong fight for his client. The shoe maker' scase against the boy was so weak that the Justice was disguted, and dismissed the affair in the expressive words already quoted.

HER CHILDREN SAVED HER.

Innocent Blue Eyes of a Little Tot Kept Mrs. Hayes Out of Jail.

The acquaintanceship of Fred Downs and Mrs. Hays will not be renewed for two months at least. Their little racket together Saturday night was deemed sufficient by City Judge DeMeza at the hearing yesterday afternoon to send Downs down for sixty days straight. Mrs. Hayes might have gone, too, but Patrolman Jerry Cash took pity on his prisoner and asked the Judge to make it as light for her as he could on account of the children. Jerry always had a kind heart and the innocent blue eyes of the little tot in the court room was too much for him.

There were some five witnesses sworn and they told how the couple had appeared Saturday night. They both pleaded not guilty but the Judge decided otherwise.

At the Camp Meeting.

The feature of services at the camp meeting being conducted by Rev. Mr. Coster, pastor of St. Peter's A. M. E. Zion church, at Hyde's grove, tonight, will be the attendance of Rev. P. A. Hubert, D. D., who will deliver a talk on the subject: "The Light Thrown On." He is said to be a very interesting speaker. The jubilee quartette will be present and render some of their camp meeting songs. The "Swamp Angel" will be present at the closing services next Sunday.

Run a Nail in His Foot.

Frank Plummer, aged twenty-nine years, colored, living at 36 Raymond avenue, was received ot Muhlenberg Hospital this morning for treatment. Last Friday Plummer ran a shoe nail in his foot and it gave him considerable trouble. He decided, as the pain grew worse, to have it properly treated and that was done this morning. No serious results are anticipated from the injury.

DID MAN-EATING SHARK BITE CHARLES BOONE?

Peculiar Experience of Plainfield Boy in Swimming.

HIS LEG BADLY LACERATED.

WHAT EVER IT WAS ATTACKED HIM IN TEN FEET OF WATER.

He is a Candidate for the $500 Prize Offered for a Man Bitten by a Shark North of Cape Hateras—A V-Shaped Wound and Twelve Distinct Incisions Apparently Made by a Large Shark.

Charles E. Boone, son of Dr. W. C. Boone, of 450 West Seventh street, is a theological student in a Maryland Catholic College and at present he is spending a portion of his vacation at the Mission of the Immaculate Virgin, at Mount Loretta, Pleasant Plains, Staten Island. He is 22 years old, of athletic build, and a good swimmer.

Directly opposite the main building of the mission on Prince's Bay the surf rolls in on a rather steep beach. Bathers do not have to go far before they are in deep water. Boone and several companions plunged into the water yesterday afternoon and swam around about thirty feet from the shore. Suddenly Boone was struck from beneath, and as he described his sensations afterward to the surgeons in the Smith Infirmary at New Brighton, he felt only a slight penetrating pain which at the time he ascribed to an attack of cramps.

He was swimming in about ten feet of water, and when he felt the pain he put one hand on the spot. Something slimy brushed against his arm, and then he felt a slap on his stomach, made apparently by the tail of a fish. He began to feel weak and swam quickly toward shore. He called to George White, one of his fellow-swimmers, that he had been hurt.

White swam to Boone's assistance and found that Boone was bleeding from cuts in the right leg. Dr. Walker Washington, of Tottenville, and Dr. W. B. McNichol, of Pleasant Plains, were summoned. They saw that the wounds were of such a nature that Boone's life was in danger. The leg was bandaged and Boone was taken on a rapid transit train to Stapleton, where he was transferred in an ambulance to the Smith Infirmary. Drs. W. C. Waiser and F. P. Budd took charge of the patient. They found that the wound was in the form of the letter U. It was about eight inches long on the under part of the leg and ten inches long on the upper part. The cut on the under part was a clean one and the flesh was torn away. The cut on the upper part of the leg showed plainly the marks of teeth.

Dr. Budd counted twelve distinct incisions which were evidently made by teeth. The places where the teeth are supposed to have penetrated were about one inch and a half deep. It required thirty-two stitches to sew up the cut, and unless blood poisoning sets in the patient has a fair chance of recovery.

It is a peculiarity of sharks, when attacking their victims, to turn on their backs, thus giving a better play for their under teeth. The under teeth of the fish that tackled Boone did the worst execution, as the cut on the back of his leg shows.

Boone's mishap was the talk of Staten Island, especially at the summer resorts, last night. Many persons were inclined to believe that Boone had been attackek by a dogfish, which is a small shark. Jeff Powers, a South Beach fisherman, declared that no dogfish that ever lived in these waters could spread its mouth far enough to inflict a wound like that of Boone. The dogfish, Powers said, is a coward in the water, but is game and wicked when hauled out.

Years ago Herman Oelrichs offered, through The New York Sun, a reward of $500 to any person who could cite an authentic case of a man being bitten by a shark north of Cape Hatteras. Up to December, 1896, which is the last record The Sun has on the subject, he still held to the belief that man-eating sharks do not come north of Hatteras.

Supply Wagon Broke Down.

SOLDIERS TO DISBAND

Order for Mustering Out Volunteers Issued.

EXPENSES TO BE CUT DOWN

Yesterday's Order Defines the Method of Disbandment. A Physical Examination for Officers and Men. Bids for Transportation to Be Asked for. Soldiers May Retain Arms at a Low Figure.

Washington, Aug. 23.—A general order establishing the method of mustering out troops was issued to-day and army officers will be designated to conduct the transfer from active service.

The general order issued this afternoon, which publishes the instructions for the muster out of volunteers, contains one feature of special interest in the provision for a physical examination of officers and men. This is important in the settlement of pension claims arising from war service, and was not inserted without opposition. It is ordered that a thorough examination be made of all officers and enlisted men immediately prior to their muster out, and the reports in each case will be made on blanks furnished for that purpose. Arrangements are also made for the payments of the mustered out troops at the state rendezvous. A proposition is also made for the sale to the enlisted men of their arms and accoutrements, at prices ranging from one cent for a spoon to $10 for a Springfield rifle or a Colt revolver.

The idea of a physical examination for the volunteers mustered out is one which may be extended to the regulars on the discharge of enlisted men. It will be recalled that the plans of the medical corps and of Colonel Ainsworth, chief of the Record and Pension office of the war department, regards to this final physical examination, were outlined in these dispatches last May. It is a matter which has been kept steadily in view throughout the war.

The war department proposes to cut down its transportation expenses. During the war the rate charged by railroad companies has been three cents per mile. Now that the emergency is over the officials will ask bids for transportation and will accept no proposal at a rate higher than one and one-half cents. It is expected that the larger companies will offer a rate of one cent and lower.

An order which has attracted much attention to-day is one which establishes a division of transportation, that shall be charged with the control of all rail and water transportation of the army, with Colonel F. J. Hecker as chief, and Colonel Charles Bird as deputy chief. The order has met with criticism and protest from the quartermaster general, and was held up at one time on this account. Colonel Bird is an officer of the regular army and senior to Colonel Hecker for this reason. Colonel Hecker is a wealthy business man, an associate of Secretary Alger in lumber interests.

TAMPA AS A PERMANENT POST.

Troops in Cuba to Be Acclimatized There

Tampa, Aug. 23.—There is every indication that a permanent military post will be established at Tampa, although at present there are not one hundred soldiers in the city. The site selected for the post is Camp Rodgers, where all the heavy artillery is encamped. It is a beautiful location, high and with dry soil at all times, and the government has established a pumping station and laid pipes throughout the camp. Two regiments of soldiers will be kept here, it is thought, at all times, getting them acclimated for service in Cuba for garrison purposes.

The last of the artillery batteries left Tampa yesterday, the last of the infantry, the Fifth United States, having left on Saturday night for Santiago. The Signal Corps detachment will send up a balloon this afternoon and photographs will be taken of Tampa bay for the use of the war department. A few men are still here in the hospitals, and the quartermaster's department has at least 2,000 horses and mules, and 300 large army wagons quartered here, which will be kept until winter, when they will in all probability be sent to Cuba.

Cubans will leave by the hundreds this week for Cuban ports, as several sailing vessels are now taking on merchandise and will also carry passengers.

Sunk in the Channel.

London, Aug. 23.—The British steamer Ranza, from the Tyne, bound down the English channel, collided with the British steamer Gloamin, from Kurrache, July 16, for London, at midnight, Sunday, during a thick fog. She now lies on Gotham Sound with her bows so severely damaged that they are submerged, while the remainder of the vessel is kept on the surface by her water tight compartments.

The majority of the Ranza's crew have arrived at Remsgate, and the remainder is alongside the steamer in lifeboats. The damage to the Gloamin is not yet known.

Sick Soldiers Sent to Boston.

Washington, Aug. 23.—The hospital ship Olivette has been ordered to Boston, carrying the 200 sick soldiers now on board. The hospitals in Boston have offered to care for sick and wounded men from Santiago and the medical department of the army is glad to relieve the congestion at Montauk by sending some of the cases elsewhere for treatment.

There are no cases of contagious or infectious disease on the Olivette and Surgeon General Sternberg said this morning that the reports of medical officers indicated that the ship was in fine condition.

Arrival of Gen. Kent.

New York, Aug. 23.—Brigadier General Kent arrived in Jersey City from Washington yesterday and soon afterward came to this city. Nearly one hundred convalescent soldiers from the camps at Chickamauga also reached Jersey City. They are on leave of absence, and lost no time in continuing their journey to their homes. Some of the soldiers were weak and exhausted, and had to be supported by their stronger companions.

ABANDONING CAMP THOMAS.

Orders to Secure Bids for Transporting Regiments to Their State Capitals.

Chattanooga Park, Tenn., Aug. 23.—Judging from the present indications, Camp Thomas, the largest military camp of the Spanish-American war, will soon be a thing of the past. A number of regiments have been ordered home, a number of others have been ordered to Knoxville, Tenn., and Lexington, Ky., and now comes an order to Colonel Wheeler, acting chief quartermaster, to secure bids from railroads to convey all regiments remaining at the camp to their respective state capitals. The idea seems to be to get the regiments to places where they can be mustered out close to home, the necessity for keeping the army intact being no longer in evidence.

Numerous regiments are now making preparations to leave, and by the end of the week the population of the camp is expected to be reduced one-half. The regiments ordered to Knoxville and Lexington will be moved as rapidly as transportation can be secured, and as soon as these are got out those ordered home will be started on their way.

The First Georgia and Thirty-first Michigan left at midnight for Knoxville, where they will go into camp. The Twelfth Minnesota and the Fifth Pennsylvania will leave at an early hour tomorrow for Lexington, and others of the Second and Third division of the First Corps will follow in short order.

The ambulance company of the Third division goes to Knoxville to-morrow morning.

MILES COMING HOME.

He Notifies the War Department That He is Leaving Porto Rico.

Washington, Aug. 23.—The war department has received a telegram from Major General Miles announcing that he is about to leave Porto Rico for Washington, his presence there being no longer needed. Upon the receipt of this message General Miles was informed that Mrs. Miles was about to leave Charleston, S. C., to visit the general in Porto Rico. General Miles then telegraphed to Mrs. Miles at Charleston advising her not to sail, as he was about to leave for home.

It is understood at the war department that this message reached Charleston in time and that Mrs. Miles did not embark.

When the commanding general leaves Porto Rico, Major General Brooke will be left in command of the troops on the island. It is expected that General Brooke will not come to Washington to receive instructions before taking up his work as a member of the San Juan military commission.

AGUINALDO'S DEMANDS

No Concessions Will Be Cranted the Rebel Leader.

THE INSURGENTS ARE UGLY

Gen. Anderson Sent to Cavite to Take Care of the Philippine Leader. The Insurgents Trying to Enter the City. Aguinaldo Wants Much but Decid s to Accept Our Terms.

Manila, Aug. 22.—General Anderson has been sent to Cavite, having been detached from his command. His principal business will be to handle Aguinaldo, the insurgent leader. The insurgents are a little ugly. Several hundred of them have deserted and are trying to enter the city. Aguinaldo holds the water works and has cut off the supply. The city is in great need of water. Aguinaldo has promised to open the works conditionally.

He has made eight demands on the Americans, as follows:

First—That the Filipinos withdraw only to certain limits.

Second—That they retain certain city convents.

Third—That the Americans control only the city.

Fourth—That General Merritt consult with him regarding the civil appointments.

Fifth—That the Filipinos have the right to enter the river and harbor.

Sixth—That the Americans return the Filipinos' arms.

Seventh—That the Americans be confined to the city.

Eighth—That the Filipinos have the right to enter the city armed.

General Merritt sent a verbal reply yesterday to these demands, but Aguinaldo was away. The messenger returned to-day.

There have been a few slight disturbances in the city, but they were inconsequential. Confidence is returning. The shops are open and business is reviving.

The greatest interest is manifested in the ultimate disposition of the islands. Englishmen who are in business here are anxious for the Americans to hold the whole group, and many Spaniards believe that this would be the best solution of the problem. They say that business will be impossible under the conditions that formerly prevailed here, and that the Filipinos would not be able to establish or maintain a government. Aguinaldo represents only a small faction of the natives, and trouble would surely follow if he had control. The English declare that if the Americans give the islands back to Spain or hand them over to the Filipinos, they will have to quit.

Washington, Aug. 23.—The statement can be made with assurance that the United States government will not yield a hair's breadth in its firm policy in the Philippine islands as a result of the extensive claims put forward by the insurgent chief Aguinaldo. The Manila dispatch yesterday which announced fully the propositions made to General Merritt by Aguinaldo, gave the administration its first complete knowledge of the situation up to date, and the president, Secretary Alger and Gen Corbin discussed the contents of the dispatch at their informal conference at the White House.

General Corbin refused to discuss the matter in detail, but he made some significant statements which would indicate the general policy of President McKinley and the administration leaders.

"I think the instructions recently sent to General Merritt cover this emergency fully. Merritt has dealt with the conditions wisely. No new instructions are necessary or will be sent."

General Corbin made these statements in answer to two or three specific questions, and further than this he would say nothing.

The policy of the government is unmistakably to ignore Aguinaldo entirely so long as he makes no hostile demonstrations. It is equally certain that the American military commander, acting under instructions from Washington, will not hesitate to repel the insurgents by force of arms should it become necessary to do so in order to carry out the government's declared policy of the letter.

Gets No Despatches from Manila.

Madrid, Aug. 23.—Lieutenant General Correa, minister of war, has received a cable dispatch from General Jaudenes dated August 20, in which he refers to four dispatches giving details of the fighting at Manila and the surrender. These have not been received. It is supposed that the Americans have intercepted them.

General Jaudenes says he has not received the government's formal announcement of the signing of the protocol; and he asserts that the insurgents continue hostilities against the Spaniards.

General Correa immediately cabled a request for details of the surrender.

Sampson in Washington.

Washington, D. C., Aug. 22.—Admiral Sampson arrived in Washington this afternoon and visited the war department shortly before 4 o'clock.

He had a short conference with Acting Secretary Allen and Captain Crowninshield. He left the war department at 4.10 o'clock for the White House.

The Clearing Sale of Shirt Waists.

With the close of July comes the greatest price-cutting—the most attractive values ever offered. The remaining stock is divided into two lots, 49c. and 75c., former prices ranged from 75c to $1.50. There's not 200 waists in the entire assortment, so we advise an early call for the best selection.

Sailor Hats and Untrimmed Hats 49c.

This means that each and every hat, irrespective of former price, will be 49c. Of especial interest should the price be, as none have been less than 75c, and the styles offered are all of this season's production.

Men's Negligee Shirts 59c.

Sounds cheap, but the hundred or more shirts that go on sale have been selling at 75c., 85c. and $1. The patterns are all new and desirable, the kind that you would like. Clearing time is here, and the new price, 59c., will be the means of their quick disposal.

Men's Summer Underwear 20c.

Nearly 600 pieces gauze underwear to be 20c. This is ordinarily the best 25c underwear sold, but 20c will be the clearing price.

In Chancery of New Jersey.

To Samuel H. Kellogg and Sarah C. Kellogg, his wife, and Caroline M. Coolidge and Henry L. Coolidge, her husband

By virtue of an order of the Court of Chancery of New Jersey, made on the day of date hereof in a cause wherein Phebe M. Sprague is complainant, and you and others are defendants, you are required to appear, plead, demur or answer to the bill of said complainant on or before the twenty-seventh day of September next, or that in default thereof such decree will be made against you as the Chancellor shall think equitable and just.

The said bill is filed to foreclose a mortgage given by Samuel Kellogg and Eliza S. Kellogg, his wife, to Gottlieb Fritz, dated October 25, 1876 and recorded in book, No. 40, of mortages for Union County, on page 573, etc., on lands in the city of Plainfield, in Union County, New Jersey, and held under assignment by said complainant, and you, Samuel H. Kellogg and Caroline M. Coolidge are made defendants because you own said lands or some part thereof, and you, Sarah C. Kellogg, are made defendant because you are the wife of said Samuel H. Kellogg and may thereby claim an inchoate right of dower in the portion of said mortgaged lands owned by your said husband.

And you, Henry L. Coolidge, are made defendant because you may claim an interest as tenant by the curtesy in the portion of said mortgaged lands owned by your wife, Caroline M. Coolidge.

WORK FOR HONOLULU TROOPS.

G n. Merriam is to Build Barracks an Hospitals and Survey the Harbor.

San Francisco, Aug. 23.—Important work lies before Major General Merriam in Hawaii.

General Merriam, with his staff and about 1,300 troops, left here yesterday on the transport Arizona, for Manila, via Honolulu. The Scandia, with another detachment of soldiers, will depart in a few days.

It is understood that General Merriam carries with him plans and authority to construct barracks and hospitals for the troops at Honolulu, which post is now attached to the department of the Pacific, of which he is the commanding officer.

The hospital at Honolulu is to cost, with its site, $35,000. Barracks for at least 1,300 troops are also to be erected at Honolulu. The First New York regiment, consisting of 1,300 men and 300 of the Second regiment of volunteer engineers, have been sent from here as the United States first garrison on the island. This force will be increased by the enlistment of a battalion of four hundred men from the Hawaiian military.

General Merriam has authority to spend $190,000 for the erection of these barracks. Officers' quarters at Honolulu are also to be built, and it is understood that General Merriam has the power to spend $58,000 for that purpose. Residences for forty-four officers are to be purchased.

One of the most exacting duties with which General Merriam is intrusted is the survey of the harbor of Honolulu, and a report as to the best means of fortifying. He has with him three competent engineers who will have immediate charge of that work.

Oregon and Iowa at the Navy Yard.

New York, Aug. 23.—The battleships regon and Iowa are now moored at the piers at the Brooklyn navy yard. They left the Tompkinsville, S. I. naval rendezvous, where they had been anchored with the remainder of Admiral Sampson's victorious Santiago fleet since their arrival Saturday, yesterday morning, and were made fast at the government naval station about noon. The Oregon was the first to go to the navy yard, leaving there at 11.40 o'clock and the Iowa followed shortly after and was berthed at 12.10 o'clock. Both vessels are to be dry docked and will undergo extensive repairs and a general overhauling that will keep them at the navy yard for several weeks.

The two battleships were given such an enthusiastic greeting during their trip up the East river that it was in miniature a repetition of the memorable naval parade of Saturday.

More Ships Coming Here.

Washington, Aug. 23.—Orders have been issued by the navy department which will prevent the assemblage of any large fleet at Hampton Roads. The large warships will be sent to New York and Boston and torpedo boats to Newport, R. I.

The only ships to remain at Fortress Monroe are auxiliary cruisers and tugs. These orders were issued owing to complaints of steamboat companies that a large fleet in the harbor at Hampton Roads would interfere seriously with navigation.

Author Coming Here.

New York, Aug. 23.—Israel Zangwill is now on his way to this country, having sailed from Liverpool last Saturday on the Cunarder Lucania.

He will deliver lectures in most of the large cities, principally upon subjects treated of in his books.

Mr. Zangwill is thirty-four years old, tall and thin, and is said to resemble the late D'Israeli, Lord Beaconsfield. His best known books are "Children of the Ghetto" and the "Bachelor's Club."

A Rather Expensive Plaything.

One day the home of Geoffroy St. Hilaire, the famous French naturalist, became a perfect pandemonium. Every room was turned upside down, except the study of the master of the house. Mme. St. Hilaire had lost a very valuable diamond necklace, but she instructed the servants not to mention the loss to her husband, lest the knowledge of it should disturb him in his work. Moreover, the missing bauble could not be in the study, inasmuch as she rarely entered that sanctum. The search proved in vain, but the great savant was still left in ignorance. A few days later, at Mme. St. Hilaire's weekly "At home," one of her lady friends sympathetically inquired after the ornament in the hearing of her host. In the most airy, but withal most unaffected way, the great naturalist remarked that his favorite baboon had been playing for nearly a week with a "similar thing to that described," which "similar thing" turned out to be the priceless ornament. Mme. St. Hilaire indignantly protested against M. St. Hilaire's neglect in not having taken the necklace from the animal. "I thought that it belonged to him," was the calm reply—"he seemed to take such pride in it."

Mark Twain's Witty Retort.

At a New England Society dinner some years ago, Mark Twain had just finished a piquant address when Mr. Evarts arose, shoved both of his hands down into his trousers pockets, as was his habit, and laughingly remarked: "Doesn't it strike this company as a little unusual that a professional humorist should be funny?" Mark Twain waited until the laughter excited by this sally had subsided, and then drawled out: "Doesn't it strike this company as a little unusual that a lawyer should have his hands in his own pockets?"

Old Lady: "You said the train that I should take leaves at 10:30, didn't you?"

Booking Clerk: "Yes, madam; and I think I've told you that about ten times already."

Old Lady: "Yes, I know you have; but my little nephew says he likes to hear you talk."

AFTER THE CONFLICT

Peace Commission to Be Named This Week.

PLANS AT WASHINGTON

Possibility That Only Three Will Be Appointed. Desire to Have a Roman Catholic. Aguinaldo's Demands. Assistant Secretary of the State Will Resign When Day Leaves.

Washington, Aug. 23.—The expectation in official circles is that the peace commission will be appointed this week. The protocol limits the number of commissioners to five, but does not positively require that quota. The president may conclude to cut it down to three members, in which case he would have only one more—presumptively a Democrat—to add to the members Day and Davis. If the right third man were chosen this trio would make a stronger combination and command more thoroughly the confidence of the public than a big commission made up for the most part of nobodies. In case five is retained as the number of commissioners, Senator Spooner still stands conspicuously in the programme as a probability.

As to the rest, the president would like to have at least one Roman Catholic of prominence on the commission, a fact which has caused Archbishop Ireland's name to be extensively canvassed, but it is generally believed that the pope would object to a prelate's acceptance of such a service, in view of the political character, and the possibility that European international relations may become seriously complicated with the Philippine problem. The desire for a Roman Catholic on our side of the commission is due to the large interest of the church in the Philippine settlement. A turn may be given to the discussions of the joint commission, when it would help materially in reaching an understanding, if there could be no charge lodged against our commissioners as a body wholly out of sympathy with the religious aspects of the situation.

The suggestion of Associate Justice White of the supreme court, as a member of the commission, is due to his being both a Catholic and an expert in Roman law. It is generally believed here that if he is willing he can have the appointment.

The demands of Aguinaldo present the main question before the authorities to-day. Nothing is vouchsafed from the war department or the White House on the subject, but it is understood that General Merritt and Admiral Dewey have been advised of a policy which recognizes in no degree the claims of the insurgent leaders. Aguinaldo's attitude has not surprised the authorities here. There have been many indications of his self-assertive disposition.

The sentiment in the war and navy departments is expressed in the impatience which is mostly called forth by the action of the insurgents. To some of the army officers of cynical bent, the developments among the insurgents in Cuba and those in the Philippines have appeared as the irony of fate—that those for whose manifest benefit the war with Spain has been waged, should be found in a position which makes it necessary for this government to turn against them, or, as one of these officers said this morning, "join with Spain our enemy, in repressing this rebellion."

The board for the examination of civil engineers for the navy, which will meet in this city on September 6, will be composed of Civil Engineers Maxson, Parks and Gregory. Attention is attracted to this board by the fact that the two minor members have been appointed to the corps within a year. The recorder, who is merely a secretary, and has no power, is Ensign Cunningham of the volunteer navy, who in civil life is a steel expert and a well known engineer.

Professor John Bassett Moore, assistant secretary of state, will resign his place when Secretary Day assumes his duties as head of the Paris peace commission. Professor Moore will take the position of legal counsel and secretary of the commission, an office hardly second in importance to the commission itself.

It will be remembered that Professor Moore left his chair as professor of international law, at Columbia university, New York city, to become Secretary Day's assistant, when the latter succeeded Mr. Sherman, retired. It is stated that the professor's chair will be held open for him until his return from service with the commission. There will be a large staff of attaches and clerks with the commission. Probably 500 applications have already been made and among them possibly 300 "sons of their fathers."

It is said by parties in a position to know that when Ambassador Hay succeeds Mr. Day, W. W. Rockhill, who was with Mr. Hay before, and is now United States minister to Greece, will return to succeed Professor Moore. Mrs. Rockhill died last month and her husband has been given a sixty days' leave of absence. He is a fine linguist, with a knowledge of Oriental languages especially Chinese, and it is held that he will be particularly valuable in connection with the matters relating to our new policy in the East.

The Algeciras Fortifications.

Gibraltar, Aug. 23.—The Spanish engineers who have been working on the fortifications at Algeciras, on the west side of the Bay of Gibraltar, have been ordered to Madrid, and the batteries recently sent there have been ordered to Seville.

NEW JERSEY VOLUNTEERS.

Second and Fourth Regiments Likely to See Active Service.

Sea Girt, N. J., Aug. 23.—Private information received from Washington is to the effect that the Second and the Fourth regiments of New Jersey volunteers are to be assigned to the armies of occupation for garrison duty in Cuba or the Philippines, and the First and Third regiments are to be mustered out of service. The officers and men of the Second and Fourth who desire to leave the service are to be honorably discharged, and their places taken by members of the First and Third regiments.

The members of the old Seventh regiment were engaged in rifle practice on the state range yesterday and will be here again to-day. The Essex troop will shoot on Wednesday. The detail for guard duty to-day was as follows: Officer of the day, Captain Louis T. Bryant of Compony F; officer of the guard, First Lieutenant Jacob M. Coward of Company A; Junior officer of the guard, Second Lieutenant Jacob S. Bruist of Company K. Governor Voorhees was not in camp to-day. He is at his home in Elizabeth, suffering from an attack of indigestion.

The volunteers of the Fourth regiment were furnished with a six months' supply of underclothing and shoes to-day, and new uniforms are on their way from the quartermaster's department in Philadelphia. Quartermaster Valentine has also received 200,000 rounds of ammunition and 65,000 blank cartridges.

Eastern Cuban News.

Santiago de Cuba, Aug. 22.—A negro soldier belonging to the Eighth Illinois regiment of immunes was shot dead on Friday night at San Luis, a short distance east of Santiago, where a battalion of the regiment was sent to do guard duty soon after its arrival about a week ago.

The soldier who was killed was acting as a sentinel, and ordered several armed Cubans who were passing his post to halt. The Cubans misunderstood the order and the sentinel fired upon them. The Cubans returned the fire and the sentinel fell dead.

General Lawton, upon hearing of the occurrence, sent a staff officer to San Luis yesterday to investigate the affair, but the officer was unable to obtain any definite information. Accordingly General Shafter himself went to San Luis to-day to look into the state of affairs there.

The Cuban civil authorities raised the Cuban flag over the municipal buildings this morning, but General Wood ordered it taken down. Cuban flags were also hoisted over the house of the San Carlos Club and several stores and these were left flying.

One merchant who had raised a Cuban flag told Colonel Hood he was afraid that the American soldiers would stone his place. Colonel Hood sent a sentinel to protect the merchant and his belongings.

Room for the Sick.

Camp Wikoff, Montauk Point, Aug. 23.—The conditions in the hospitals at Camp Wikoff are far better than anyone expected yesterday, when there were nine hundred patients in the beds and some five hundred more to care for. The transports which arrived on Saturday night and Monday brought 354 sick, but although there was room for them in the hospital annex which was erected Monday, no attempt was made to land them. This will be done later, when Colonel Forwood has finished the work now under way.

The situation in which the hospital corps was placed by the arrival of the Seneca and Mobile set everybody to hustling with the result that two-thirds of the whole number of wagons in the camp were peremptorily set to work hauling tents and lumber to the hospital site. A hospital of fifty tents, in addition to the one of the same size which General Young ordered last week, is already under cover and half of the 300 beds which it will contain are up. The entire number was in place and filled last night, and with the assistance of the Red Cross blankets every one of the sick were made comfortable.

Spain Names Commissioners.

Washington, Aug. 23.—The state department has received a call from M. Thiebaut, secretary of the French embassy, in charge during the absence of Ambassador Cambon, who bore a notification from the Spanish government of the military commissioners for Cuba and Porto Rico.

Under the peace protocol each government was to name its military commission within ten days, their meetings to begin within thirty days. The ten days was up to-day. They are as follows:

For Cuba—Major General Gonzales Parrado, Rear Admiral Pastor y Landero, Marquis Montoro.

For Porto Rico—Major General Ortega y Diaz, Commodore Vallarino y Carrasco, Judge Advocate Sanchez del Aguila y Leon.

Why Hay Was Recalled.

London, Aug. 23.—The Manchester Guardian says: We understand that United States Ambassador Hay's recall to Washington, to accept the post of secretary of state, is due to his special fitness to carry out a policy in regard to which negotiations have been proceeding for some time between Washington and London, and upon which a substantial agreement has been reached, whereby the two countries will act together in the far East, or wherever American and British interests are identical.

There is no intention of binding the nations in alliance. Each is to be free to pursue its own destinies in its own way, but the governments will act together diplomatically where their common interests are concerned.

Schley Stricken With Serious Fever.

Bridgeport, Conn., Aug. 23.—Rear Admiral Schley is confined to his home in Westport by illness and no one except his attendants are allowed to see him or have any conversation with him. The illness is pronounced a fever, the character of which is not yet known.

FOR THE VACATION SEASON.

Subscribers leaving the city for the summer season can have The Daily Press sent to their new address by notifying the buisness office. The address will be changed as often as desired. "Home news" will prove most interesting while you are away.

Voorhees May Resign as Senator.

The latest report in connection with the ambitious designs of Governor Voorhees is that as soon as he is nominated for a long term he will resign as Senator for Union county, the resignation not to take effect, however, until next January.

By taking that course a new Senator for Union county could be chosen at the regular election in November. Then, in the event of his election as Governor, the county would not be without representation in the State Senate when a vote would be ordered for a United States Senator. The Governor, it is said, intends to write his resignation as Senator and direct it to himself. It would be accepted by him and filed with the Secretary of State, when a writ of election to fill the vacancy would be issued.

Many think that such a course would be of doubtful legality. But it is asserted that the courts have decided cases of a like character as legal, and an opinion written by the late Justice Knapp, and reported in eleventh Vroom, is cited as an illustration. The ground is taken that the actual vacation of the Senatorship by the Acting Governor would not occur until two months afterward was not different in fact from the present system of electing Senators and Assemblymen in November. Their predecessors continue in office until the following January, and would be those who would sit if a special session of the Legislature were called in the meantime.

Must Keep the Dust Laid.

Section 9 of the ordinance now is in course of progress of adoption by the Common Council, granting the Plainfield Street Railway Company the right to extend its lines over Richmond and East Second streets to the city line, is particularly gratifying to The Daily Press. In view of the peristent advocacy by The Daily Press for the street committee of the Council to incorporate into this ordinance a stipulation that the streets along which the street railway tracks are laid shall be copiously sprinkled during the summer months, it ought not be difficult for readers to understand that this particular section refers to this matter.

Section 9 prescribes that all tracks of the Street Railway Company now laid or hereafter to be laid, are to be copiously watered throughout their entire length and for the space of two feet on each side thereof, twice in each day, from the 15th day of May to the 1st day of October in each year; once before 11 a. m., and once after 2 p. m., and in case of the failure of the Street Railway Company to do so, to the satisfaction of the street commissioner or the street committee, said company shall pay to the treasurer of the city of Plainfield the sum of $20 per day for each and every day such failure shall continue or exist; such payment to be considered as liquidated damages for such default.

For this section Councilman Barrows and the other members of the street committee will receive the thanks of a large number of residents along the streets on which the trolley cars have heretofore stirred up clouds of dust as they whizzed by.

Sanguine Merchants.

One swallow does not make a summer, nor does the experience of one city necessarily measure that of every other. But in the vast mechanism of trade the conviction is reasonable that there must be a generally diffused energy to make the complicated machine clatter with a whiz of wheels. Local and fragmentary prosperity would not do this. One may conclude then that the August trade opening in New York city is at one with the same forces operating in Boston, Philadelphia, Chicago, New Orleans, Denver and San Francisco as well as in innumerable lesser trade marts.

The report made by the secretary of the Merchants' Association of New York is a very remarkable one and worthy of comment. Merchants from all parts of the country are buying profusely in every department of business. The show of confidence surpasses that of any previous year since 1892, and the words of all express the intense conviction that national affairs are on the full impulse of a swiftly rising tide. There is scarcely a branch of business activity which does not reflect the powerful impulse. It need scarcely be said to any student of economics that this very feeling tends to augment the condition which it recognizes.

Aside from the waste of war, a loss quickly recouped by other accompaniments of national conflict, in many cases of triumphant war, the influences of the episode of which we are approaching the end have been stimulating rather than retroactive. The universal sense of resourcefulness and power which the war has brought to the surface in an unequaled degree has been stimulated through and through. While war is not to be sought in any spirit of mediævalism which seeks for glory in what is terrible and destructive, the consciousness of strength, which is active to strike crushing blows as well as potential, has the highest bracing vigor in other pursuits than those of arms. The convergence of all our energies and sympathies to one center of focal splendor in the erasure of lines of north and south, east and west, is another most effective incentive to the sanguine attitude of the public mind. Everything is operating to convince the people of the land that they have reached the mountains of Beulah. There is scarcely a drawback in the general sentiment of confidence. It is natural, then, that our merchants should be more than hopeful. It is not merely, either, one is fain to hope, a bare question of sordid money making which is at the root of the satisfaction. It is the thought in many a mind that additional labor will find employment; that the miseries of the poor may be alleviated in the general good; that the fortunes of the nation, as a power in the world, may find their due expansion. The man of business in seeking his own profit may be credited with some degree of pride in contributing to the greatness of the people, of whom he is a humble member.

The bill introduced into the British parliament providing for loans to colonies under certain specified conditions is in accordance with the general policy of the country in binding its dependencies by the most genuine helpfulness. But it is difficult to see what practical end can be served. The same conditions which the proposed bill specifies are so confirmatory of the solvency of the borrowers that they would justify the easy sale of colonial bonds. If Great Britain wishes to help its colonies in this way, it would be a more easy and direct way to indorse the bonds, thus giving them still greater security. The same purpose would be effected in a way probably more acceptable to colonial pride. It looks as if this measure was an entering wedge for the revival of the great Chamberlain scheme, of which there was so much discussion a year or two since.

We agree with the Plainfield Press in denouncing the editors of New York papers for taking the interests of New Jersey in special charge. It is only within the last few years that they have condescended to mention our news except in the briefest manner; and now for them to abound in offensive criticisms and suggestions is both poor form and poor policy.—Westfield Republican.

PASSING COMMENT

Things that Are Not Exactly News but Just as Interesting.

Councilman William N. Runyon, secretary of the Police Board, was a visitor at the city court yesterday and watched the proceedings with interest. Now that Mr. Runyon has started to practice in this city, his first appearance in the court as counsel for an offender, is watched with curiousity. Councilman Walter L. Hetfield is already a frequent visitor on professional business at the city judiciary.

"Lou," the colored bootblack, had a scare Friday night which he is scarcely over yet. He went to call on a young lady whose papa wouldn't allow her to entertain callers after 10 o'clock p. m. Lou got caught in the shower, and at 11:30 o'clock was still there. Papa noticed that his daghter did not come to bed at this hour, so called down stairs to know if "dat young fellar" had gone home yet, and his daughter said yes, but papa didn't believe it, so came down in his bare feet to find out. Lou heard the sound and took French leave through a window.
